Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Looking to the Fair.

With New Year's at hand and every inch of farm land in the state frozen a foot or so deep, prepartions are being made for the agricultural exhibits at the Minnesota state fair for next year. And, oddly enough, the first move comes from St. Louis county in the far north. The Duluth Commercial Club is taking steps already to see that St. Louis county is properly represented and by beginning now will have plenty of time to organize and see that the farmers are interested before planting time in the spring.

The best agricultural exhibits at the Minnesota state fair are those which are planned long before spring. The successful counties frequently organize early in the winter, assigning to individual farmers the production of one or more grains or vegetables, and even arranging for special seed so that there may be no slips in the program. By beginning this way nothing is left to chance. All varieties are planned out and a little supervision and checking up during the planting and growing season assures a successful exhibit. The farmers who make individual exhibits with success are, generally, the ones who plan in the winter and order their seed for the special purposes in mind.

St. Louis county will doubtless have more than an agricultural display. The Duluth News-Tribune advocates a permanent exhibit in Duluth as well as a full showing of the resources of the county at the state fair, and the proposed semi-centennial exposition of 1908.

Lost Three Days.

Black Duck—After wandering about in the woods for three days, Alex Brunski turned up at one of the camps of the Beltrami Cedar and Land Company, about ten miles from here.

Brunski, who is a homesteader, started to come to Black Duck to purchase supplies. Instead of traveling over the old logging road, with which he was familiar, he attempted to take a short cut through the forest and became lost. When he did not return home that night his wife became alarmed, and, informing the neighbors that her husband was missing, a searching party set out to look for him. They found no trace of him, but last evening, just as the men in the cedar camp had finished their supper, they heard a noise outside the cook's shanty, and on investigating found Brunski lying helpless in the snow.

Vote Canvassed.

St. Paul—The canvassing board wound up its work and the official vote of the state is now on file. The canvass gives Gov. Johnson a total of 168,480 and a majority over Cole of 72,518.

The road amendment is lost by 313 votes and the tax amendment is carried by a comfortable margin.

The amendment to the law governing peddling was carried by a large majority.

Attorney General Young received the largest vote cast on either ticket, his plurality being 84,754. The smallest plurality was 30,938, polled by Lieut. Gov. Eberhart. C. M. Start, the only candidate for chief justice of the supreme court, received 200,167 votes.

The total number of votes cast was 304,021, of which 284,366 were cast by men and 19,655 by women.

Sold by Uncle Sam.

St. Paul—"Bond," a brown and white pointer, held as unclaimed at the customs house store, was yesterday sold at public auction for $40. James Dent of the railway mail service being the successful bidder.

"Bond" was sold on approval to a sportsman in Calgary, Alberta, Can., who recently shipped him back after using him, as the seller says, during the hunting season. The man to whom the dog was consigned lives in Osceola, Iowa, and he did not care to pay the 20 per cent ad valorem duty. The only alternative of the customs authorities was to sell the dog at auction.

The auction took place in the customs house store room, pursuant to advertisement. The bidding was brisk.

Railway Strike.

Virginia—Several hundred men who were employed on the construction of the extension of the Duluth, Rainy Lake & Winnipeg railroad have struck because the company has lowered the scale of wages.

The wages were lowered from $40 per month to $35 and $30, and from $2.25 to $2. The company has succeeded in shipping a hundred men to fill the places of the strikers, and it is expected that the strike will be broken. No serious trouble is anticipated.

Most of the men are Austrians, Italians and Finns.

News Notes.

Lake City—O. G. Potter, of Pepin, was dragged under the wheels of a loaded wagon and his leg was broken. He is in a critical condition.

St. Paul—Burglars broke into the saloon of B. R. Peterson at South St. Paul and stole $16, some whisky and cigars. The place was thoroughly ransacked.

Dent—A petition which has been generally signed has been forwarded to Governor Johnson asking that he clap a "lid" upon the saloons in this town.

St. Paul—The police court victims get cigars instead of workhouse sentences.

St. Paul—Santa Claus gave four automobiles to as many of his St. Paul favorites.

Red Wing—The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Olson, residing near Wacouta, was found dead on their return home at midnight Saturday evening. The child had died of an hemorrhage of the brain.

St. Paul—The state game and fish commission has received returns from the various county auditors relative to the issuance of resident licenses for hunters during the season just closed. From Sept. 1 to Dec. 1 there were 15,226 licenses issued. During the same period last year the number was 15,800.

Brainerd—Al. Hagadorn, a stationary engineer was fatally shot recently. Henry Towers, a foreman painter in the Northern Pacific shops, is accused of the deed. The men had been quarreling. Towers, it is alleged, went home and got a shotgun and shot Hagadorn through the lungs. Towers is in jail and Hagadorn is at the hospital. He will almost certainly die.

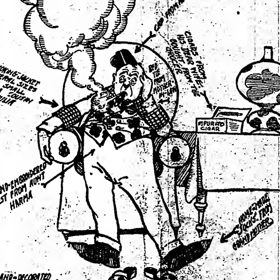
St. Paul—When the reapportionment of the legislative districts comes up before the next legislature, as it surely will, it is quite probable that changes will be made in the general plan of representation. Several of the legislators are making suggestions along this line. They want something done so that the representation will be distributed better.

Minneapolis—E. K. Slater, state dairy and food commissioner, has returned from Washington, D. C., where he appeared before the national pure food commission in a hearing on the matter of establishing the requirements with reference to the amount of butter fat and moisture in butter.

Rosemount—The Catholic church in Rosemount caught fire this afternoon. The fire started in the basement, and was not discovered till the flames burst through the floor in the center aisle. Owing to the large number of people in town at the time, together with some hand fire extinguishers, the fire was put out without doing much damage.

Star Lake—John Mjellele lost a luxuriant beard, of which he was proud, in a peculiar accident while chopping wood. He was splitting out cord wood and his ax became fastened. He tried to wrench it out, but being unable to do so stooped down to get a better leverage. He finally worked the ax out of the split in the log, but as it flew out the pieces of wood closed upon his beard, holding him a prisoner.

Minneapolis—Despondent because of the death of his wife a year ago, grief over which wrecked his health, Peter Medjo, a contractor of this city, choked himself to death with a rope in the timber a mile and a half from Minnehaha Falls. Medjo went to his death following a night spent pleasantly with a brother. Winding one end of the rope around the trunk of a tree, he threw the other end over a low limb and made a noose for his neck. Bending forward he slowly strangled himself to death. Medjo was about 37 years old and leaves a daughter aged 12. He was reputed to be worth $25,000.



St. Paul—Four pioneer residents of this vicinity died within twenty-four hours. Edward H. Judson of St. Paul, member of the state board of control, died last night in a hospital following an operation. His death was followed within a few hours by that of Dr. Emanuel L. Hess, aged 61, who was for eleven years rabbi of Mount Zion Temple in this city. Thomas Cochran, aged 63, a prominent business man of St. Paul, died suddenly this morning after a brief illness and later in the day Dr. L. W. Babcock, aged 66, speaker of the Minnesota house in 1903, died in St. Luke's Hospital. Dr. Babcock was a resident of Wadena.

St. Paul—Joseph Indkage, twenty-eight years of age, a farmer living about thirteen miles from the city on the Hamline road, was instantly killed by a Northern Pacific freight train at Rosetown crossing, and Nicholas Indkage, a brother, was probably fatally injured. He was taken to St. Joseph's hospital. He has a broken left hip and his ribs are fractured. Their wagons were smashed into kindling wood and two of their horses were killed.

Minneapolis—The dedication of a national holiday to the generation of men who laid the foundation of the first states outside the original thirteen colonies was proposed by Judge William Gardner of Minneapolis in his address at the annual meeting of the Minnesota Society of Sons of the American Revolution. We are too prone to give all the credit to the generation of '76 and forget the generation that followed.

St. Paul—Governor Johnson will take the oath of office for his second term as governor on Wednesday, Jan. 9, and will immediately thereafter deliver his message to the legislature, which will be in joint session for the inauguration. The ceremonies will be conducted with "Democratic simplicity," according to Private Secretary Frank A. Day. The other executive officers of the state will turn over their respective offices to their successors on Monday, Jan. 7.

ANOTHER MERRY CHRISTMAS FOR FATHER!

PRESIDENT TAKES OUTING

GOES WITH FAMILY TO PINE KNOT, VA.

Several Guests Are Members of the Party—Will Return to Washington Monday.

Charlottesville, Va. — President Roosevelt, his family and guests reached Pine Knot, Mrs. Roosevelt's cottage in the southern part of Albemarle county, at five o'clock Thursday afternoon. Their outing will continue until Monday.

The party was joined here by E. C. Hamer, Jr., a young naval lieutenant, and Richard Wilmar, young son of Dr. Wilmer, of Washington. These who came from Washington are:

President and Mrs. Roosevelt, their five children, Miss Ethel, Theodore, Jr., Kermit, Archie and Quentin; Rear Admiral P. M. Rixey, surgeon general of the navy; M. S. Latta, assistant secretary to the president and Miss Langdon, a friend of Miss Ethel's. L. S. Brown, general agent of the Southern railway, also accompanied the president, but he went only as far as North Garden. Mr. Latta will make his headquarters at Charlottesville, and will make trips to Pine Knot when business develops requiring the president's attention. There is telephone communication also between Charlottesville and Plain Dealing, the Wilmer county home, adjoining Pine Knot, of which use will be made for the president in case of necessity.

TROOPS LEAVE SCOOBA.

Mississippi Town Quiet and No More Trouble Expected.

Meridian, Miss.—All the troops stationed at Scooba, the scene of the recent race troubles, returned Thursday afternoon in charge of Gov. Vardaman, who went there Wednesday night to take personal command of the situation. Returning military officials and others comment unfavorably on the reports that have been sent out broadcast regarding the situation at Scooba. The condition there is reported quiet and apprehension of further trouble is passed. The railroad officials say there were no fresh outbreaks Thursday.

The difficulty which aroused both races in this city and vicinity occurred three miles northeast of here Tuesday. Accurate information upon this trouble is not yet available here, but it is known that at least five negroes lost their lives as a result of it. There are also reported several others killed. However, these reports lack confirmation.

Kentucky Feud Fatal.

Lexington, Ky.—Hiram Mullins and his son William were shot and fatally wounded in a feud battle fought at their home with a gang of desperadoes, headed by Charles and Bud Little and John Brewer. The house was riddled with bullets, and every window was broken. The battle ceased only when both the Mullins were shot down.

Costly Fire at Marietta, Ga.

Atlanta, Ga. — A special from Marietta, Ga., says the plant of the Georgia Manufacturing and Public Service company, including the Marietta Paper mill, was burning Monday evening. Already a loss of $150,000 had been caused, and the fire was not yet under control.

VICTORY FOR STANDARD OIL.

Recent Verdict Against Trust at Findlay, O., Thrown Out.

Findlay, O. — The Standard Oil company won a victory in common pleas court here Monday when Judge W. S. Duncan decided that the probate court had no jurisdiction in the suit brought against it in the probate court and threw out the recent verdict of guilty against the company.

Prosecutor David sometime ago filed an information in the probate court against the Standard, charging it with violating the anti-trust laws of the state. He maintained that he could get action quicker against the company by this proceeding than through indictments in the common pleas court.

The Standard attorneys contended that the probate court had no jurisdiction in the matter; that if there had been a violation of the law the prosecutor should have proceeded against the company through indictments.

This point was upheld by Judge Duncan and the case is thus thrown out of the probate court.

This decision in no way effects the indictments recently returned in common pleas court by the grand jury against John D. Rockefeller and the other officials of the Standard Oil company, charging them with violating the anti-trust laws.

It is understood the prosecution will appeal the case to a higher court.

NEGRO SOLDIER IN PERIL.

Threatened with Lynching for Throwing White Woman Into Street.

El Reno, Okla.—Race feeling is at white heat and threats of lynching are heard on every hand as a result of an assault committed on Mrs. T. Clifford, wife of a prominent physician, Thursday afternoon by a negro soldier of the Twenty-fifth infantry.

Mrs. Clifford and her sister, Mrs. S. H. Clark, were attempting to pass the soldier when he viciously grabbed Mrs. Clifford around the waist and threw her into the street, exclaiming that the sidewalk belonged to him. Mrs. Clark screamed for assistance and the assailant fled, escaping before help arrived. The women will attempt to identify him when he returns to the fort.

STEAMER STRATHCONA BURNS.

Vessel Beached and 380 Passengers Saved—Heroism of Crew.

Halifax, N. S.—Word was received here Sunday from Port Dufferin, a small coast town some 60 miles east of this city, of the destruction by fire of the passenger steamer Strathcona, owned by the Halifax & Canso Steamship company, and bound from this port for Canso and Guysborough.

That no lives were lost is due principally to the heroism of the engineers and firemen, who stuck to their posts until the steamer was beached and every one of the 380 passengers landed. In less than one hour after the beaching of the steamer she was burned to the water's edge.

Costly Blaze in Denver.

Denver, Col.—The Ernest & Cranmer building, one of the finest office buildings in the city, was damaged by fire Tuesday, the seventh and eighth floors being entirely destroyed. The total loss is $200,000.

YAQUIS MURDER MANY

MEXICANS ARE BUTCHERED AT LENCHO AND ON RANCHES.

TENT HOUSES ARE BURNED

Americans Saved by the Timely Arrival of Work Train—Other Massacres Near Valencia Are Reported.

El Paso, Tex.—The details of the Yaqui Indian outbreak at Lencho station on the Cananea, Yaqui River & Pacific railroad, a branch of the Southern Pacific in Sonora, Mexico, Saturday night, in which eight Mexicans were killed and all tent houses burned, have been received here.

No Americans were killed, although it is certain that but for the timely arrival of a work train with a large crew of laborers Foreman Thompson and his wife would have been killed.

Reports from the same vicinity tell of murders and outrages perpetrated by the Yaquis Thursday and Friday nights. The victims were all Mexicans, who were taken by surprise on their lonesome ranches. Details of the outbreak are extremely meagar, but show that the situation is serious.

Immediately after the houses were set on fire, and by the light of the flames the Yaquis shot at the frightened Mexicans who were trying to escape. The reports received here say that in addition to the eight men killed in the station a number of Mexicans were wounded. At a time when the residents of the camp, including Thompson and his American wife, seemed doomed, the whistle of a work train was heard, and a few minutes later the train pulled into the station. The crew of the train immediately went to the assistance of the people at the station and the Indians took to flight.

Mexican troops are now in pursuit of the band and it is believed the Indians will be soon run down and captured. Soldiers are being rushed to the troubled district in large numbers, as the government is determined to make short work of the latest outbreak. It is believed that the outbreak will not prove general and that the trouble has all been caused by one large renegade band.

Massacre Near Valencia.

Nogales, Mexico.—Details are arriving here of the butchery of a party of Mexicans by Yaqui Indians near Valencia, 60 miles below Guymas. Eleven Mexicans and one American were killed, and, from all accounts, there were over 100 Indians in the attacking party. The employes of the Southern Pacific railroad in that section are frightened. It is said many are leaving and that the massacre may delay the road to Guadalajara.

TO REVISE CUBA'S LAWS.

Governor Magoon Signs the Decree Appointing the Commission.

Havana. — Governor Magoon Monday signed the long-awaited decree appointing a commission to revise the laws of Cuba. This commission will submit to the provisional governor the draft of an electoral law, new provincial and municipal laws, a law defining the organization and functions of the judiciary, a civil service law, and also will treat on such other subjects of great interest as may be referred to it by the provisional governor.

The commission consists of Cola H. Crowder, of the judge advocate general's department of the American army, president; Jose Miguel Gomez, secretary, and Erasmo G. Boudet, Francisco C. Justiz, Manuel M. Coronado, Mario G. Kohly, Felipe G. Sarrain, Otto Schoemrich, Miguel F. Viondi, Alferdo Zayas and Major Blanton C. Winship, U. S. A. The salaries of the members of the commission, excepting those in the employ of the United States government, are fixed at $400 a month. The first meeting will be held on January 3. This is regarded as the first step toward holding new elections.

Former Railway Agent Arrested.

Denver, Col. — Frederick F. Boehm, formerly city passenger agent of the Lake Shore railroad at Niagara Falls, was arrested here Thursday on the charge of embezzling several thousand dollars from the railroad company. Boehm has been in Denver for about a year. Under the name of Frederick F. Stanton he has been employed in a position of trust by the Vankleeck Bacon Investment company. He is said to have confessed to a portion of the shortage charged against him.

Bad Earthquake in Chili.

Santiago, Chile.—Half of the town of Arica, in the province of Tacna, has been destroyed by an earthquake, and other towns in the neighborhood have suffered more or less severely. The seaport of Iquique, 120 miles south of Arica, was not damaged.

MOB LYNCHES A MURDERER

TAKEN FROM JAIL AT LAS ANIMAS, COL., AND STRUNG UP.

Crowd of Masked Men Avenge Brutal Crime—Victim Coolly Awaits His Doom.

Las Animas, Col. — Lawrence Leberg was lynched here Thursday night for the murder of Henry Lavenmeyer, by a mob of masked men. About 40 men entered the jail shortly before nine o'clock and easily overpowered the sheriff, under sheriff and two other officers and locked them securely in a room of the building.

Then men went to the cell occupied by Leberg, struck the shackles from his limbs and took him from the jail. A larger number of men and boys were waiting outside the walls and when the prisoner and his captors appeared they formed a procession and marched a short distance from the jail and hanged Leberg to a telegraph pole. The self-confessed murderer made no resistance and made no statement.

Before the mob reached the jail Leberg heard them coming. He arose from his cot, dressed himself coolly and awaited the coming of the avengers of Lavenmeyer's death. The leader of the mob made no effort to disguise himself, and it is declared that the ringleaders are known to the jail officials.

Leberg's crime was inhuman. Alighting from a Santa Fe freight train Tuesday afternoon at Robinson station, near this city, he crossed the river and secured a meal from a farmer named Purvis. When he finished eating, he demanded lodging, but was refused because of his abusive language. Leberg left the Purvis farm and after preparing a camp on the river bank, started back toward Purvis' place. He set fire to a hay stack belonging to Henry Lavenmeyer, thinking it was the property of Purvis. The fire attracted Lavenmeyer, who took Leberg into custody, allowing him to ride behind him on his horse. When Lavenmeyer dismounted to open the gate at his ranch, Leberg struck him on the head with a hammer, which he found tied to the saddle. The farmer fell stunned, and Leberg beat him over the head until he became tired. Then with a pocket knife he cut Lavenmeyer's throat from ear to ear and attempted to scalp him.

The burning haystack attracted the neighbors to the scene, who found the mutilated body. A posse was formed and Leberg was caught a mile or two away riding Lavenmeyer's horse. He submitted to arrest quietly and even boasted of his crime, saying that he had drunk the blood of his victim.

DEATH FOR NEBOGATOFF.

Russian Admiral and Three Others Condemned for Surrender.

St. Petersburg. — Because he surrendered his squadron to the Japanese in the battle of the Sea of Japan on May 28, 1905, Rear Admiral Nebogatoff is sentenced to death. The same fate is meted out to Commander Licbino, of the coast defense ironclad General Admiral Apraine; Rear Admiral Gregorieff, of the coast defense ship Admiral Seniavin, and Lieut. Smirnoff, who succeeded to the command of the battleship Nicolai I.

Such is the decision of the court-martial which has been trying Admiral Nebogatoff and 78 officers of his squadron, but in view of extenuating circumstances and the long and otherwise blameless careers of these officers, the court will petition the emperor to commute their sentences to ten years' imprisonment in a fortress. Four other officers were sentenced to short terms of imprisonment in a fortress, while the remainder were acquitted of the charges brought against them.

GRAIN TIE-UP NEAR END.

Hundreds of Cars Arriving in Minneapolis Every Day.

Minneapolis, Minn. — The backbone of the grain tie-up will soon be broken, as hundreds of cars of grain are now coming into the city daily, particularly over the Great Northern, Northern Pacific and Soo, the roads which handle the most grain.

Great Northern officials assert that they will have handled over 7,000 grain cars locally by the end of December, as against 3,000 in the month of November. The Northern Pacific will have handled between 1,200 and 1,500 cars at the end of December, as against 558 in November.

The other roads do not show any increase worthy of mention, but the increase on the two big roads is growing daily, and it is therefore believed that the tie-up will not last long.

Milwaukeean Fined for Bribery.

Milwaukee.—Former Supervisor August Puls in the municipal court Wednesday afternoon pleaded guilty to two indictments charging bribery in connection with county contracts and was fined $700.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam, Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

President Perkins of the Texas press association is of the opinion that railroads will be slow to withdraw passes from the Texas press. He says the newspapers and the railroad have labored together for the upbuilding of the state and should not be interfered with.

Dig That Ditch Out.

SEC. 5, of the Steenerson drainage bill reads as follows.

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to use the drainage reclamation fund for the operation and maintenance of all ditches, canals, embankments, dikes, structures, or reservoirs constructed under the provisions of this Act, and for straightening, deepening, and enlargeing natural water courses so as to make them serve as efficient drainage outlets."

If the government engineers would be at a point about 1½ miles above Highlanding next spring and see the waters of the Red Lake river starting across the country through Deer Park township and finaly reaching the Clearwater river, they would certainly conclude that the channel of the Red Lake river needed opening to take care of the water during the flood season. It is not the water that does not get into this river that does the most damage, but the water that runs out of it.

WILL INVESTIGATE.

The movement being made by the government to investigate the homesteads that final proof has been made on has the appearance of locking the stable door after the horse is stolen, so far as this reservation is concerned, for although they might catch a few speculators the larger portion of the unproved lands in this locality is occupyed by people that expect to make their home here. But the land grabbing and speculation has certainly been carried to the limit on this reservation by the most dangerous class of land speculators. We do not mean the poorer class them that proved up and made a loan for more than they can pay, and then turn their farms over to the money loaner, as the money loaner will sell the land to some farmer, that will farm it just as soon as he can get his money back with intrest, and thus the country will be improved and built up. But there has been to much of this land taken by a class of people who never intended to make their home here or to put in one dollar more improvement, or one minute more residence than they had to, to get a deed of the land, and doing the innocent swearing to prefection. And they are gone, and there is no motgage on the farm, for if they did not have the money to pay for it their old "dad" or uncle back in the east let them have it, and away they go, and my son John has a quater section of land up in northern Minnesota. They will not sell it and they will not improve it, but just let it lay in its wild state. If one of them die [illegible] inherits it and the land [illegible] there for an other generation in its wild state. [illegible] hope to see the govern[ment] take hold of this matter in [ear]nest and see to it that he in[illegible] [illegible] ters, but that the speculator be given to understand, that if this land was not good enough to live on it was not good enough to have a deed of. We believe the officials of the Department of the Interior are using their best endevors to prevent frand and do justice to the honest settler, some of whom, (we don't except ourself from this class) are in a masure to blame for this wholesale vacation of the country, by trying to be a good fellow to our neighbor, whose word we had taken, and when that question was asked us: Do you believe this man took this land with good intentions to make it his home? We answered yes, as we had taken his word for it, and the land office officials took our word for it, and allowed their proof and they left the country and have not been seen since.

Now if we had taken a little more pains to have looked the matter up, and when the above question was ask, answered NO, but we do believe that his intentions are to leave the country and never return, as soon as he has made proof, then the officials of the Land Office would have done their duty and you would see the smoke continue to come out of the stove pipe, of the tar paper, "shantie" on the claim.

GOVERNMENT WAGES LOW.

H. T. Newcomb Gives Facts of Interest to Wage Earners.

From 1896 to 1904 the average retail cost of the ordinary articles of food used in the United States advanced no less than 17 per cent (16.96, to be more exact)—that is, the purchaser of food for a family had to pay $1.17 in 1904 for the same quantity and quality of food that $1 would purchase in 1896. These are official statistics compiled by the highly skilled experts employed by the federal government, and every housewife knows that they do not overstate the advance. Other necessities of life have advanced in cost with approximately equal rapidity.

Unquestionably wages ought, generally speaking, to have advanced somewhat in proportion to the increase in the cost of living. In private employment this has apparently taken place, the average wages per hour reported by the federal bureau of labor being 17.36 per cent higher in 1904 than in 1896 and the average weekly earnings 12.76 per cent higher. The advances thus represented are spread all over the country; they characterize every private industrial enterprise and have benefited all classes of workmen employed in private undertakings.

How is it with public employment? A few undertakings conducted under public ownership employ labor like that similarly serving private employers in the same communities, and in these cases the public rate of wages has slowly been advanced somewhat in proportion to the advance in the wages privately paid. But where any American government, municipal, state or national, is the sole or by far the largest employer of a particular class of labor the advances to meet increased cost of living have been so few that the ordinary investigator will be unable to discover a single instance.

Throughout the postal service, among the 25,000 clerical employees at Washington, in the customs and internal revenue services there have been no advances in pay to meet the rise in cost of food, clothing and shelter. The pay of letter carriers, for example, remains precisely where it was fixed twenty years ago by an act approved on Jan. 3, 1887.

The largest printing office in the world is that maintained at Washington by the government, and there the federal government employs a large force of intelligent and highly skilled workingmen. A change in the basis of payment in 1899 from the piece work to the per hour system prevents comparisons with dates prior to the change, but wages have remained stationary since March 3, 1899, although the official statisticians report that the cost of food has advanced since the rate of wages was fixed by statute fully 12.25 per cent. During the same years the wages of printers in private book publishing or job printing establishments advanced throughout the United States as follows: Compositors, male, 14.67 per cent; compositors, female, 20.60 per cent; press feeders, male, 22.41 per cent; press feeders, female, 21.27 per cent; pressmen, 11.10 per cent.—H. T. Newcomb.

"Cannibalism."

The word "cannibalism" is really the name of a people. It is identical with Carib, many of the Caribs, who formerly flourished in the West Indies, having been consumers of human flesh. The letters "l," "n" and "r" are interchangeable in certain aboriginal American languages, so that Columbus found one West Indian island saying "Cannibe," where another said "Caribe," while Shakespeare's Caliban is a [n]other variety of the same.

THE MELANCHOLY DANE.

Supposed Source of the Plot of Shakespeare's "Hamlet."

While Shakespeare no doubt wrote the tragedy of "Hamlet," as it is found today, he borrowed many of his data from an earlier writer, Saxo Grammaticus, a Danish historian who died about 1204. His writings were in Latin, and in Shakespeare's time they had not been translated into any modern language. The story is to be found in Belleforest's collection of novels, begun in 1564, and an English translation of it was published entitled "The Hystorie of Hamblet, Prince of Denmarke." Horvendile in the novel is the name of Hamlet's father, Fengon that of his uncle and Geruth that of his mother. Fengon traitorously slays Horvendile and marries his brother's wife. In the second chapter Hamlet counterfeits the madman to escape the tyranny of his uncle. Through the machinations of his uncle he is tempted by a woman, the uncle thinking thereby to undermine the prince and find out whether his madness is counterfeited or not.

In the third chapter Fengon, the uncle, tries a second time to entrap Hamlet in politic madness and causes one of his councilors to be secretly hidden in the queen's chamber behind the curtains to hear what speeches pass between Hamlet and the queen. Hamlet kills him and thus escapes danger. In the fourth chapter Hamlet is sent to England by Fengon, with secret letters to have him put to death. While his companions sleep Hamlet counterfeits the letters "willing the king of England to put the two messengers to death." Here ends the resemblance between the history and the play. The Hamlet of the history returns to Denmark, slays his uncle, burns his palace, makes an oration to the Danes and is elected king. He goes [illegible] England, kills the king [illegible] country, returns to Denmark [illegible] two English wives and finally [illegible] through [illegible] [illegible]

A Pardonable Excuse.

A Columbia university man who makes frequent use of foreign words and phrases in his talks and his literary products was under fire for this practice. The feeling among his antagonists was that the English language is a good enough means of expression. "Well," said the expert in word pictures, "to me a number of these foreign phrases have an interesting history which their use recalls. I plead guilty to a sentiment for just this kind of thing. Take the expression 'sub rosa.' Its English substitute is 'privately.' I prefer to think of the rose as an emblem of secrecy in Greece, and the custom which had one of these pretty flowers hung over the table where guests were entertained in token that nothing heard there was to be repeated; hence the expression 'sub rosa.'"

A Lively Court Scene.

They had a lively scene in a court in Algiers when thirty thieves were brought up for their sentences. The judge had just sentenced the prisoners when a notorious thief flung a boot at him. It hit the presiding judge squarely on the nose, making the blood spurt. This was a signal to the other prisoners, for immediately a storm of boots, caps and other articles hurtled through the air, and amid the confusion the band of thieves made a dash for liberty. The gendarmes had to draw their swords before order could be restored. All the prisoners were caught and lined up again before the judge, who gave them all three years more at hard labor for committing an outrage on the magistracy.

DO YOU OWN A HORSE?

Electric Light Plants Are Like Horses In Some Respects.

The subject of depreciation is well worthy of the careful consideration of those who are prone to ignore that item in estimating the cost of lights supplied by municipal plants. But as more people own horses than lighting plants it may be helpful to consider depreciation as applied to horses.

You pay $250 for a five-year-old horse. That's original cost. If you borrow the money you must pay interest on it. If you don't borrow it you lose the interest you would get if you didn't buy the horse. Either way it's interest. You feed the horse, and perhaps hire a man to take care of him. That's operating expenses. You get him shod occasionally and call in the veterinarian when he is sick. That's renewals and repairs. After a few years, in spite of the best of care, the horse is no longer capable of doing the work [illegible] have to sell him for $50, a loss of $200 as compared with the original cost. The Word Cigar.

The word cigar occurs in a German dictionary for the first time in 1715 and in the Dictionaire of the French Academie in 1835. Kant used the word "siegare" in 1796. In Spain at the present day the word "cigarro" means a cigarette, for which the Spaniards have the word "pitillos." That alone is a signal in "un pitillo."

The Bloom on Fruit.

How many boys and girls know why plums, grapes and other fruits of that kind have bloom on them? Of course you know that the bloom is the whitish coating that a mere touch will rub off, leaving the dark skin of the fruit in view. This is a provision of nature for the protection and preservation of the fruit. It prevents dampness from accumulating on it and thus keeps it from decaying.

INVALID HEROES.

Great Men Who Did Great Things in Spite of Infirmity.

A record of the magnificent courage of the world's invalid heroes is Sophia F. Shaler's book, "The Masters of Fate." One of these heroes was Green, the English historian, who could sign himself, "Pitifully feebly, weakly, dizzily, mopily, faintly, dreamily, dully): J. R. Green." Another was Robert Louis Stevenson, who wrote, "I am about knocked out of time now; a miserable, snuffling, shivering, fever stricken, nightmare ridden, head tottering, rest-beast-hounding shadow and remains of a man." "But," continues Stevenson, "the medicine bottles on my chimney and the blood on my handkerchief are accidents. They do not color my view of life." It was an octogenarian United States senator who, when asked for rules for longevity, replied, "Acquire a chronic ailment in youth, and nurse yourself through life—and work." Kant furnishes a lesson of this kind. Although the great metaphysician was never entirely well, he performed a prodigious amount of intellectual work and lived to be eighty years of age. "He obtained such control over his discomforts," writes Mrs. Shaler, "that when suffering from a pain in his head he could concentrate his mind so perfectly on a chosen subject that the pain was treated as if it did not exist. By sheer force of will he would also overcome sleeplessness, caused by rheumatic attacks." Of these, he says, 'were not imaginary pains was proved by the glowing redness which was seen the next morning on the toes of my left foot." "

That pitiful account which Johnson gives of Pope's physical condition rests upon the authority of an old servant, of Lord Oxford, who knew him after middle age. "He was then so weak as to stand in perpetual need of attendance. He was extremely sensitive to cold, so that he wore a kind of fur doublet under a shirt of coarse, warm linen, with fine sleeves. When he arose he was invested in bodices made of stiff canvas, being scarcely able to hold himself erect till they were laced, and then he put on a flannel waistcoat. One side of his body was contracted. His legs were so slender that he enlarged their bulk with two pairs of stockings."

Great soldiers have borne afflictions they could neither overcome nor avoid. "Some of the world's foremost commanders—Julius Cæsar, Napoleon, the Duke of Wellington and Archduke Charles of Austria—appear to have been epileptics. At the battle of Wagram the archduke, it is said, had a seizure which lasted about an hour. It was then that Napoleon gained the ascendency. At the critical moment the fate of two great armies was in the hands of two epileptics. Cæsar, the conqueror of Egypt; Alexander the Great and two of the greatest poets of Europe—Tasso and Byron—were subject to this disease, as was also the prophet Mohammed."

JAP YOUTH ON SCHOOLSHIP.

Will Get Thorough Training on an American Boat.

The first Japanese youth to be admitted to the crew of the schoolship St. Mary's is Katsern Artyohi. Artyohi, who is 17 years old, has been in the revenue cutter service on the Pacific for the last three years.

As it is necessary for all foreigners who be wish to become members of the schoolship's crew to have a guardian, Artyohi was forced to get one before he could be admitted to the crew. He succeeded in getting Capt. Osborn to act in that capacity. Capt. Osborn will coach the boy along and help him over the hard points in his lessons.

Artyohi has not made up his mind yet whether he will remain in this country or go home to Japan after he has been graduated from the schoolship. A term on the schoolship fits a boy for service in the merchant marine. Artyohi says he likes the United States and may stay here, but if Japan ever goes to war he will return home quickly as possible to take part in it.

ELEVEN YEARS OF ECZEMA.

Hands Cracked and Bleeding—Nail Came Off of Finger—Cuticura Remedies Brought Prompt Relief.

"I had eczema on my hands for about eleven years. The hands cracked open in many places and bled. One of my fingers was so bad that the nail came off. I had often heard of cures by the Cuticura Remedies, but had no confidence in them as I had tried so many remedies, and they all had failed to cure me. I had seen three doctors, but got no relief. Finally my husband said that we would try the Cuticura Remedies, so we got a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment, and two bottles of Cuticura Resolvent Pills. Of course I keep Cuticura Soap all the time for my hands, for the use of the Ointment and half a box of Cuticura Ointment cured them. It is surely a blessing for me to have my hands well, and I am very proud of having tried Cuticura Remedies, and recommend them to all suffering with eczema. (Mrs.) Eliza A. Wiley, R. F. D. No. 2, Lisbon, Iowa, Oct. 18, 1906."

Monarchs as Linguists.

Monarchs must know more than one language. King Edward, who traveled so much, speaks French better than some Frenchmen, and also Germen. The czar of Russia speaks French as well as his native tongue and knows the numerous dialects. Emperor William of Germany speaks French and English correctly, and is also well versed in Latin. The king of Spain, the youngest of all, speaks German with ease and also French and English. Because of his marriage he now practices the latter. The king of Portugal speaks French, English, German and Spanish. The king of Italy is a master of French and German and is also well versed in the various Italian dialects.

"Doucerous—yes," M. Lancia replied. "Too dangerous—no. For nothing that honestis mecklnd—and automobilisteis benefit mankind incorrectly—is too dangerous for a man to undertsto.

"I have a good deal of contempt for men who are not brave to the point of rashness. I am like a highwayman who held up a gasoline man about on the outskirts of Rome.

"This highwayman stopped the run about with a shot in the air. Then he ran forth from the tomb that had concealed him—the hold-up happened on the Appian Way—and said, to his surprise, only a woman in the little car.

"Where, madam, is your husband?" he demanded, sternly and suspiciously.

"He's under the seat,' she answered, flushing.

"Then,' said the highwayman, 'I won't take nothing. It's bad enough to have a husband like that without being robbed into the bargain.'

VIRTUES OF THE MARGUERITE.

Plant That is Excellently Adapted for Winter Use.

One of the plants I want to recommend to the amateur as excellently adapted for winter use is the Marguerite or Paris daisy, writes Eben Scarford, in his Home Magazine. It is, to all intents and purposes, the daisy of the fields and meadows domesticated. In its native habitat it is a sturdy plant, and it takes very kindly to pot culture. It flourishes in a soil of ordinary garden loam, which need not be very rich to produce the flowers and a great many of them. Indeed, in a very rich soil it will make a luxuriant growth of branches at the expense of flowers. It has many roots, and must be given a larger pot than such plants as geraniums. If it is not convenient to shift it frequently to give more room to its roots you will have to make use, after a little, of some kind of liquid fertilizer to furnish the nutriment which it would get from fresh soil if frequent repotting were resorted to. But beware of using enough to induce a rapid growth. Rapid growth among pot plants is, nine times out of ten, weak, unhealthy growth, and one should always aim to avoid it, and especially in the case of plants which are quick to respond to overstimulating treatment at the development of branches instead of flowers.

BETTER THAN TABLE LEAVES.

Separate Board Top Provides Needed Additional Space.

People who give large dinners often find the addition of leaves insufficient to accommodate the guests. Also a round or square table mounted is not at all pretty or as easy to set. Therefore it is an excellent plan to have a large separate board top made, which when occasion demands may be laid right on top of the table without needing more support underneath. When the room is small such a movable top is much better than to have a large table, which would ordinarily occupy too much floor space. Then, too, the separate top may be either square or round, as her fancy dictates, and its regularity not spoiled by additional leaves. When not in use the top is, of course, stored in a shed or down cellar, safely out of the way.

One woman who has a round table had a large separate top made, by which she was enabled to seat 14 people comfortably, whereas her table itself, without extension, held but 12, seated uncomfortably close to each other.

Salmon Croquettes.

Make a thick white sauce from one cup of milk, five level tablespoons of flour, and two level tablespoons of butter. When it is thick add the yolks of two eggs and then one can cooked through add the salmon. To prepare the fish free a can of salmon from all oil and bones, add a level teaspoon of salt, a tablespoon of finely chopped parsley, a few gratings of nutmeg, and a pinch of cayenne. Now boil half an onion over the fish and scrape off a dozen drops of juice. After the fish and sauce are mixed spread on a plete and set away to cool. Form into balls or cones, dip into beaten egg, then in sifted fine bread crumbs, and fry in deep fat. Garnish with lemon points and parsley.

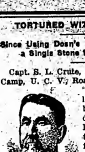
Peanut Brittle.

Select freshly roasted peanuts. Shell, skin and split in halves by sufficient number to yield one and one-half cupfuls. Then spread the nut evenly over a buttered, greased pan. Put one cupful of genuine dark molasses and one cupful of brown sugar in the blazer of the chafing dish. Add one tablespoonful of vinegar and one generous tablespoonful of butter and boil until the mixture becomes crisp on being dropped into cold water. Add a scant teaspoonful of baking soda, mix thoroughly and pour over the nuts. Stand in a cold place where it will harden quickly, and when very hard break into pieces. Home-made peanut brittle surpasses the factory brand.

Apple Preserves.

Now that apples are in season, a hint about buying and preserving the same may be useful to some of our readers. When buying apples select them by their weight, the heaviest being the best. Large apples are better than small; and those which yield to the pressure of the thumb with a slight crackling noise. To make apple jelly, wash the apples well and cut in pieces; boil them with water and part of a lemon in an uncovered saucepan. When the juice is sticky strain through a sieve and add some thick syrup, for which the sugar used should be of the same weight as the apples; boil and skim it, and when it is sufficiently thick to fall in flakes from the spoon, put into the jelly glasses and tie down.

To Lengthen Life of Wire Screens.



Before putting away the screens for the winter rub them with a cloth well saturated with kerosene oil. The tendency of the wire, if not protected in some way, is to rust and become very brittle, the average life of the screen being about a season. If they are treated in this fashion, however, they will last for several seasons and show very little wear.—Interior Decoration.

TORTURED WITH GRAVEL.

Since Using Doan's Kidney Pills Not a Single Stone Has Formed.

Capt. B. L. Cruise, Adit, Wm. Watts Camp, U. C. V., Roanoke, Va., says:

"I suffered a long, long time with my back, and felt dreggy and listless and tired all the time. I lost from my usual weight, 225, to 170. Urinary passages were too frequent and have had to get up often at night. I had headaches and dizzy spells also, but my worst suffering was from renal colic. After I began using Doan's Kidney Pills I passed a gravel stone as big as a bean. Since then I have never had an attack of gravel, and have picked up to my former health and weight. I am a well man, and give Doan's Kidney Pills credit for it."

Lecturer on Hysteria.

Marie Pierre Felixz Janet, professor of experimental psychology in the University of Paris, who is now traveling and lecturing in the United States, figures in the public mind as a hypnotist. As a matter of fact, this is only incidentally, but he is trying to demonstrate that the victim of hysteria is at the same time two different persons.

ODELL OBEYED HIS FATHER.

Emphatic Message That Broke Up Conference of Politicians.

Four years ago, when ex-Gov. Odell, of New York, was coming up for a renomination at the convention in Saratoga, there was a plan to put a man on the ticket with him for lieutenant governor to whom Odell objected strongly.

The governor's father, 88 years old, a deacon in the church and very strict in religious matters, was in Saratoga.

There was a conference at one of the hotel cottages that lasted until late in the morning. The other head ers were trying to force Odell to take the obnoxious man.

About two o'clock Odell's father, who had heard what was going on, stalked angrily over to the cottage and rapped on the door. Frank Platt, son of Senator Platt, came to the door.

"Well?" said Platt sharply.

"I want to see my son," demanded Odell.

The governor came to the door.

"What is it, father?" he asked.

"Ben," said the old deacon, "tell them to go to——"

"Yes, father," replied the governor obediently, and he went back and did just that.—Saturday Evening Post.

MONKS FIRST PLAYED DOMINOES

Origin of Game That is Popular the World Over.

With regard to the game of dominoes there is a very interesting story connected with its origin. It runs thus: There were two monks who had been committed to the penalty of a long seclusion and were confined to keep absolute silence. To relieve the monotony they played a game by showing each other such flat stones marked with black dots. By a well-understood arrangement, the monk whose hand was next at first informed the other player by repeating in an undertone the first line of the vesper hymn, "Jam Sol Domino" (Sing unto the Lord). In time the monks completed the set of stones and formulated the rules of the game, so that by the time they were free to come out from their punishment they had found the game so interesting that on teaching it to the other members of the monastery it became a favorite and lawful pastime. It soon became popular all, through Italy and from there extended to the whole world. The first line of the vesper hymn which the monks had used as a signal was reduced to the word domino, and the name has stuck to the game ever since.

CRIED EASILY.

Nervous Woman Stopped Coffee and Quit Other Things.

No better practical proof that coffee is a drug can be required than to note how the nerves become unstrung in women who habitually drink it.

The stomach, too, rebels at being continually drugged with coffee and tea—they both contain the drug—caffeine. Ask your doctor.

An Ia. woman tells the old story thus:

"I had used coffee for six years and was troubled with headaches, spells of sickness and dizziness. In the morning upon rising I used to belch up a sour fluid regularly.

"Often I got so nervous and miserable I would cry without the least reason, and I noticed my eyesight was getting poor.

"After using Postum a while I observed the headaches left me and soon the belching of sour fluid stopped (water brash from dyspepsia). I feel decidedly different now, and I am convinced that it is because I stopped coffee and began to use Postum. I can see better now, my eyes are stronger.

"A friend of mine did not like Postum but when I told her to make it like it said on the package, she liked it all right." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. "Always boil Postum well and it will surprise you."

THE PROGRESS OF THE CANADIAN WEST.

Nearly 200,000 of an Increase in Canada's Immigration in 1906.

The progress of a new country cannot be better ascertained than by noting the increase of railroad mileage in its transportation system, and, judged by this standard, the Canadian West leads all the countries in the world during the current year. Thirty years ago there was not one hundred miles of railroad west of the Great Lakes, and very little prospect of a transcontinental route for many years to come, but by the end of 1886 the Canadian Pacific Railway was within measurable distance of completion, and last year—twenty years later—over 6,000 miles of railroad traversed the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

In the past year the work of railroad construction has been vigorously prosecuted, and by the end of 1906, some 6,000 miles of completed railroad will be added, making a total of fully 11,000 miles in the three great grain producing provinces of Canada. Such an increase in the transportation facilities of the country is bound to make good times, not only in the districts where the railroads are being built, but throughout the entire west. Allowing $20,000 a mile for construction, the sum of $100,000,000 will be put in circulation, and this in itself should cause good times to prevail in the land where work is plentiful, wages are high, and the cost of living is moderate.

But the building of new railroads through Western Canada means a greater benefit to the country than merely the money put in circulation by the cost of construction. Additional railway building means the opening of new agricultural districts and an additional area under crops; a largely increased output of grain to foreign markets with consequent financial returns; the erection of elevators and the growth of villages, towns and cities, and everything else that makes for the progress of national life, and the opening up of additional demands for manufactures, so extensively advertised by the Canadian government agent, whose address appears elsewhere.

It was stated on the floor of the Canadian Parliament recently by a government representative that ten years from now would see the bulk of the population of Canada settling west of the Great Lakes, and if the work of railway building during the present year is any criterion, the prophecy made by the Canadian statesman may be easily fulfilled inside of the time mentioned. During the present year no less than 189,054 persons have found homes in the Canadian West, and there will be very many more who have seen the great possibilities of this new West, and have decided to cast in their lot there. Certainly our neighbor north of the 49th parallel is making a great record, and deserves the success that appears to be coming its way.

Prominent on Lecture Platform.

Senator Tillman probably earns more money every year on the lecture platform than any other American who talks to the public for pay. From his authorized statement the statement is said from $250 to $500 a lecture and he is constantly in demand. The reason is not confined to the money. Chautauqua cares and he fills nearly as many dates in the winter time as any other time of the year. In the last four years it is said that he has laid aside over $60,000 from his lecture receipts. Henry Watterson perhaps comes next in the matter of earnings on the platform. Champ Clark, of Missouri, ranks high as a popular favorite and makes about twice as much as a lecturer as his congressional salary.

Keep Your Blood Pure.

No one can be happy, light-hearted and healthy with a body full of blood that cannot do its duty to every part because of its impurity; therefore, the first and most important work in hand is to purify the blood so that every organ will get the full benefit of a healthy circulation. There is no remedy so good as that old family remedy, Brandreth's Pills. Each pill contains one grain of the solid extract of sarsaparilla blended with two grains of a combination of pure and mild vegetable products, making it a blood purifier unexcelled in character. One or two taken every night for awhile will produce surprising results.

Brandreth's Pills have been in use for over a century, and are for sale everywhere, plain or sugar-coated.

Strangely Mounted.

The strangest military body in the world is a band of cavalry at Saint de Moorvay, a province on the east coast of Africa, which is under the rule of the French governor general at Madagascar. These soldiers go about their military operations on oxen. The animals are not mere creatures, and it is said they move with surprising rapidity.

No Advance in Wisdom.

Mark Twain tells how four years ago he was invited by the University of Missouri to go out there and receive the degree of LL. D. At the same time he visited Hannibal, his boyhood home. Just as he was about to leave, being accompanied to the station by a crowd of citizens, Tom Nash, a schoolfellow of his, came up—white headed, but still a boy. He shook hands with his friend of many a year and nodding toward the crowd said: "People of this town are the same blamed fools they always were, ain't they, Sam?"

MASURY'S HOUSE PAINT
THE PAINT WITH THE LONGEST LIFE

There is no question about it.
Masury's House Paints have been submitted to every possible test during the past forty years. They have withstood the attacks of extreme heat, extreme cold, moisture and moisture and other severe tests, and have invariably given good accounts of themselves. Painters and others have in every instance said favorable things about their superior qualities. Consumers endorse them because, by their use, they are spared the expense of repairing for the most unsatisfactory paints.

The wonderful success of the house of John W. Masury & Son for more than half a century is due to the care with which they select the ingredients used in the manufacture of their colors. Many substances could be used to lessen cost, but they are unhesitatingly rejected.

PURE LINSEED OIL

is used on account of its superior preservative qualities. The pigments ground with it are selected because experience has proved them to be best. In deciding upon paints for original painting or repainting you must remember it costs just as much to spread poor paints as it does to spread the best paints, and that in the interests of economy you should choose Masury's House Paints for the reason that they live the longest and retain their brilliancy of finish long after inferior paints have completely vanished. President Welcomes Criticism on "Message Habit" That Gives Him Opportunity to Curb Congressmen—Secretary Shaw's Little Revenge—Increase in Cost of Living at Washington.

WASHINGTON.—President Roosevelt has taken heed of the criticism in congress of his so-called "messsgs babit," and thsrs is fair promise that hereafter he will not so freely communicate his views to ths legislators on topics urged upon him by onthusiastic champions of proposed reform. Mr. Roosevelt is not sorry that senators and representatives have criticized his message writing proclivities. He knows all about the sharp remarks that have been mnde and has read some of the newspaper articles setting forth the congressionsl comment on messsges multitudinous and overlapping. He is glad that the comment hss got into print, because he believes it will be the means of ridding him of a burden.

That members of congress, according to their dispositions, have found fault and made merry over the steady stream of public documents from the White Houss to the capitol since the present session began gives Mr. Roosevelt ths opportunity to quit writing and to refuse to yield to the urgings constantly being pressed upon him to send a specisl message on this subject or the other. Messsges will coms hereafter only when the public ussge and the public service demand. The president realizes thst his too fres use of ths presidentisl message to call attention of congress and the country to needed legislation depreciates the value of his commendstion. He realizes, too, that few read his long pronuncinments who do not have to.

HOW SHAW GOT HIS REVENGE.

Not long ago, when Secretary Sbaw of the treasury went out to Pittsburg to look ovsr post office sites, ths Pittsburg people became resl angry with him because he did not approve some plans and did approve others, and slapped him on the wrist.

The secretary came back and bided his time. When Leslie M. Shaw is biding his time he is a fearsome thing. It is ons of the best things he does. He bided snd bided, but finally bis tims came. Pittsburg is all torn up over this post office site business, and a committee from all the commercial and financial bodies of the city was appointed to come to Washington and pursue the matter with Mr. Shaw.

This committee consisted of 30 of the leading millionaires and was made up of such of the leading men as could bo spared from their divorce court duties and could bs dragged home from New York. They had a six hour session with tho secretary, that closed about six o'clock at night. Then the secretary got even. He reaped all tho BIDES he had sown.

"When shall we continue, Mr. Secretary?" asked one of the prominant millionaires.

"To-morrow morning at 7:30 o'clock," said the secretary, sharply.

Revenge is sweet. The millionaires staggered out into the dusk and went to their hotel. They scrambled into bed early, leaving calls for 5:30 and six. For once it was known whera 30 Pittsburg millionaires were at midnight.

Next morning at 7:30 the 30 Pittsburg millionaires filed into Secretary Shaw's office rubbing their eyes and stumbling over the charwoman. There was Secretary Sbaw at his desk, chipper and pert.

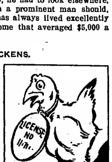
"Good morning, gentlemen," he said, "I hope I see you well."

"You bo binnked, blanked," said 30 Pittsburg millionaires in hosrse asides.

But the secretary did not care. Ha hsd wreaked his terrible Denison (Iowa) vengeance on the Pittsburg millionaires and ha was content.

P. S.—But ho hsd to get up at six o'clock himself.

COST OF LIVING AT CAPITAL GROWING HIGHER.



Foreigners stationed here at the legations and embassies declare that tha cost of living is greater in Washington than in any other capital of the world. Officials and congressmen, who are in Washington from all parts of the United States, complain thst the cost is greater in this city than in any other of the country. Statistics gathered by the bureau of statistics of the department of commerce and labor, despite the consistent Republican effort to have it appesr through this bureau that tha average waga is going up and the averaga cost of living going down, now are permitted to show a considerable increase all through tha country in the cost of living.

Residents of Washington need no statistics. Only a very short memory is needed to establish the fact that the cost of living in the capital has gone up at least 50 per cent. in the last ten years. The various propositions to boost the pay of government employes, which are pending in congress, are explained by these conditions.

Take the congressmen on $5,000 a year. A certain member of tha Missouri delegation, elected in 1904 under circumstances that mada him a conspicuous figure, camo to Washington with a family of three besides himsalf. He went to a cortain residential hotel, of good class, but not tha most expensive, and ths best figure mado to him was $400 a month for himself and family.

As his salary exceeds tho sum by less thnn $40, he had to look elsewhere, and now lives very modestly, more modestly than a prominent man should, at an outlay of $275 a month. Ha is a man who has always lived excellently at homo and moved in the first circles on an income that averaged $5,000 a year.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA MUST LICENSE CHICKENS.

Unless tha owners of chickens and pigeons can secure the good will and consent of tha district health officer and of their neighbors, they will bo forced to part with their pets, for the commissioners have approved the regulation restricting tho keeping of live fowls within tha district.

Efforts of pigeon fanciers to have their pets excluded from the provisions of tha naw regulations were in vain, and the birds hava been placed in the same class with other live fowl. Tha new regulstion will be known as section 6, articla 7, of the police regulations, and reads as follows:

"No person shall keep any kind of live fowls nr pigeons in any square or block within the District of Columbia which has 75 per cent. of its territory improved without first having obtained a permit to do so from the health officer of said district, which permit shall prescribe the conditions under which fowls and pigeons shall be kept; nor without having obtained the consent of 75 per cent of the residents within a radius of 100 feet from the boundaries of the premises upon which fowls nr pigeons are to be kept; provided, however, that such fowls shall not be permitted to run or stray beyond the boundaries of said premises; and, provided further, that this regulation shall not apply to fowls nr pigeons confined in coops in regularly established provision or commission stores or public markets, nr homing pigeons.

"Any person violating any nf the provisions of this sectinn shall be fined not less than two dollars and nnt more than ten dollars, and each day fowls or pigeons are kept or permitted to run nr stray, as above provided, shall be deemed a separate offense hereunder."

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

FALL OF A POPULAR IDOL

Attorney General R. V. Davidson, of Texas, who has mada sensational charges against Senator Joseph W. Bailey, disclaims any political motive behind his action and says ha is not seeking the senator's position. The people of Texas have heard his allegations against Bailey with bowed heads. Ths ssnator was a popular idol. Many of his supportera say they will stick to him, right or wrong. In conssquence, a serious split has taken plsce in the Democratic party. Bailey is now fighting for realection. Should be win or should he lose, should Davidson or someone else be named in his place, so intense is the feeling that it will be several years bsfore the party can be reunited.

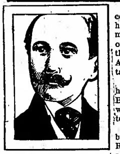
In his investigations into the Waters-Pierca Oil compsny, said to be a branch of the Standard Oil company, which he is seeking to drive out of the state, Attorney General Davidson says he found vouchers of papera made psyabls to Ssnator Bailsy. They had been andited and approved by tha Standard Oil company.

The feeling among tha peopls of Texas is that Senator Bailey has not been honest with them. In his campaign for vindication ha did not tell the people that ha had accepted loans from tha oil company. Now he says these items were loans, and that they have been repaid. But he does not say how.

The contention of the attorney general is that the Waters-Pisrca Oil company secured political aid in their fight for readmission to the state in 1900.

Attorney General Davidson is generally reegsrded throughout Texas as one of the state's shrewdest politicians. He affirms that he is truly pained that Bailey should have fallen, but that it was absolutely necessary for ths success of his suit against the oil company that he hring in Bailey's name.

GAVE UP HOME FOR CHURCH



Cardinsl Richard, prince of the Roman Catholic church and archbishop of Paris, who vacated his Episcopal residencs, the property of France at the order of the government, bslongs to one of the noblest of the families of France, and is considered a man of great learning and remarkably strong character. He was appointed to the great see of Paris in July, 1886, in succession to the late Cardinal Joseph Guilbert. At the extreme age of 86 the celebrated French ecclesiastic posssses a mind almost as alert and healthy as it was 25 years ago. He has been of late the most prominent cardinal of Europe in affairs affecting civil governmsnt in its relations to church institutions.

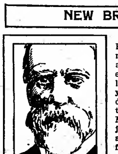
Csrdinal Richard has had his own differences with tha French government. He excited great indignation among officials by denouncing the Paris world's exposition, when it was proposed, on the grounds that it would lead to scandal and immorality. He has strong anti-Republican sentiments and earned the disapproval of the government by the attitude of open sympathy he assumed for the Assumptionist Fathers, whose order was dissolved for their alleged interference in politics. It is said the govarnment on that occasion requested the Vatican to remove the prelate from his post in Paris.

In the recent difficulties the cardinal was preparad to obey tha law of separation, when he was ordered by the pope to take no action. Even laymen, by his order, ware to be prohibited from forming associations for applying for use of the churches.

ROSTAND IN FAIRYLAND

Some of the most noted Parisian artists have contrived to transform Edmond Rostand's country home, Arnaga, into a fairyland. The walla of his magnificent apartments, whose windows look out over tha crests of the Pyreness, are covered with the ever-delightful talea which Hans Christian Andersen and the Grimm brothers have immortalized.

But the gem of this poet's dwelling is his wife's boudoir. Familiar stories of "Cindarella" and "The Beauty and the Beast" are told again with a waalth of color and fantasy by the famous decorator, Jean Weber.



In this artistic retreat, which is a happy combination of Byzantine palace and Basque chalet, Rostand lives part of the year, with his wife and son, in a retirement only broken to recaive soma nrother poet or an artist friend who is requested never to mention Paris and its strennous ways.

To escape from the continnal excitement of life in Paris and the feverish search for amnsement found at fasbionabla resorts, and also to be able to davote himself entirely to work, the creator of "Cyrano" fled eight years ago to the half-savage and wholly picturesqua fastnesses of the Spanish frontier. First he rented a tiny cottage, nestled against a tiny chnrch, but his view lacked tha traditional poesy and splendor of Basque landscapas, so he built Arnaga. It is not constructed along conventional lines of the French chatean, bnt, standing on a high hill surrounded by parks and terraces, it at first gives tha impression of a Moorish palace.

Tbosa who wonder secretly how Rostand's earninga as a dramatist suffica to keep np such a pretentious establishment forget tbat ba married Rosemonde Gerard, the daughter of a Paris banker. Her millions ara the magic wand which called into being this fairy castle.

Rostand is principally famous as the author of "Cyrano de Bergerac," which was first produced in 1897. His only other dramatic work since that time is "L'Aiglon," in which Mme. Bernhardt has been eminently successful. Rostand was born at Marseilles in 1868, and in 1903 was admitted a member of the French academy.

NEW BRITISH AMBASSADOR

The announcement of the coming of James Bryca as the British ambassador to this country meets with the unanimous approval of the people and the press. Ona of the three great liberal leaders—Campbell-Bannerman, Morley and Bryce—leaders who kept their colora flying during the years that their party was ont of power, that long, dreary and disheartening season when it appeared that liberalism was suffering from what Justin McCarthy called "dry rot;" when toryism and jingoism were in tha ascendency—who refused to admit that a losing canse was a lost canse, but fought on valiantly, compelling attention to thair principles in the honse of commons, and who, whila othar liberals were faint-hearted and disposed to consider the struggle nseless, kept on until rewarded in the victory which cama with the successful formation nf the present British cabinet.

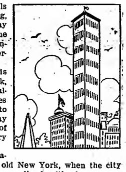
With "C.-B." at its head, Mr. Bryce was mada secretary for Ireland, and it is said that his hesitancy in announcing his acceptance of the most important diplomatic post in the gift of the English people was caused by his desire to have charge nf an Irish home rule bill, which is to be presented by the party now in power. He has always been an Irish nationalist, a steady and consistent supporter of the demand for Irish home rule, and it is not unnatural that, with the party which is pledged to that policy in power, he should have cherished a desire to round out his parliamentary career in working for the passage of the measure to which he has devoted so many years.

Gossip of Gotham

Interesting Bits of News Gathered at the Metropolis—Times Square a City in Itself—Bright Star of Sam Martin's Shines No More—To Save Hudson Scenery.

NEW YORK.—Probably no other city in the world hss a street or square so sufficient unto itself and so largely a separate civic entity as is Times Square. Probably no placa of its size bas such a lsrge transient populstion, if one counts tbe persons wbo dine or attend theatrical performances at the squsre. It is estimated that close to 1,000,000 persons traverse ths square every day, and there run through it in the course of the day about 1,500 street cars and over 600 subway trains.

Times Square embraces, of course, the junction of Seventh avenue and Broadway, and is properly bounded on the south by the Times building and on the north by the south side of Forty-seventh street. If one traverses the blocks in this territory, scrutinizing the stores and buildings along his path, he will find five theaters, two hotels, three drug stores, two candy shops, four automobile stores, ten restaurants, two florists, six saloons, five cigar stores, three real estate offices, thres tailors, thres jewelers, three cleaning sbops, two barness makers, two milliners, and two modistes. Then thers ars a bank, a fruit store, a shoe shop, a pawnbroker, a carriage maker, a piano store, an express company, a pawn ticket seller, a furrier, a haberdashery, a laundry, and even an old-fashioned blacksmith's sbop. There is also a drug store in the Times building and various shops there conduct a rushing business in the quiet corridors below the lavel of the roaring street. In addition the Hotel Astor conducts a private furnitnre shop, a carpenter's shop, and a silversmith's shop, where its thousands of knives, forks, and spoons are replated every few months. The Hotel Knickerbocker is likewise a center of perpetual activity.



It would appear that everything calculated to make life comfortable might be obtain on Times Square, but one may range the square over without finding any grocery or butcher's shop.

It is estimated that fully 8,000 persons are fed at Times Squsre every night, including dinners and suppers. There is such a diversity of eating places in the squsre that one may sit at a counter and dine for ten cents or spend $1,000 on a meal. Any evening one may find persons from all parts of the world dining at the restaurants that surround the square.

Times Square never sleeps. Even at the city's quietest hour, just before dawn, when most good citizens are safely tucked under ths bedclothes, groups of stragglers ara coming from tha big all-night restaurants, cabs ara rumbling over the asphalt, and here and there big motor cars are whirling by.

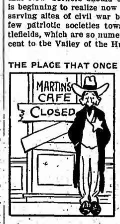
The busiest tima on the squsre, however, begins at twilight and closes at midnight. The business day of tha square officially ends about midnight, when the night branch of the bank in the squsre closss its doors.

LATEST SKYSCRAPER CALLED THE "CHIMNEY."

In addition to the "Flatiron," New York is to have another characteristically named building, for tha new structure at Wall street and Broadway has been christened the "Chimney." As in the case of the "Flatiron," the ownera selected a conventional name, but the new one has superseded it.

The "Chimney" deserves its name. For its height it is the slenderest building in New York, the piece of ground on wbich it standa being almost minute. As it is built of brick it preserves the simile to a striking dagree, for it towers into tha air like a gigantic cbimney. Through it, say those who hava suffered, will ascend the smoke of tha money which is burned in the street every day.

Wall street indeed is undergoing a metamorphosis. Once the fashionable street of little old New York, when the city was little but not old, it promises soon to become lined with skyscrapers, which so far it has escaped fairly well. In addition to the "Chimney," only a block or two away, the new 25-story building of the Trust Company of America is near completion. Besides being the tallest building in the district, it will contain one of the handsomest and most up-to-date banking rooms in New York.



RESERVATION FOR HUDSON SCENERY.

A movement wbicb will embrace the whole state is forming among a number of historic and patriotic societies witb the support of those persons who already have contributed to the building of the Palisades Park to create a reservation embracing all the points of scenic beauty and historic interest along tha shores of the lower Hudson. So much public interest has been aroussd by the endeavors of the Palisades Park commission and its frienda to oust the quarryman from Hook Mountain and to hasten the completion of the plans for tha greater Interstate Palisades Park, that other persons having interest in historic sites and scenic points not embraced in the Palisades Park territory have been encouraged to present thair interests to the public.

There has been talk appealing to the federal government, but this plan is not generally accepted, the feeling being that New Yorkers should do for themselves what needs doing. The public is beginning to realize now tbat while much bas been done in the way of pressrving sitea of civil war battles, almost nothing bas been done except by a few patriotic societies toward preserving revolntionary landmarks and battlefields, which are so numerous both in New York state and New Jersey adjacent to tbe Valley of the Hudson.

THE PLACE THAT ONCE WAS.

Another star bas fallen from the Broadway firmament. For a long time it has been fading, its brightness dimmed by the luster of other stars which sprang up aronnd it; but in its day—or night, it might be more proper to say—no light was brighter than "Sam" Martin's. There was no Rector's in tbe palmy daya of Martin's. Shanley had not penetratad the upper white light section. Browne's Chop House was then in Twenty-seventh street. The Metropole was not taken seriously as an eating place, and other restaurants in the vicinity were not to be classed with it.

Martin's, on Broadway and Fortieth street, was the place of gathering after theater houra for members of tbe theatrical and sporting fraternities. There, on any night during the season, might be seen men and women on tha top rung of the ladder of popularity and men who won and lost fortunes almost daily in various games of chance. Over a bird and a bottle or a broiled lobster, theatrical contracta of vast importanca to the theatergoing public were signed; at other tables financial and sporting deals were consummated.

But gradually trade began to fall off. Newer and brightar restaurants entered the field. For old times' sake a few old friends hnng on, but in tima they, too, drifted away for the brighter and gayer resorts and where fights were tha exception instead nf the rule. "Sam" was forced to assign. Part of his assets, amounting to several thousand dollars, were meal checks indorsed by more or less well-known actors and actresses. A city marshal is in charge and will run the place a few weeks more for the benefit of the creditors.

CULBERSON STIRS UP RACE QUESTION

TEXAS SENATOR DEFENDS THE PRESIDENT'S DISCHARGE OF NEGRO TROOPS.

Forakar Makes Reply and His Resolution on Brownsville Affair Goes Over to Monday—Other Doings of Day In Congress.

Washington, Jan. 4.—After two weeks of vacation the senate for two and a half hours Thursday and then adjourned until Monday. The session was devoted entirely to the further discussion of President Roosevelt's order dismissing the negro troops of the Twenty-fifth infantry for "shooting-up" Brownsville, Tex.

Senator Culberson of Texas, defended the order, bringing to its support many points of legal construction and justifying the action by many quotations taken in connection with the affray. He closed with an impassioned statement of the position of the south on the negro question, which he declared to be the most vital and dangerous problem before the American people. Today, he said, the condition of the black race with its ages of slavery, its ignorance and poverty, excited the deepest sympathy of the great body of the white people of the south.

Greatest Problem in South.

"But," he continued, "in spite of the past, with its conflicts and sacrifices, sorrows and destruction of life and property this problem is still the greatest with which we have to deal. It involves labor, education, suffrage, social order, civil liberty, self-government and the integrity and stability of the white race. The end no man can see. Southerners think deeply and prodigally on this race problem and its ultimate solution. Closing their eyes and looking down the ages, different views rise; sometimes the black race is deported; sometimes the races live together as now, in perfect peace, one subordinate to the other; sometimes they turn with unspeakable aversion to a blended, corrupted and inferior race; sometimes there is war between the races—which may God avert—bloody, vengeful war, war which seeks and can only cad in the survival of the fittest. In the midst of such awful possibilities human prophecies are idle, but any man or party who would create false hopes in these people deserves no place in the confidence or affections of the American people."

Senator Foraker Replies.

Senator Foraker replied briefly, expressing his intense interest in having speedy action on his resolution for a investigation. Senator Lodge proposed an amendment to this resolution, which has the effect of admitting the president's authority as commander-in-chief of the army to take the action he did, and of restricting the investigation to the occurrences in Brownsville. On motion of Senator Hale the resolution was given the right of way Monday.

Senator Bavoridge introduced his general child labor bill as an amendment to the District of Columbia child labor bill with a view of securing action during the present session, the district bill having already been reported. In the same connection he gave notice that he would speak on the subject on January 14. The same day he informed his friends that it was his intention to press the matter to a conclusion if possible.

Services Pension Bill.

Senator McCumber waived his right to address the senate Thursday on his service pension bill, but will speak on the subject later. He said that while he would make an effort to secure an immediate vote on the bill, he would endeavor to have it given the place of unfinished business when the senate calendar, which, if he should be successful, would secure to the measure a place of preference over other than appropriation bills and probably insure a vote during the present session. The bill provides a pension for all honorably discharged soldiers of the civil war over 62 years of age.

MRS. HEYL GETS DIVORCE.

No Contest by Husband—Division of the Property.

Milwaukee, Jan. 4.—Judge Halsey in the circuit court Thursday evening granted a divorce to Mrs. Clara B. Heyl from Jacob Heyl. There was no contest, Heyl having withdrawn his answer to his wife's complaint.

In the division of property by agreement the sum of $125,000 of life insurance of the defendant is assigned to Mrs. Heyl, as well as Heyl's half interest in the Schandein-Heyl library. Heyl relinquishes all claims against the Schandein estate, amounting to about $460,000, and also his fees as executor, amounting to approximately $60,000. Mrs. Heyl pays over to the defendant sums aggregating $300,000. Mrs. Heyl is awarded the custody of her two children, but at the age of 16 years they are to choose for themselves between the parents.

Denver, Jan. 4.—In his biennial message to the legislature Thursday Gov. Jesse F. McDonald advised the members to frame anti-trust legislation along the lines of the Ohio law, which, he said, has stood the test of judicial determination.

RIOT IN MOULIN ROUGE

CLUBMEN TRY TO STOP ACT BY MARQUISE DE MORNY.

Indecent Performance Causes Wild Demonstration Against Actresses and the Author of the Skatch.

Paris, Jan. 4.—There was a remarkable scene Thursday night at the notorious Moulin Rouge when Marquise De Morny, a daughter of the famous Duke De Morny, and a niece of Napoleon III., made her debut in an act called "A Dream of Egypt," written by herself in collaboration with Mme. Gauthier-Villars, the author of "Claudine" and other decadent novels.

The marquise, who in the divorced wife of Marquis De Belbeuf, has already achieved an unenviable reputation, and her heralded appearance on the stage brought out a storm of criticism. To this the marquise replied in a letter published Thursday afternoon denying that "her performance was intended to be suggestive, and insisting that she meant to give an artistic reproduction of the manners of ancient Egypt. In defending her appearance on the stage the marquise says: "This does not constitute a disgrace to the French aristocracy, and a distinguished scion of this aristocracy, Prince De Broglie, has been earning his living for some time past by conducting an orchestra in New York."

In spite of this statement a number of clubmen and Bonapartists got together and went to the Moulin Rouge at night, where they conducted a demonstration the like of which seldom has been witnessed in this city. For ten full minutes the curtain could not be raised on the new act owing to the pandemonium in galleries and boxes. When it finally went up, disclosing the marquise working out a cryptogram of the charm of life, after the fashion of Dalsace, and a beautiful Egyptian mummy in the person of Mme. Tilly, the din was redoubled. This was followed by a rain of missiles of every description, the audience even throwing bassocks and boxes at the women on the stage. In spite of this vociferous demonstration the two women persisted in completing their act, which is be disgustingly indecent as anything ever seen on the Parisian stage.

When the curtain was rung down the crowd rushed toward the box occupied by Mme. Gauthier-Villars and Mlle. Polaire, who is starring in a stage adaptation of "Claudine," and literally drove them from the theater.

RUSSIAN POLICE CHIEF SLAIN.

Gen. Von Der Launitz is Assassinated in St. Petersburg.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 4.—Maj. Gen. von der Launitz, prefect of police of St. Petersburg, was shot and killed by a young man at the Institute of Experimental Medicine Thursday afternoon.

Von der Launitz at the invitation of Prince Peter Alexandrovitch, duke of Oldenburg, had charge of the order, and was attending the consecration of the institute chapel. During the services, and while mingling with several high officials the prefect of police was approached from behind by a young man, who drew a revolver and shot him in the base of the brain. Von der Launitz fell forward and died in two minutes.

As the assassin turned to flee one of the officers present drew his saber, and cut him down and killed him. The identity of the assassin has not been established.

The assassination of the prefect of police was preceded by an attempt to kill Dr. Dubrovin, president of the reactionary league of the Russian people. A revolutionist attacked him on the street while he was returning home at night, firing several shots at him without effect.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 5.—The terrorists are reported to have condemned to death, among others, Grand Duke Nicholas, Premier Stolypin and two conservative members of the cabinet who lately received letters of warning.

MOLDERS ARE SENT TO JAIL.

Leaders of Milwaukee Strike Sentenced for Violating Injunction.

Milwaukee, Jan. 4.—Judge A. L. Sanborn, of the United States district court pronounced judgment Thursday evening in the cases growing out of the contempt proceedings which were brought, alleging violation of the injunction granted the Allis Chalmers company against the Molders' unions and striking molders. No fines were imposed, but in each case where found guilty the judgment was for imprisonment in the county jail. Michael Hartzbaum, chairman of the strike committee of Iron Molders' union No. 125, and John Lutz, treasurer of the strike committee of the machinists' union were sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for 30 days. William Henning, convicted of assault, was sentenced to 60 days in jail. Two pickets were given 20 days each and two other strikers were given sentences of 15 days.

Rules Against Mrs. Myers.

Kansas City, Mo., Jan. 5.—Judge John F. Phillips in the United States district court here Friday morning denied the application of the attorneys for Mrs. Aggie Myers for a writ of habeas corpus. Mrs. Myers is in jail at Liberty under sentence of death for the murder of her husband, and Frank Hoffman is in jail at Kansas City for complicity in the crime. They are sentenced to be executed January 10.

FINDS THE CAUSES OF CAR SHORTAGE

LANE LAYS IT TO ABUNDANT WEST BOUND TRAFFIC AT HEAD OF LAKES.

No Cars Available to Carry Fuel—Commerce Commission Says Combine of Coal Dealers Wasn't to Blame—Discussion of Remedies.

Washington, Jan. 3.—The cause, but not the cure, for the car shortage in the northwest and the consequent coal famine in North Dakota have been determined by the members of the interstate commerce commission participating in the recent hearings at Chicago and Minneapolis. Franklin K. Lane, who served as chairman of this investigating commission, Wednesday filed his report with the full commission and sent it to President Roosevelt, who ordered this inquiry.

Mr. Lane finds:

"It is a fair inference from all the testimony that the real cause of this coal scarcity in North Dakota was such an abundance of westbound traffic at the head of the lakes that cars were not available in the congested state of that terminal for the carrying of coal to North Dakota—a comparatively short haul for a low class commodity."

In his letter of transmission to the president, Mr. Lane says that the report will be followed in due course by the special recommendations of the commission as a whole as to what, if any, legislation, if any, may be deemed advisable.

Coal Combine Not to Blame.

Referring to the report that the coal shortage was due to the presence of a trust or combination between dealers in coal who fixed prices in the northwest, and refused to sell to "outsiders" and "irregulars," the report says:

"The commission has gained indisputable proof of an agreement between coal dealers to maintain prices and to boycott all who do not do so agree; but there is no evidence at all justifying the contention that this combination is chargeable with the coal shortage prevailing, or that the railroads were party in such a way to such a conspiracy."

The report of the commissioner first deals with the coal famine in North Dakota and presents the conditions of distress found to have existed in that state. Consideration of proposed remedies are dealt with extensively, particularly those which may be effected by the railroads or the shippers, as well as those including the evils arising from the present government privilege, warehousing in cars and from appropriation of cars by foreign lines. The remedies which the commission proposes to work out deal with rules and legislation touching the matters complained of as well as a proposed plan for a car clearing house, or car pool and reciprocal car demurrage.

Suggestions of Remedy.

In considering the evidence taken, Commissioner Lane says that a plan for a proposed car clearing house or a car pool between connecting lines, is regarded with favor. So fines were imposed, but in each case where found guilty the judgment was for imprisonment in the county jail. Michael Hartzbaum, chairman of the strike committee of Iron Molders' union No. 125, and John Lutz, treasurer of the strike committee of the machinists' union were sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for 30 days. William Henning, convicted of assault, was sentenced to 60 days in jail. Two pickets were given 20 days each and two other strikers were given sentences of 15 days.

STANDARD OIL IS BEATEN

JUDGE LANDIS DECIDES IT MUST STAND TRIAL.

Eight of the Ten Indictments Against the Trust Are Upheld by the Federal Jurist.

Chicago, Jan. 4.—The Standard Oil company must stand trial on all but two of the ten indictments returned against it. The contentions of the government were sustained in all but these two instances in the opinion handed down by Judge Landis in the United States district court Thursday, and under his ruling the oil trust will be compelled to fight against the imposition of fines under these indictments, which amount in all to $129,000,000.

The two indictments found to be insufficient are considered of minor importance and District Attorney Sims considers the ruling of the court a complete victory for the government, wiping out as it does the immunity hath appealed for by the attorneys for the Standard Oil.

It is expected that the cases can be brought to trial some time during the present term and preparations are being made by the district attorney for a hitter fight. With the last technicality wiped out the struggle will now settle down to a question of fact, the fight it is said, being whether the Standard Oil company was given a rebate by the railroads over which it shipped its oil out of Whiting, Ind.

The point raised by the defense was that the indictments were returned after the Elkins law had been repealed and before the new rate law went into effect and that therefore there was in existence no law under which they could properly have been indicted. Judge Landis held this reasoning to be without foundation, citing numerous cases and sections of the United States statutes in support of his position.

FLOODS THREATEN INDIANA.

Rivers Overflowing the Lowlands—Evansville in Great Danger.

Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 5.—Southern Indiana is threatened with the worst floods in years. Reports from all sections reports of great numbers of persons moving out of the lowlands. The Ohio river at Evansville is expected to reach a stage of 40 feet, which would be five feet over the danger line. Much suffering is already reported.

The Ohio river at Evansville Friday night stood at 37 feet, two feet above the danger line. Weather Forecaster Brand is quoted as predicting a stage of 40 feet and says the territory around Evansville will undoubtedly experience an enormous flood. For hundred miles along the Ohio river the lowlands are under water. A tugboat and a barge late Friday brought a half dozen farmers with their families and livestock from Green River bayou on the Kentucky side to Evansville, where temporary shelter was provided for them.

At Princeton, Ind., both the Wabash and Southern railroads are flowing the lowlands. The Patoka river also is out of bounds. Fifteen public schools were closed Friday on account of the high water. At Taylorsville, opposite Terre Haute, the Wabash river overflow caused over 100 inhabitants of that place to move to higher ground.

MANY LINES UNDER ONE MAN'S CONTROL

HARRIMAN'S MODERN METHODS OF COMBINING RAILWAYS ARE REVEALED.

Interstate Commerce Commission Learns of the Mammoth Consolidation of Railroad and Steamship Concerns Which He Has Effected.

New York, Jan. 5.—Modern methods of combining and consolidating mammoth railway systems and extending the principle of community of interest were delved into Friday in great length by the interstate commerce commission, which began in this city an inquiry into the so-called "Harriman lines."

From here the commission goes next week to Chicago. Several other cities may be visited before all the testimony that is desired is in the hands of the representatives of the government, whose object is to determine whether any of the railroads of the country are consolidated or combined in restraint of trade.

At Friday's hearing it was brought out and admitted that the Union Pacific Railroad company, the Southern Pacific company, the Oregon Short Line and the Oregon Railroad & Navigation company are practically under the same administration, Mr. Harriman appearing as president of each company, with only slight variations in the lists of other officers.

Controls Steamship Lines.

It was further shown that the Southern Pacific company and Union Pacific together hold a majority of the stock of the Occidental and Oriental Steamship company, and that Harriman interests are in control of the Portland & Asiatic Steamship company. All three of these lines run steamers between either San Francisco or Portland and the orient. It was said the Occidental is in liquidation but it still operates two steamers. On the Atlantic ocean, it was shown, the Southern Pacific owns the line of steamers running between New York and New Orleans, formerly known as the Morgan line.

The Union Pacific, by means of an agreement signed by Mr. Harriman and Senator William A. Clark, has a traffic arrangement with the San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake railway extending over a period of 99 years. This agreement was entered into in 1903, and by its terms the San Pedro cannot raise or lower its rates without the consent of the Southern Pacific company, which, it was stated, does not own one dollar of stock in the San Pedro company.

Union Pacific Is Managed.

The Union Pacific exercises joint control with the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railroad over the Chicago & Alton railroad. The agreement is that the Union Pacific shall have charge of the road one year and the Rock Island the next. This agreement, entered into by Mr. Harriman in 1901, has two years for a period of ten years from 1904.

The Union Pacific owns $28,123,100 of the stock, or 25.59 per cent, of the capitalization of the Illinois Central railroad.

The Union Pacific also owns $5,082,300 worth of stock of the St. Joseph & Grand Island railroad, which is $97.37 per cent of the whole.

The Oregon Short Line owns $38,646,600 worth of stock in the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad company, this being 18.62 per cent. of the whole.

Of Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul stock, the Union Pacific owns $3,636,000 worth, or 3.42 per cent. The company also owns $2,572,000, or 2.58 per cent, of the stock of the Chicago & Northwestern, $10,000,000 of the preferred stock of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, being 4.28 per cent, and $14,285,745, or 7.97 per cent. of the capital stock of the New York Central & Hudson River railroad.

Of these holdings by the Harriman companies the stocks of the Illinois Central, Baltimore & Ohio, New York Central, Chicago & Northwestern, Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe and St. Joseph & Grand Island, aggregating in value $103,293,745, have all been bought since July 1, 1906.

"Where did the money come from?" asked members of the commission.

In reply it was stated that the Union Pacific showed last July a surplus of $51,000,000. The Oregon Short Line declared a dividend of 30 per cent. on its stock held by the Union Pacific, and also contributed out of its general assets to the purchase money.

GAS CUT OFF AT CLEVELAND.

Explosion of Huge Main Leaves Ohio City Without Fuel or Light.

Cleveland, Ohio, Jan. 5.—As a result of the explosion of a big 16 inch main carrying natural gas from West Virginia to Cleveland early Friday near Akron, this city was entirely cut off from its natural gas supply.

Thousands of residences and business places were suddenly deprived of fuel and light, causing much suffering. Manufacturing plants depending on natural gas for fuel were in many instances closed down.

Three lengths of the big pipe submerged under water, about 35 miles southwest of Cleveland, exploded with terrific force. Mud and water were thrown 60 feet in the air, the concussion breaking windows in nearby houses. No one was injured.

New York Philanthropist.

Dr. Adelaide Wallerstein, rich, young and handsome, has turned part of her elegant New York home into a physician's office. Here she devotes about six hours a day to practicing medicine, all the income so derived going to her charity work on the east side of the city. Mrs. Wallerstein is accomplished and socially prominent, but has given up most of her society pleasures for her professional and charitable work.

Mark Twain's Neat Answer.

Eugene Ware, of Topeka, recently wrote to Mark Twain: "I picked up your last volume. I read it clear through from cover to cover; it was like a hot-salted flannel. I could not lay it down." From No. 21 Fifth avenue, New York city, Mr. Clemens answered back as follows: "Dear Mr. Ware: I am an old brass-hound, copper-riveted, fire-assayed Presbyterian, with 71 years' experience in unworldliness, and I don't understand your metaphor, but I know it was intended as a compliment and I make it cordially welcome."

Nails and Apples.

When our grandmothers were sick, when they were tired out, unable to work or sleep, when their cheeks became hollow, their rosy complexion began to fade and their eyes to lose their lustre, they were told that they required "more iron in their blood."

Instead of swallowing bottles of medicine, containing strong acids (to hold the iron in solution), they would simply stick half a dozen or more rusty nails into an apple, and eat it over night, remove the nails and, first morning, before breakfast, EAT THE APPLE.

This method was as a rule so successful, that physicians in Germany are now recommending a preparation made from apple pulp and iron, as an excellent tonic.

This only shows, that the nearer we approach nature the more apt are we to find remedies for the sick.

Mr. Zaegel, established as a chemist at Sheboygan, Wisconsin, for the past 23 years, has given this matter of using nature's remedies much attention and if any of our readers will write him, he will be pleased to send the names of the roots and herbs which, when mixed as directed, have been found an excellent remedy for Rheumatism, Constipation, Backache and Catarrh.

If you will mention the nature of your complaint he will also mail you a free sample of an extract he makes from these roots and herbs together with letters from people who have been greatly benefited by its use.

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Aid for Chinsss.

Minneapolis—The Minnesota Red Cross society is making an effort to meet the need of famine sufferers in China and has issued a call to the citizens of the state for contributions. Disastrous floods in China have rendered many peoplo homsless ond dire need is felt for food of every description. The United States consul at Shanghai has cabled the stato department that conditions aro continually growing worse and that many people aro actually starving. An appeal has been mado to President Roosevelt from a relief committeo of foreign consuls and prominent men in Shanghai for flour and food supplies. The Red Cross society has taken up the work of collecting supplies which will be sent to China, with the consent of congress, on government transports. At the time of the San Francisco disaster the Chineso minister received $222,000 for relief fund only a portion of which, however, went to the relief of the Chineso in San Francisco. All contributions should bo sent to Kenneth Clark, St. Paul, treasurer of the Minnesota branch of the National Red Cross society.

Good Showing.

A very material inaprovement in the state's finances is shown by the report of State Treasurer J. H. Block on the condition of the treasury at tho closs of business, the 31st. Tho report shows a cash balanco of $536,499.15, while the revenue fund shows an overdraft of $171,295.30.

While there is an overdraft in the revenue fund, it is much smaller than that of a year ago, being $171,295.30, as compared with $419,083.77 last year. Another item which shows tho relative condition of the finances of tho state is the amount of auditor's warrants outstanding. On Jan. 1, 1906, these warrants amounted to $1,715,683.08, which, added to tho everdraft of $419,083.77 in the revenue fund on that date makes a total deficit of $2,134,766.85. There has been during tho year a reduction of nearly two-thirds in the amount of auditor's warrants outstanding, the amount in the banks yesterday being $597,502.85. This amount, added to the revenue fund overdraft as it stood yesterday, makes the deficit $768,798.15, a reduction of $1,365,968.70 in the deficit during the year. As these warrants oro held by tho banks and draw interest at the rate of 4 or 4½ per cent, the saving in tho interest charge on this item is a very respectable sum.

A Busy Year.

There were 205 released from the workhouse on paying their fines.

A total of $29,156.50 wns received from the criminal and civil hranches of the court, of which $27,581 was contributed by the criminal branch. Of the money taken in $28,346.50 went to tho city treasury nnd $370 to tho state. There were 1,016 cases tried by tho police court judges and thero wero seven jury trials. Thero were 593 peoplo arrested on warraats and 6,820 summarily. There were 195 felonious offenses and 3,504 misdemeanors; 759 warrants were issued and 946 criminal complaints filed.

How to Retain Youthful Appearance of the Nose

Hsodsome noses are few and far hetween. Even those that ars well shoped are often spoiled hy lsrge pores and red or purple tips, and—worst of all—age, says the heauty doctor, shows first in the nose; so the woman who wonts to keep her youth and improve he looks must bs up and doing.

Masssge, which does such wonders for every psrt of the hody, is most necessary if the youthful appearancs of the nose is to be retained. Go ahout the massage gently, but thoroughly. Soap the nose once a day and scruh it with a cloth. The skin's texture will become finer and ths nose will keep young.

If the skin is very coarse and ugly and the pores larga (a vary common misfortuna among womsnkind alss!), treat your nose to a daily henzoinated bath for awhile. Use tepid water, into which enough henzoin has heen poured to make it milky. Benzoin is ona of the best skin tonics and astringents in the world; hut if you don't care for it, a daily nosa hath in pura alcohol or witch hazel will have very much the sama effect, nsed with discretion. The result of these haths should hegin to be apparent at the end of a week, anyhow.

If your nose inclines a little too much to one side, press it gently toward the other. If it is too fat, a little judicious pinching is bound to help matters. If it tilts skyward, press it gently down. If it droops too much, your task is harder. There is very littls to do except changing your natura or dressing so as to make the length less apparent.

Suggestions of Value to Hostess and Guests

A Conundrum Luncheon.

This scheme offers a pleasing way to entertain. For the centerpiece hava a large interrogation point of amall flowers—a tinsmith will maka tha form which may ha filled with sand and the flowers have the appearance of growing. The name cards ahould also ha question marks cut from cardboard. Any color that the hostess selects should be carried out in the place cards, and the covers of the little bookleta which contain the conundrums. For ornamentation draw the figure of an owl sitting on the hranch of a tree and a large interrogation point.

Specimens of the questione are given below, but of coursa each hostess will have others sha wishes to add:

When is it easy to read in the woods?—When autumn turns the leaves.

Why are tha western prairies flat?—Becausa the sun sets on them every night.

Which is the largest room in the world?—Room for improvement.

When is a cup like a cat?—When your teasin' it.

Why is it dangerous to walk abroad in the springtime?—Because the grass is putting forth hlades, every flower has a piatil, tha trees are ahooting and tha hullrushes are out.

Why is a washerwoman tha greatest traveler on record?—Becaose she crosses tha line and goes from pola to pole.

If you throw a atona that is white into tha Red sea, what will it become?—Wet.

What is the difference between a dnck that has ona wing and one that has two?—Merely a difference of a pinion.

A Miscellaneaus Shower.

In reply to the request from a correspondent for a "shower," we think by way of novelty thia schame prohably exceeda any "shower" yet bestowed npon a bride-elect. Twelve close friends made ont a list of things very useful hnt very often forgotten in the best regulated fsmilies. When tha afternoon arrived for the farewell tea, a huge paper sack was deposited at the feet of ths honored guest with the reqnest to look for anything ahe didn't have, or could not find. As the conple were going right to housekeeping the contents were purchased with that thought in mind.

The following are some of the objects: A paper of tacks, ball of string, paper of needles, lahels for hottles, hox of wax matches, lead pencils, clipping scissors, tack-hammer, corkscrew, memorandum pad and a hottla of ink.

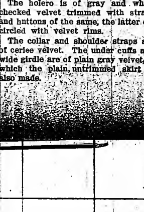
A Novel Hunt.

Perhaps the hostess had tha quaint old story of tha "Mistletoa Bough" in mind when she concocted this amusing entertainment, only a very much alive young woman was to ha discovered in the chest inatead of the hones of the little English hride in her wedding gown. Ten jolly girls were guests of the house for a week end party and ten equally jolly men received notes to appear at eight o'clock to participate in a hunt for "dear."

Not a girl was in sight and the hostess explained that a half hour would he allowed for discovering the whereabouts of each lassie.

And what fun they had, the girls had shown great ingenuity in stowing themselves away, hut all wera hunted down except the tallest, alimest girl in tha crowd; aha finally was hrought to hay inside of a man's nlster hanging on the rack.

A chafing dish supper completed a very merry evening.



The "hunt" was atarted hy a blast from a horn, and each hunter had to play fair, hagging only ona "deer."

MADAME MERRI.

A Point to Remember.

One of the main points to be recorded in relation to smart outer garments, whether they he the wrap proper or short tailored coat, is that the short sleeve is on ths wane. Three-quarter and full-length effects are growing more conspicuons daily, being handsomely finished with cuffs of their own or contrasting material.

Velvet Bolero

The holero is of gray and white checked velvet trimmed with straps and hnttons of the same, the latter encircled with velvet rims.

The collar and shoulder straps are of ceriee velvet. The under cuffs and wide girdle are of plain gray velvet, of which the plain, untrimmed skirt is also made.

CUPID TO THE RESCUE

By Florence Wilkinson

(Copyright, 1906, by Jossph B. Bowles.)

Eloise Guild, in her wheel-chair, nestled her fair head wearily against her cushions. All her world was abrosd to-day, in the glorious air and sun of one of Naw York's fall days.

Sha smiled wearily in greeting her friend, Katherine Clement, who appeared at the door, rosy amid her furs and laces, her hands full of red hothouse roses.

"I am always glsd to see your room the sams jolly old placs," said Katherine, hrightly, "it has never been changed since the accident, hss it?"

Never," rsplied Eloise, hitterly, "together, the room and I stopped living. You know, Katherine, I should not hs existing now if I had not heard the doctor's verdict—thst hig specialist, Dr. Von Humhuggsry —I don't attempt to rememher his name."

"What did he say, Eloise?"

"I overheard him tell msmma that there was no hops for me, and I resolved to livs in defiance of Dr. Von Humbug. It was my perversity, you see, that saved me."

"If you would only let me hring Dr. Farnsworth to see you!"

"I have no douht he is a most estimshle gentleman," sha replied, "hut excuss me from knowing any mora physicians."

"Ah, there he goes now!" exclaimed Katherine, suddenly psrting the draperies of tha window at which she sat. "Hugo Farnsworth. How well he drives! I lika to see a man liks him handle the lines."

"Describs him!" said Eloise, her facs reflecting faintly the glow on Katherine's features.

"Impossihle, categoricslly. Massive head, finely shaped; dark hair, tumhled; hrown eyes, serious at night. But this doesn't describe him, Eloise. You and he should just get together and then you would see. They say hs was all the rage in Paris when he studied there. You ask your father to send for him."

Upon consultstion with Mr. Guild Katherine decided that it would he hetter for Dr. Farnsworth to meet Eloise at first unprofessionally, and hnve a chance to study the case unhampered hy the relationship of doctor and patient.

In the seclusion of her chamher Eloise learned of the growing friendship between her father and tha hrilliant young physician, Dr. Farnsworth.

Her curiosity was finally piqued, till on a certain afternoon sha was brought down to the library where she sat in her wheel-chair before the fire.

"Eloise, I wish to present Dr. Farnsworth," said her father, and she shook hands with a tall, hrown-haired man, whose eyes looked searchingly into her own.

What happens sometimes, hut rarely, happened with these two. In their first long conversation they girdled the whole world of thought with light exchanges of comment and finally clasped hands on common territory. When Dr. Farnsworth left, they had already reached that stage of acquaintanceship whera hooks are exchanged with passagea marked in them hy one, for tha other's appreciation.

Dr. Farnsworth called repeatedly within tha next faw weeks, generally having the pretext of some errand.

As the weeks went hy Eloisa becama more ahsorhed in this new friendship. Here was a man of intellect who did not consider it condescension to exchange opinions with her. And she was no longar a helle whose friendship might he desirahle for a young physician. Ha was not attracted hy her heauty and high apirits, aa had heen men in the past.

"You think ma cold and philosophic," sha said to Katherine, after one of his calls, "and you admire me for it. Other people think me cold and philosophic, and disapprove of me for it. He takea my mind as ha would a man's. There is no sex in minds."

"But there is the owners of them and that amounts to the same thing," anawered the profoundly illogical Katherine.

As for Hngo Farnsworth, he, tha psychologist, the medical atudent, the materialist, found himsalf more profoundly moved than ha would have cared to admit, by the case of Miss Guild. He had heen interested scientifically at first, then intellectually, and, in the end, against his will, emotionally. It had not heen his purposa to hecome emotionally interested in Miss Guild. On tha other hand, it had been his purpose not to do so. He waa a man of amhition. He was well aware that Miss Guild's recovery, under hia attendance, would mean for him—distinction.

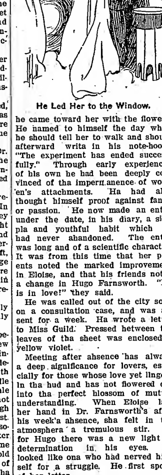
It was May. He came with a hunch of wake-robins which he carefully arranged in a low glass dish which he placed on a table by her aide. The movementa of his hands were gentle and dexterous. Eloiae watched them with pleasure.

"I have heen in the country—"

There had been an unusnal softened pathoa about Eloise's expression before he apoke, bnt at these simple worda of hia her eyes became misty.

"And have bronght yon wake-robins almost as white and fragile as yourself."

It was the first reference he had made to her ill-health, and all at once Eloise felt inexplicably happier. A burden rolled off her mind as of a question pending which has at last heen solved.



Eloise could scarcely have told of what they talked that afternoon. Hia speech was full of tha spring—of the green meadows ha had seen, and the smell of tha germinating earth.

And when he was ahout to go, he roused herself as from a delicioua dream. He came and stood by her, saying, as his hrown eyes looked down into hers: "I fear I have wearied you, Miss Guild, telling you of those woods whera I hope to take you myself soma day."

As he spoke, he lold his hand gently upon her hand, which rested, white as if carved from ivory, upon the arm of the chair.

"You will pardon me if for once I am professional," ha said; and hia tones were so tender that his touch still felt like a caress. When he had left, his tonch seemed still pulsing through her blood; his presence still filled the room when tha last rays of the May sun gilded the drooping leaves of the wake-rohin by her side.

As he strode along Central Park through the fast increasing darkness, Dr. Farnsworth was lost in deep thought. Ha recalled her eyes as they had shone with violet depth, and the whiteness of her forehead, when he came toward her with the flowers. He named to himself the day when he should tell her to walk and should afterward writa in his note-hook: "The experiment has ended successfully." Through early experiencea of his own he had been deeply convinced of tha impermanence of women's attachments. Ha had also thought himself proof against fancy or passion. He now made an entry under the date, in his diary, a simpla and youthful habit which he had never ahandoned. The entry was long and of a scientific character. It was from this time that her parents noted the marked improvement in Eloise, and that his friends noted a change in Hugo Farnsworth. "He is in love!" they said.

He was called out of the city soon on a consultation case, and was absent for a week. Ha wrote a letter to Miss Guild. Pressed between the leaves of tha sheet was enclosed a yellow violet.

Meeting after ahsence has alwaya a deep significance for lovers, especially for those whose love yet lingera in tha hud and has not flowered out into tha perfect blossom of mutual understanding. When Eloise laid her hand in Dr. Farnsworth's after his week'a ahsence, sha felt in the atmosphera a tremulous stir. As for Hugo there was a new light of determination in his eyes. He looked like ona who had nerved himself for a struggle. He first spoke of her letter.

"It almost repaid me for the loneliness of ahsence," he said, "to get a written message from you."

"I do not feel that you were absent," she returned, "hut with me mora than ever."

Befora the smile in her eyes hia determination wavered. A level heam of sun fell through tha western window straight across her hair. Dr. Farnsworth atarted to draw the shade. Then he leaned to Eloise. "Coma with ma to the window and see tha sunset across the hills and the river."

"What do you mean? I have not been on my feet for a year."

"Do you know, Eloise, that you hava heen growing stronger every day?"

Again her eyes were raised to his, tender with candid surprise. He took her hand, not as one who entreats hut compels. "Lean on me and walk," he said.

She ataggered to her feet, her spirit fluttered upward with the exultation of a heliever in miracles. Aa she rose to her feet Hugo'a determination was swept away.

"It is too late now," he thonght, "I will finish even to the end."

At the window, held in his arms, her eyes blinded by the purple glory of the spring, she heard those words which comprise in the briefest compass all the beatitudes for the heart of a loving woman.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Published every Friday, at Sunbeam, Red Lake County Minnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Crookston is trying to join the coal famine crowd of suffers, but here is little more fortunate than the Dakota people, as they can get plenty of good wood a short distance out of them.

The official returns of the vote cast for the respective candidates from the different Congressional districts in the state were made public last week. Congressman Stevenson received 22,145 votes and Halvor E. Born 6, 490, Stevenson's majority being 16,655, being the largest majority received by a congressional candidate in any district in the state this year.

The American people in general indorse the action of president Roosevelt, regarding the Japanese's situation on our western coast, but it is a little humiliating to them to have his good intentions construed by the Japs as cowardice, on the part of this country of Japan. We would advise the little men of the slant eye to be a little careful about plucking so many feathers from the tail of the American Eagle, for she might cuff him with her wing, if they have to pay a cent extra for a lot of matches to pay the expense.

The new naturalization law is liable to catch some homestead ers napping if they don't keep their eyes open. Before making final proof the foreign born wife must be a citizen must post his application to become such sixty days before the term of the district court at which the same is to be heard. Thus if the time limit is in which proof is to be made be nearly expired, no opportunity will be given to make application for citizenship papers unless a special term of court is had. Any one not a citizen whose time to make final proof expires before next June will be required to commute. It does always pay to put off till tomorrow what can be done today, and if you have a friend that has a homestead tell him about this, and save him lots of trouble and expense, for if he intends to stay in this country the shoster he gets his citizens papers the better.

Occasionally a man gets dissatisfied with Minnesota. The milk is too yellow or the honey too sweet and he doubt like to have them flow over his land. Anyway he parts with his farm sells his live stock and other articles too numerous to mention and moves to Minnesota money and buys a farm which is today, and tomorrow is not or he thes Colorado and skedaddles around in the mining strizzling a strip so narrow that a cow couldn't jump in a field because she jumps over it Then he heals of to his old poks down to hunt the bar of gold on the rainbow, in the daytime he starves and bats out of his flesh and at night the skeeters nibble at his feet and the centipedes crawl on his face. When his money is gone he feels like he did on the first night he stayed away from his home. He yearns for good old Minnesota and the yeard sticks in his throat and chokes him until the tears come to his eyes. He would give a month's work to see the old cows standing at the bars on his old Minnesota farm and hear the dear little bleat of

AN HONEST GRAFTER

A Glimpse Into the Future of Municipal Ownership.

A Thumb Nail Sketch of a "Practical Politician"—The Profits of an All Around "Servant of the People, Who Seen His Opportunities and Took 'Em."

"Honest graft" will reach its highest level when, as predicted by the optimists, the principles of municipal ownership are accepted by New York and the city controls the trolley lines, the electric light and gas works and all the ferries as well as the waterworks and the police, the fire and the street departments.

Then such patriots as George Washington Plunkitt, for many years organization leader of the Fifteenth district in New York, will reap rewards of greater magnitude than they have ever been able to gather under the present order of things.

Perhaps you have never heard about Mr. Plunkitt's "honest graft" schemes. He told about them himself in a book published last year, which was introduced by a paragraph indorsing him as a "veteran leader of the organization," signed by its greatest chief.

Plunkitt was wise because there were some objectings to graft being made out of the city by men like him, and in the first chapter of his book he uttered a vigorous protest. "Blackmailin' gamblers, saloon keepers, disorderly people, etc.," he admitted to be wrong. That was "dishonest graft."

"But," he added, "there's an honest graft, and I'm an example of how it's done. I seen my opportunities and I took 'em."

Mr. Plunkitt's explanation of how he did these things will illuminate the possibilities of future municipal ownership days, if they ever come.

After elucidating his ways he was "tipped off" at various times by members of his party—the party in power—when new bridges, new parks, new streets were to be opened, so that he might invest in real estate likely to rise in price from the improvements contemplated, he says. "I haven't confined myself to land. Anything that's going to rise in value has been given a specific instance:

Learning that the city was about to repave a certain street and so would have several hundred thousand old paving blocks to sell, he was "on hand to buy," and he "knew just what they were worth." (Just a newspaper "tried to do him" and got some soluble men from Brooklyn and New Jersey to bid against him. Mr. Plunkitt's own words tell the story best:

"Was I done? Not much. I went to each of the men and said, 'How many of those 250,000 stones do you want?' One said 20,000, and another wanted 15,000, and another wanted 10,000. I said, 'All right; let me bid for the lot, and I'll give each of you all you want for nothin'.'

"They agreed, of course. Then the auctioneer yelled, 'How much am I bid for those fine paving stones?'

"'Two dollars and fifty cents,' says I.

"'Two dollars and fifty cents!' exclaimed the auctioneer. 'Oh, that's a joke. Give me a real bid.'

"'It's found the bid was real enough. My friends stood silent. I got the lot for $2.50 and gave them their share. That's how the attempt to do Plunkitt ended, and that's how all such attempts end."

It is hardly necessary, in the light of this authentic statement by "honest graft" workings, to attempt upon the intellect opportunities that would come to the men of the Plunkitt stamp to own the stream of municipal ownership to come true. Plunkitt says "most politicians who are reckoned of robbin' the city get rich the same way," he did:

"They didn't steal a dollar from the city. They just seen their opportunities and took them."

While in the legislature Plunkitt introduced the bills that provided for the bonding parks in New York, the Harlem River speedway, the Washington bridge, the 59th Street Viaduct, the 72nd street viaduct, additions to the Museum of Natural History and many other important public improvements. He is now a millionaire. Under the proposed municipal ownership bills, with city contracts to be let in the bulk of public utilities in New York and in most other cities in the politicians like Plunkitt, who at different times have been elected state senator, assemblyman, county supervisor and alderman by his fellow citizens, besides serving as police magistrate for one term, and who boasts of his record in filling four public offices in one year and drawing salaries from three of them at the same time, would find him a whole grove of proof hay trees.

Go Slow on City Ownership.

Public politics in America is plainly far beyond its present condition any large experiment in municipal ownership may be called a "little Brooklyn" with much safety. The cities naturally there is involved in the bulks of public debate with all due deference to our national administration the idea has been suggested that it would take more business out of private hands and transfer it to the slower methods of the public.—New York Press.

The Countess Tolstoi has always insisted on plotstering her husband's health, his property and his financial interests, and it is due to her that Count Tolstoi is alive to-day and able to give his genius to the service of the world. Countess Tolstoi has been an ideal mother to her thirteen children, of whom eight are still living. She taught her children Russian and English herself and completed their education by sending them to the best schools in Moscow, where her father, a Prussian army officer, had settled. The names with which she is associated in the world of letters are those of Tolstoi, Turgenieff, Dostoieffsky and Gogol.

He laid the matter before his employer dialing darticula streets on what a difficult matter it would be to operate the business without him. This claim was admitted by the employer, who inquired further:

"But, Chon, vat if you should die?"

Oh, then you would get alon without me," remarked John.

A TATTOOED EYE.

Good Results From a Delicate and Costly Operation.

An Irishwoman who owns a little stationery shop in the upper part of Manhattan frequently surprises customers with whom she falls into conversation over the counter by asking:

"Which of my eyes do you think is the blind one?"

The customer invariably exclaims that surely it is not possible that either eye is blind, for both are dark blue, sparkling and seem just the same. The shopkeeper, however, proceeds with the information that the left eye is quite without sight.

"That's my tattooed eye," she explains proudly. "It cost $1,000. I didn't pay for it, of course. A rich lady had it done for me.

"You never heard of a tattooed eye? Shure, I never did myself until I came to having one. It was after I was blown up by an explosion—oh, dear, yes, a terrible experience it was! I was living with the lady at the time as her maid. I had been with her five years, and she thought a heap of me, and it was at her house the accident occurred.

"When I lost the sight of the eye she felt bad enough, but when the bandages were removed and it was seen that a white film had spread over the eyeball she was terribly distressed.

"'It ruins your good looks entirely, Mary,' she said. 'You'll never get a husband looking like that. But I know of a physician who can make it look as good as the other, even if he can't make it quite. It will cost $1,000,' she says, 'but I'd have it done for you if it was $5,000.'

"So I went to a fine private hospital, and the doctor tattooed another iris and pupil in the white film. And he matched the blue exactly, now, didn't he? I could scarcely tell, when I looked in the glass afterward, which one I was seeing out of at all.

"Did I get a husband? It's my third, that I'm living with now."—New York Press.

The Color of Flames.

You have often noticed the many tinted hues and tints that rise in the shape of "forked tongues of flames" from wood burning in the grate. It is to no one, however, that you never have thought to inquire on the cause of the variegated hues presented for flames. To bring the matter quickly to the point, we will say that the many colors are the result of combustion among the different elements of the wood. The light blue is from the hydrogen and the white from the carbon; the violet is from the manganese; the red from the magnesia and the yellow from the soda, which are constituent parts of the wood.

SUGGESTS MUCH NEW LEGISLATION

AT HIS SECOND INAUGURAL THE STATES EXECUTIVE ADVOCATES TAXATION REFORM, LOWER FREIGHT AND TWO-CENT FARE.

State Department of Mines and Mining Proposed, and a Royalty Tax on Iron Ore Recommended—Reciprocal Demurrage Law Favored.

St. Paul, Jan. 9—The formal inauguration of John A. Johnson's second term as governor of Minnesota took place today at the state capital at a joint meeting of the senate and house in the hall of representatives. The oath was administered by Chief Justice Chas. M. Start, and immediately following the ceremony Governor Johnson read his message, in substance as follows:

Gentlemen of the Senate and House of Representatives:

The first paragraph of our constitution states that government is instituted for the security, benefit and protection of the people, in whom all political power is inherent, together with the right to alter, modify, or reform such government when the public good may require. It is not instituted for the protection of interests deriving their privileges from the sovereign power of the people; neither is it instituted to deprive any individual or any interest of any right which may obtain under the constitution. You are elected as representatives of all the people of the state to make such alterations and modifications in our laws as will inure to the domestic welfare, and I believe that at this session of the legislature you are given opportunities that seldom come to a law-making body. I hope and believe you will approach the office committed to your care with zeal and activity, and with the sole purpose and motive of doing that which is best for the commonwealth.

There is much cause for congratulation in the general condition of our prosperity. We have particular reason for felicitation in the financial condition of the state. According to the report of the state auditor there has been much improvement during the past biennial period. Economy by the legislature, followed by economical administration on the part of the executive departments, will bring a further improved condition in the near future.

TAXATION.

One of the greatest questions with which you will be called upon to deal is that of solving the problem of providing at least in some measure, a wise and just method of distributing the tax burdens of the people you represent.

From the birth of our state government we have had an unchanged system of taxation in the form of a direct tax upon real and personal property. The history of taxation in our state has taught us that taxes have not been equal and that the method has not been efficient. The cause has been in part the law and in part the application.

The state constitution provided that laws should be passed taxing all property according to its true value in money. Laws have been enacted with this idea in view, and yet we know that the taxation of all forms of property, while based in some measure upon valuation, has seldom or never approximated full value. Real property has been generally assessed at anywhere from twenty-five to fifty per cent of actual value; and tangible personal property at much the same ratio; while millions of dollars of invisible and intangible property has escaped taxation entirely because of the ability of the owner to evade his lawful tax burden.

It is not to be presumed that this or any other legislative body while able to devise a system of taxation or enact a tax law which is going to bring about in complete form the results commonly hoped for by all people compelled to pay taxes. The best that this body can do is to equalize as nearly as may be the burden of taxation and so adjust it that its weight will not fall too heavily upon those unable to bear it, and distribute the responsibilities in accordance with the privileges enjoyed under our government. We cannot escape taxation. Taxes are and must be levied for the purpose of government. During the year 1905 the total taxes levied in our state for all purposes amounted to $22,355,326.25, distributed in various ways for the carrying on of state, county, city, town and school governments. No law can be enacted by you which will in a very large measure reduce this burden of taxation, which was even greater in 1906 than in 1905, the total taxable valuation of the property of the state for 1906 being $914,000,000 in round numbers, as against $853,000,000 in 1905.

At the recent general election the people of Minnesota voted to modify the constitution and adopted an amendment giving to the legislature this wider latitude; and it now falls to you to justify, in some small measure at least, the opinion of the people that this action, both by the legislature and by themselves, was a wise one.

PERMANENT TAX COMMISSION.

I would most urgently recommend legislation providing for the establishment of a permanent tax commission, which shall be empowered to make a careful and scientific study of this question and report from time to time, both to the executive officers and to the legislature.

The commission should visit the several counties of the state annually, or at least biennially, and should be empowered to supervise the work of local assessors and boards, and provide rules to facilitate the performance of the duties of assessors and otherwise aid them in the work of securing equal and uniform assessments. Specially important service can be rendered by the proposed state commission in seeing that the tax laws made by this legislature are enforced strictly, uniformly and impartially, and that assessments are free from discrimination as between counties, local assessment districts and different parcels of property in the same district.

TAXATION OF IRON MINES.

Prior to 1896, the owners of iron mines in Minnesota paid a nominal tax of one cent per ton on ore mined and shipped, in lieu of all other taxes. The law, that of 1881, was clearly unconstitutional at that time and was repealed in 1897. Under this act, during the five years ending with 1895 the tonnage taxes on Minnesota iron mines netted a total of only $72,847.

Beginning with 1896, the mines have been assessed as other real property for direct taxation; the totals for St. Louis county, as equalized by the State Board of Equalization, being for the past ten years, approximately as follows: $5,900,000 in 1896, $4,000,000 in 1898, $16,000,000 in 1900, $30,000,000 in 1902, $42,000,000 in 1904, and $70,000,000 in 1906.

How inadequate even the assessment of 1906 may be is apparent from the estimates of the companies themselves who hold the mining properties as assets for capitalization. In 1902, when the United States Steel Corporation had much smaller iron ore holdings than at present, the officers testified in a chancery suit, as appears in a government report, that the corporation had in reserve in deposits of tested ore upwards of 700,000,000 tons upon which the officials placed a value of $1.00 per ton as the worth of ore to the company as material for conversion into merchantable products. Subsequent reports of the corporation and public statements of its recent president, Chas. M. Schwab, confirm this valuation and show, moreover, that the great bulk of this iron ore asset of the United States Steel Corporation is located in Minnesota. Since 1902 the exploration and acquisition of iron ore properties in Minnesota have proceeded on a large scale, until the present estimates of mining, financial and government authorities as regards the explored merchantable ore deposits in Minnesota are upwards of one and one-half billions of tons. It is, therefore, apparent that even the 75,000,000 valuation placed upon the iron mines of Minnesota by the State Board of Equalization in 1906 represents only a small fraction of something like five to ten per cent of the actual value placed upon the properties by the companies themselves for practical commercial purposes.

IRON ORE ROYALTY TAX.

Under the new constitutional amendment it is within your power, as it is your duty, to provide some system of taxation which will give the state at least an approximately fair share of its just revenue income from this great iron ore wealth. One step in the right direction, it occurs to me, would be an income tax on the royalties or mineral rights, which are not now listed for taxation.

An income tax of 5 per cent on the $6,500,000 of royalties estimated to have been received by fee holders of Minnesota from iron lands during the year 1906 would net the state treasury $325,000, or a 10 per cent tax would net $650,000.

A royalty tax, were the total thereof equivalent to 5 cents per ton on the present tonnage of 25,000,000 tons shipped from Minnesota mines in 1906, would net $1,250,000, or somewhat exceed the present tax revenue derived from direct taxation of tangible property. This royalty tax should go to the state treasury, and represent the total taxation of the intangible property or rights of mining companies and fee holders; leaving the direct realty tax, as now, for the support of local government.

As much of the inequality arising from the application of the tax laws is due to inefficient machinery for assessment, you may find the following change worth your consideration, namely, the abolition of the office of assessor in cities, villages and towns, and in their place establish either a tax commissioner for the county, or in the larger counties, a tax commission of three or five persons, to be employed annually with a view of the proper listing of property and the better equalization of existing values.

Taxation of sleeping car and telephone companies on a gross earning basis is recommended.

TAXATION OF EXPRESS COMPANIES.

Your attention is directed to the feasibility and propriety of making a change in the matter of the taxation of express companies. Our statute now provides for the taxation of express companies, based on 6 per cent of the receipts on business done between points in the state, after deducting the amounts paid to railroads for the transportation of freight within the state. This practically makes the rate of taxation of express companies 3 per cent, as the railroads are paid about 50 per cent of the revenue. Express companies do not include any proportion of the earnings or receipts on interstate business; that is, business which originates in and terminates outside of Minnesota, and vice versa, and business passing through the state. Railroads doing business in this state pay 4 per cent on a proportion of all inter-state and also on intra-state earnings, and I believe Minnesota is the only state where the statute provides for the collection of taxes on an earnings basis, to pay on the balance, after deducting the amount paid to railroads. Express companies should not be treated differently from other companies, and I believe it would be more practical to take the total earnings of the express companies and ascertain Minnesota's proportion of such revenue for taxation purposes based on the ratio of mileage in Minnesota of such express companies, which the mileage bears to the total operated mileage; or, in lieu of some such provision, adopt the excise plan obtaining in the state of Ohio with relation to sleeping car companies, to which reference has already been made.

LICENSE TAX ON CORPORATIONS.

Your attention is likewise respectfully called to the following resolution of the state board of equalization adopted Oct. 4, 1906, in favor of levying an annual license tax on corporations, with the spirit of which I heartily concur:

"RESOLVED, By the state board of equalization that the governor is respectfully requested to ask for the passage of a law by the next legislature fixing an annual license fee of, say, $10, for each and every corporation, whether local or foreign, doing business in the state of Minnesota, with a proviso that in the case of failure to pay said annual fee, the offending corporation be barred from the courts of this state, and their charter be considered annulled, said license fee when paid to be accompanied by the address of the principal office, the names of the officers and the amount of capital paid in of said corporation. The fees arising to be paid to state treasurer and be covered into the state general fund."

STATE DEPARTMENT OF MINES.

By reason of the vast interests of the state in mines and mineral properties, I herewith submit to you the advisability of organizing a new state department devoted to the subject and the creation of the position of state commissioner of mines, giving such official powers and duties similar to those of the commissioners of insurance, labor, railroads and warehouses, dairy and food, game and fish, or the superintendent of banks. To this department might be entrusted the enforcement of the state mine inspection and regulation laws, the examination of the mineral resources of the state school and other public lands, the protection of the state's interests in iron ore royalties and mineral contracts and leases, as well as the maintenance of a bureau of statistics and general information in regard to the mining industries and mineral resources of the state for the aid and use of the state legislative and various executive departments.

The fact that Minnesota today holds over one-half of the estimated iron ore reserve of the United States, and that our state school and other public institutions have greater mineral holdings than those of any other state in the Union show the propriety and public value of such department to the state, even if our past experience did not prove the necessity of additional state executive authority and machinery in the regulation and protection of its mineral interests.

MINERAL LEASES.

The state has a large area of land containing iron ore, and in the past has leased on terms out of proportion to just and proper conditions. The statute now provides that from all iron ore taken from state lands, the state shall receive a fixed royalty of 25 cents per ton, each ton to be reckoned at 2,240 pounds. In the light of the leases made between private parties this fixed sum is an absurdity, and should be changed without further delay. The average royalty paid by the United States Steel Company to the owners of land on the Mesabi range is more than 27 cents per ton, and upon the Vermillion range, almost 37 cents per ton. Recently this corporation has negotiated a lease with private parties at 85 cents per ton, with a contract to mine not less than 750,000 tons per year. An important lease still more recently has been made on the basis of $1 per ton royalty, and this is likely to be the Mesabi range basis for the future. In view of this condition, the state cannot longer afford to pursue the policy of disposing of its iron ore wealth at prices less than that paid to private individuals. I would suggest that the provisions of the law be changed, fixing a minimum royalty on state leases of not less than 50 cents per ton, and authorizing a board consisting of the governor, attorney general and the state auditor to dispose of mineral leases at public auction to the highest bidder without fixing a maximum price by law. Rather than to continue issuing mineral leases at the price now fixed by law, it would be better far to withdraw all state mineral lands from the market, and hold them for the future with a view of securing to successive generations a fair share of this rich heritage with which by nature we have been endowed.

RAILROAD LEGISLATION.

No problem with which you have to deal is of more vital concern to you and the people you represent than that of railway transportation, and a proper adjustment of transportation rates. Some idea of the importance of this question to the people of the state may be gathered from the fact that the total gross earnings of railroads within the state of Minnesota as reported by the companies to the railroad and warehouse commission for the year ending July 31, 1906, was $81,619,640.35. The gross earnings per mile of the railroads within this state were $10,283.28, and the net earnings per mile $5,109.90. The relative importance of this matter may be more clearly understood when we realize that the total gross earnings in Minnesota, being $81,619,640.35, is over fifty per cent of the estimated farm productions of 1906. The basis of our wealth is agriculture, and the total estimated agricultural products of Minnesota during the past year, including wheat, oats, corn, rye, barley, flax, potatoes, hay, butter, cheese, live stock, poultry, market garden, fruit and nursery products is approximately $160,000,000. In other words, it required more than one-half of the agricultural products enumerated to satisfy the transportation demands of railroad corporations within the state of Minnesota.

REDUCTION OF FREIGHT RATES.

The vast earnings of railway companies have been swollen by excessive rates of transportation, which have been much higher in our own state than in the state south of us, or in Canada, to the north of us. There is a general and just demand that the people be relieved from the extortion and the abuse of high and unfair railroad rates of transportation. In my biennial message to the last legislature, and in discussing this same question, I said that I believed there was a remedy in the establishment of a maximum freight rate that would be fair to the shipper, and not be a hardship to the transportation company; that the railroad and warehouse commission was clothed with proper legal authority to establish fair and equitable rates, and that this failure to establish fair and equitable rates was because of lack of aggressive administration rather than a lack of legal authority. I recommended at that time the appointment of a joint legislative committee to make a complete and full investigation of prevailing rates of transportation within Minnesota, with a view of establishing by law, a maximum tariff rate for transportation which might bear a reasonable rate of interest and profit on the investment, be fair to all parts of the state, and absolutely prohibit unjust discrimination between localities or individuals. Pursuant to that recommendation, the legislature appointed a joint committee which made an investigation of the prevailing rate conditions, and, as a result thereof, the legislature adopted a joint resolution directing the board of railroad and warehouse commissioners to proceed with a view to a reduction of merchandise rates within the state of Minnesota. During the past biennial period efforts have been made by the board of railroad and warehouse commission looking toward a reduction of the rates of transportation, resulting in a reduction on merchandise rates; a voluntary reduction by some of the railroads in the matter of coal and grain rates. I am satisfied, however, that absolute justice has not yet been done to the people of the state of Minnesota. During the past year, I caused to be made a complete tabulation of the prevailing rates of transportation between points on the several lines of railway within the state of Minnesota.

The recent rate reductions are in the right direction. Compared, however, with grain rates in the Canadian provinces to the north of us and with Iowa merchandise rates to the south, it is apparent that Minnesota freight rates are still at too high a level, and especially in view of the enormously heavy tonnage passing over Minnesota roads from the several northwestern states tributary to Minnesota distributing points.

A TWO-CENT PASSENGER RATE.

Hitherto we have dealt largely with the adjustment of the rates of transportation on freight. The time has come in our state when relief is also demanded in the matter of passenger rates. The current fare for the carrying of passengers now is three cents per mile. It is recognized that the average fare per mile paid by persons who travel on railroads does not exceed 2.3 per mile. A maximum rate of two per cent per mile should be fixed by law and fixed now. The public has demanded it; the public is right in making that demand, and the legislature should not defer actions.

ABOLITION OF PASSES.

The time has also come for some specific action in the matter of the enactment of law forbidding the granting of pass privileges by railroad corporations to people other than bona fide employees of railways and their families. Our state enjoys the peculiar distinction of having deferred action upon this matter until other states have taken the initiative. So insistent have the people become in their demand for this reform that all of the several political organizations have been compelled to recognize the justice of the demand, and have incorporated planks in their various platforms looking toward the abolition of the pass system in the state of Minnesota.

RECIPROCAL DEMURRAGE CHARGES.

For many years the railroad companies of Minnesota have made demurrage charges upon shippers without reciprocity. A reciprocal demurrage law, which will be fair to all parties is demanded by the public and should be enacted at this session of the legislature. If the members of this body need any further enlightenment as to the absolute necessity of prompt action in the passage of such a just and practicable measure, you will find it in the conditions of so-called car shortage which have afflicted the agricultural districts of this and neighboring states in the Northwest during the past ninety days. Even so flagrant have been the conditions that the general government felt compelled to visit this state with its force of traffic experts, hold hearings of shippers and carriers, and enter into an exhaustive investigation of our defective traffic facilities. As one of the chief remedies for the insufficient supply of cars, which has resulted in the loss of thousands of dollars to Minnesota wheat growers, and in some localities produced temporary coal famine, I suggest a reciprocal demurrage law, subjecting carriers to the same penalties for delay in furnishing cars as the carriers impose upon shippers for delay in loading cars. Under present conditions it is time that the state impressed upon public carriers the fact that a private corporation which seeks from the state a charter to exercise a quasi-public function is bound to perform that function to the best of its physical ability, and heed the public interest, and that its duty to the public is paramount to its duty to swell the already generous dividends to its stockholders by "ton-mileage" or other arbitrary economies.

INSURANCE.

Since the last session of the legislature the subject of insurance, and life insurance in particular, has occupied a conspicuous place in the public mind and will no doubt receive your particular attention.

Great evils have grown up in connection with this very important phase of our industrial life; extravagant salaries and commissions have been paid; ambiguous, deceptive and often fraudulent contracts have been sold; colossal accumulations have been secured by adroitly conceived plans and used for the benefit of favored individuals, or hazarded in the doubtful conflicts waged by captains of finance in the money centers of the country. That all this has not been followed by great disaster is due to the wonderful resources of our land and is not to the credit of those who have thus abused their trust.

During your deliberations upon this question you will be told that any legislation seeking to regulate life insurance is "paternalism"; that the companies are private corporations which should be left to manage their own affairs, and finally that the subject is so delicate and technical that if legislation is inevitable its construction should be left to those who by study and research have become expert upon the subject.

In February, 1906, a conference of governors, attorneys general and insurance commissioners was held at Chicago to consider and further the adoption of uniform insurance legislation. A committee appointed by that conference has given careful consideration to the subject since that date; its report will be before you and I bespeak for it your most earnest consideration.

BANKS AND BANKING.

According to the report of the public examiner, the state banks of Minnesota show during the last biennial period the greatest volume of growth of any such period in the state's history.

The number of state banks in operation increased from 325 to 427, a net gain of 102. During the same period the aggregate capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits increased from $11,410,533.04 to $13,414,249.45. The gross deposits had reached the sum of $64,392,858.79, an increase of 48 per cent. The total resources show a net increase of 38 per cent. During this two-year period, there has been no state bank failure, and only one temporary suspension, which resulted in a re-organization and the strengthening of the bank without loss to the depositors or other creditors. The total banking resources of Minnesota in July, 1906, including state and national banks, saving banks and trust companies, but not including private banks, amounted to $266,490,032.83. The total deposit increase in Minnesota's financial institutions, not including private banks and building and loan associations, is approximately sixty millions of dollars, or 40 per cent; this being without doubt the greatest deposit growth in both volume and percentage for any equal period in the state's financial history. The examination of banks subject to inspection by the public examiner has developed the fact that the demand upon our banks for commercial loans is becoming limited in certain localities. Under favorable financial conditions, such as the state is enjoying at the present time, the banks have a considerable amount of surplus funds. Under our present banking laws a state bank is not permitted to make a loan in excess of 15 per cent of its capital stock and surplus. First mortgage farm loans have proven to be a highly satisfactory class of investments, and probably no better or safe class of loans can be made by banks operating in farming communities. Under the circumstances I would concur with the recommendation of the public examiner that our banking laws be so amended as to permit of the making of first mortgage loans on improved farms located within our state equal to 25 per cent of the capital stock and surplus of the bank, all such loans to be limited to and not exceed 50 per cent of the cash value thereof; provided that no bank shall invest in that class of loans in the aggregate more than 60 per cent of its deposits.

PERMANENT SCHOOL FUND.

I desire to call your attention to one peculiarity in the law relating to the investment of our permanent school funds. The law now provides that loans to school districts for the erection of school buildings shall be at a rate of 4 per cent per annum, and at the same time provides that this fund may be loaned for the construction of ditches for drainage at 3 per cent per annum. It is not fair that the institutions for which this fund is created should suffer by this discrimination. It is hardly fair to provide a higher rate of investment for the schools of the state than for other purposes. We should not discriminate against the educational interests of the commonwealth; and either the rate of interest in one case should be raised, or in the other lowered.

STATE UNIVERSITY.

No one institution within our state is of so much importance as our state university. Its growth in the past has been phenomenal, and with the aid and encouragement which should come to it from the legislature its future possibilities are unlimited. Requests for financial aid for the construction of new buildings are not as large as during other periods, and are submitted to you with the suggestion that they receive careful consideration. It is a recognized fact that this institution has been handicapped somewhat by reason of financial policies which have hitherto made it impossible to pay adequate salaries by which men of recognized ability could be employed and retained in the institution, and from time to time we suffer the loss of some of our best teachers by reason of the inability to properly and adequately compensate them. Certainly Minnesota can afford to pay reasonable compensation for this class of service, and to provide means by which we can compete with any educational institution in the country in bidding for talent which would permanently endow our university.

Since the last session of the legislature the state university has fallen heir to a large sum of money known as the Elliott bequest, providing for a memorial hospital in conjunction with the medical school. This bequest has not yet been secured because its acceptance would involve a new policy and the board of regents decided that this could not properly be done without legislative sanction and approval, and the acceptance would necessarily be conditioned upon the legislature making provision for the future maintenance of the proposed hospital. Your attention will be officially called to this matter later. It is but right that you should know that the bequest, while urged for this specific purpose, will still be available for the use of erecting a memorial building of some other character. Inasmuch as it involves a large sum of money which can be used to splendid advantage at the university, I trust that the question will receive from you that consideration to which it is entitled.

LOGS AND LUMBER.

I am pleased to be able to convey to the legislature the information that during the past biennial period all settlements by the timber board of the state for timber trespass upon public lands have been in strict accordance with the law. Irregular settlements of preceding periods have likewise been considered, and a number of cases were placed in the hands of the attorney general with strict instructions to begin immediate and continuous prosecution of the cases with a view to the collection of all moneys to which the state is entitled under the law. The attorney general, in his prosecution of these cases, has secured from the supreme court an opinion sustaining the validity of the present timber trespass law, and it requires no amendment so far as it relates to punishment of offenders under the law. It has, however, some features which should be changed. The timber board should be given a wider range of authority in settling controversies and making adjustments by which the necessity of some law suits might be dispensed with. A change should certainly be made in that section of the act providing for a re-scale of state timber. Under the present statute provision is made for a re-scale upon a demand by the state auditor, and in such case he is required to serve notice upon the surveyor general, giving a description of the tract upon which a re-scale is demanded. The surveyor general thereupon appoints one of his deputies to act in concert with a state estimator, appointed by the auditor for this purpose, the two to make a re-scale of the timber embraced in the permit, and make a report of the same for record with the auditor. It is provided that in case both the deputy and the estimator agree upon the scale, the same shall be final and binding upon the state and the purchaser; and if it shall appear by the state re-scale that the first scale was practically correct, the state shall pay the surveyor general the sum of $5 for each day spent by his deputy in making such re-scale, in addition to all necessary expenses incurred by him in traveling to and from the land, and that in case of a material difference in the two scales, the surveyor general shall not be entitled to compensation for such re-scale.

PRIMARY ELECTION LAW.

It is hardly necessary to call your attention to the need of some very important modifications of our primary election law. Much opposition to the law as it now stands exists, and there is prejudice against a primary election at all because of the possibilities of abuse under our present system. It is urged, and not without some degree of reason, that the present primary election system cultivates perjury, fraud, deceit, misrepresentation, and a total disregard for our entire election system. Citizens called upon to declare their political affiliations feel that election judges trespass upon the constitutional rights of the citizen and ignore to some extent the very purposes for which the law was created. Candidates for office, recognizing the possibility of victory through the assistance of political parties other than the one with which they affiliate, encourage fraudulent and deceitful voting. This, however, is no excuse for the demand that the present law be repealed. I believe the present law works better results for the people as a whole than the old convention system, but it is not without its weaknesses, and some radical changes should be made in the present law to overcome some of the difficulties in the way of its successful operation. I believe the law would be improved by providing that political parties through conventions might be permitted to nominate two or more candidates to be placed upon the election ballot, and to allow the people to choose between these nominations. The present system of permitting any citizen to declare himself a candidate for nomination by the mere filing of a nomination fee suggests a possibility of having a totally unfit and unworthy man to become the nominee of the political party with which he affiliates. A suggestion worthy of consideration is that nomination for the primary election, or the right of a citizen to have his name placed upon the ballot, should be by petition only. The number of petitioners required should be sufficient to prevent frivolous candidates, but not so high as to bar worthy aspirants.

GOOD ROADS.

The subject of better highways and of making good roads is still prominent in the public mind, and much more interest is being taken along this line than heretofore. We have come to recognize that the improvement of our public highways means better and more economical transportation facilities. The amendment to the constitution proposed by the last legislature relating to this question failed of passage by reason of the failure of a large number of the people of the state to vote upon this question. There was some opposition to the amendment by reason of the fact that the proposed amendment imposed certain limitations upon the legislature. I trust that provision will be made for the submission to the people of another amendment to the constitution, and that restrictions heretofore contained in the constitution be removed. For instance, the legislature is now authorized to add to the state road and bridge fund by providing in its discretion an annual tax levy upon the property of the state not to exceed in any year one-twentieth of one mill on all the taxable property in the state. This limitation should be removed and the legislature should be permitted at its discretion to levy a tax sufficient to accomplish good results along the line of better highways. The provision now in the constitution that no county shall receive in any year more than three per cent, or less than one-half of one per cent of the total fund thus provided should also be changed by striking out that portion of it which provides that a county shall not receive not less than a certain amount. All of the legislative restrictions should be removed with the exception of a possible restriction providing maximum amounts. I believe the legislature understands the importance of this subject, and that further comment is unnecessary.

DRAINAGE.

The subject of drainage is one proper for your consideration at this time. Approximately 2,368,000 acres of the state holdings of 2,750,000 acres of school and state institutional land, which do not include 60,000 acres not yet patented to the state, are too wet for agricultural purposes. This large area is confined to thirty counties in northern Minnesota; 90 per cent of the land being in Roseau, Cass, Itasca, St. Louis, Aitkin, Lake and Cook counties. With this immense area of low lands which the state is able to reclaim at a comparatively small cost, it would seem to be an excellent public policy that the most advanced methods for their reclamation be adopted and that Minnesota co-operate with any satisfactory plan proposed by the federal government for drainage.

Under authority granted by Chapter 159, General Laws 1905, the state drainage commission, has caused a topographical survey to be made of state swamp lands. The report of this work will be submitted to you, and will show the number of acres of wet lands belonging to the state, their location, the feasibility and the cost of their reclamation by systematic drainage. This report will show that the average cost per acre for their reclamation will be $1.40 and that when drained the lands will become productive and their present value increased many times the cost of such drainage. It is a good business proposition that these lands be drained. It is unjust to other business improvements in these counties that the state's wet lands be allowed to stand as barriers in the way of progress. Increased activity along this line will compel the reclamation of thousands of acres of low lands now held by railroad and land companies, and the country will provide homes for those of our citizens now seeking homes elsewhere.

I am glad to be able to say that there is in Minnesota but one sentiment on the question of the wisdom of some plan of drainage, and I would urge liberality in appropriations to this end. I would also at this time call your attention to the plan now in operation in many of the other states by which the geological survey of the federal government undertakes to make a complete survey of the state, with perfect maps, important data, etc. For each dollar expended by the state, the geological survey appropriates an equal amount, and the result is eventually to secure a survey made along the most approved lines at an expense which would be prohibitive were the state to undertake the work alone. This matter is at least worthy of your thoughtful investigation.

UNIFORM DIVORCE LAW.

During the past year a divorce congress was held in the city of Philadelphia to which duly accredited representatives of the various states of the Union were gathered with a view of framing a uniform divorce statute relating to the annulment of marriage and divorce for adoption by the several legislatures of the various states in the Union. The case with which some states permit annulment of marriages and divorces has come to be an American scandal, and it is earnestly hoped that there will be a complete co-operation by all of the several states of the Union on this important question. At the congress named, Minnesota was represented by a duly accredited representative, who assisted in the preparation of a proposed uniform statute covering this question. Copies of this proposed statute will be submitted to this body, and your earnest consideration of the matter is desired. I trust that Minnesota will be among the first states of the Union to put herself right on this important question.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

I would call your attention to the merits of the advisory initiative and referendum. This permits the people of a state, county, city, village or town to express their views upon questions affecting their organizations and is fast gaining ground upon the theory that the duly elected officers are the servants of the people who elected them and will be guided by the expressed views of a majority. The advisory initiative and referendum is but a step farther than the right of petition, and is not binding upon their officers. The enactment of a law providing for an advisory initiative and referendum can be accomplished without a constitutional amendment, and I am firmly of the opinion that such legislation is desirable. There can be, I am sure, no valid reason against the submission to the people of a proposed constitutional amendment providing for a direct initiative and referendum. This would give the people an opportunity to vote on the question whether or not they want the right to instruct their representatives and also the further right to pass upon the laws enacted by their legislature. But whether or not you would care to go so far in this direction, I would urge your consideration of a plan for an advisory initiative and referendum.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP.

Public ownership of public utilities is fast becoming an accomplished fact in many of the cities and villages of the state. If a city, village or town desires to conduct its public utilities by and for the public, after having so decided by a majority vote, there can be no objection to allowing the municipality to raise the money necessary to purchase and operate in any way it sees fit. Under our present laws it is permitted to bond all the property of the community for this purpose. If, on the other hand, it can find persons who are willing to loan the money upon the property of the public utility desired to operate, pledging only the property of the public utility loaned on, there can be no objection on the part of owners of other and general property.

DAIRY AND FOOD DEPARTMENT.

In the field of production our greatest dependence is upon agriculture. In its several branches none has made greater progress in this state during recent years, than the dairy industry. Minnesota butter occupies in the markets of the United States a position in which it commands a decided premium over the product of any other state. This is due in no small measure to the progress made in elevating the standard of its butter by the department, and is shown in the fact that in six national contests, Minnesota has four times been awarded highest honors. Not only along dairy lines, but in raising the standard and quality of food products manufactured and sold in the state has the department excelled. The laws entrusted to this department for enforcement have been administered with the single purpose of accomplishing the ends sought by the legislature. The department has been governed by the policy, first, of rigidly enforcing the laws; and, second, to educate the dealer as well as the consumer to a realization of the necessity of complete co-operation in all efforts looking toward the sale and consumption of pure foods; and while our laws are recognized to be as fully advanced, and perhaps more so, than those of other states, there are some deficiences and some necessity for amendment to existing laws in order to make the work of this department still more effective.

In a report which will later be laid before you, this department recommends that the liquor law be so amended as to fix a standard for purity and to inaugurate a system of labels that will inform the purchaser the character of the liquid that he purchases. The paint provision of the present law is absolutely inoperative and affords no protection to the purchaser.

Standards for flavoring extracts ought to be established. The section of the law governing the manufacture and sale of maple syrup and maple sugar should be amended to prevent deceptive labeling; the law relating to labeling of substitutes of pure jellies, jams and preserves should be repealed, and a new law should require simply the printing of the formula in legible type. An effective patent medicine law should be adopted, requiring the labeling of all packages giving the formula of the product when it contains dangerous ingredients. A standard for ice cream should be established. The department should be relieved of the burden of proof when dealing with food products in which the ingredients are generally recognized and deleterious to health. Owing to the growth of the canning industry, a special law should be enacted giving the department supervision as to sanitary conditions, and fixing a standard of purity in the output of the canneries; and the national pure food law will be more effective if the legislature will make the Minnesota law as nearly uniform as possible to the national law. These recommendations are based on the best experience of the officers of the dairy and food department for Minnesota, and in them I heartily concur, earnestly calling your attention to the suggestions in the hope that beneficent legislation will follow.

STATE PRISON.

During the past two years the state prison twine plant has been materially enlarged; the output amounting during this period to twenty-four and a half million pounds, which was sold at a price amounting to $2,360,000. It is conservatively estimated that the farmers of this state have been benefited to the extent of at least three cents per pound, amounting to approximately $750,000, while the state at the same time has made a net profit of $410,000, thus yielding during the two years a net profit to the state and the citizens thereof of more than $1,100,000. The past two years have been the most prosperous and beneficial since the twine plant was originated. The product has given general satisfaction, and the demand is still beyond the capacity of the plant. In my message to the legislature two years ago, I recommended that practically all of the labor of the prison should be devoted to this industry. I renew the suggestion that the plant should be still enlarged so as to increase the capacity at least five million pounds annually. This can easily be done without additional appropriation from the state, except for the necessary buildings on the new prison site to be used for that purpose. With this increase the output would be 18,000,000 pounds per annum, and would nearly meet the requirements of the total average crop year in the state. The National Cordage Company, a subsidiary corporation of the International Harvester Company, has commenced making twine from flax fibre in this state for the evident purpose of competing with the state product. To meet this situation and to protect the state interests, the law should most certainly be amended to permit the sale of the prison-made twine outside of the state in order that we may meet any effort made by the twine trust to throttle our plan inside of state lines. I would also suggest that the law be changed so as to allow the sale of twine to dealers after March 1, reserving 500,000 pounds to fill small cash orders direct to farmers. With the large increase in the output, it will be necessary to dispose of a large amount of the product through the dealers of the state, as a prudent business man will not wait longer than February or March to secure his twine. He should be allowed to place his orders early enough to meet his requirements and that of his trade. The law now in force restricting the dealer to sell twine at one cent profit per pound is ample protection to the former, and fair and equitable to all concerned.

There seems to be a feeling upon the part of our citizens in favor of making farm machinery at the state prison to compete with the trust; that is, the manufacture of such machinery as is now not made in the state. I believe a departure could be made along this line which would prove of great advantage to the agricultural interests, and I would suggest that the management at least be authorized to investigate the feasibility with power to act. This does not necessarily require or need to carry with it an appropriation, as the necessary expense conservatively engaged could be met from the earnings of the state twine plant.

STATE SOLDIERS' HOME.

I would call your attention to the requirements of additional appropriations for the state soldiers' home in order that Minnesota may continue to discharge her debt to the veterans who gave their early years to the cause of the country in the preservation of the Union. Increasing age, disability and dependence mean that the number of veterans at the home and throughout the state who receive state aid will grow instead of decrease for the next few years. A total of 2,513 cases in which relief was provided through the agency of the relief fund were treated during the biennial period ending July 31, 1906, the average payment being $5.40. The last legislature appropriated $75,000 for a home for the mothers, wives and widows of soldiers. It was found that this sum would not build and equip the building contemplated, and $2,000 was borrowed from the soldiers' relief fund to assist in the work, while changes were made in the plans by which the cost was lessened. The board of trustees now ask for an additional appropriation of $60,000 to complete the women's building according to the original plans and to install an electric elevator. The building has been so far completed as to admit of its occupancy and the first woman to be enrolled is the mother of two Minnesota soldiers. She has just passed the century mark and were it not for the beneficence of the state she would now be forced to become an object of charity.

LIVE STOCK SANITARY BOARD.

Laws governing treatment of contagious diseases in cattle, hogs and horses have been vigorously enforced but there is, I regret to say, an alarming increase in diseases requiring special supervision. The executive officers of the live stock sanitary board report that there were killed for the year ending July 31, 1906, a total of 1,438 head of cattle because of tuberculosis and 606 head of horses for glanders. The law requires that the state shall pay three-fourths of the appraised value of animals killed under its terms, but limits the value of the animals to a reasonable maximum. Under the law creating a separate sanitary board there was a reduction to $19,000 of the amount given to the board for its maintenance annually, this amount being intended also to cover the state's share of the value of animals slaughtered under its provisions. I do not hesitate to say that the sum is wholly inadequate. There are now on hand over 750 claims approved by the board, representing every county in the state, for slaughtered cows and horses, aggregating $55,000, and which the state is under a moral obligation to pay. The board asks for $55,000 to wipe out this debt and also asks for an appropriation of $50,000 annually with which to eradicate tuberculosis in cattle and glanders in horses.

CONCLUSION.

By way of conclusion, permit me to add that I have every confidence that you will be guided and governed by a desire to do that which is best for the state. This commonwealth, with all of its moral, intellectual, and material advancement is, I am sure, as dear to you as to me. We have been chosen by the same people; we serve the same cause; we may differ in our opinions, but if our differences are honest ones, they will find adjustment with little difficulty. Whatever our political convictions, our duty is the same. We may have our obligations to political parties, and these obligations it seems to me will be best met and redeemed in patriotic service regardless of the demands of partisan service; that we will serve our parties best by serving the state best.

We live in a time when purely party considerations are being made to yield to the principles of good government, and in any conflict between the two our first duty is to the state and nation, and allegiance to a party organization a secondary matter. Let us strive to attain the highest ideals and reward the people who have reposed special confidence in us by honest effort which will make us worthy of the honors conferred upon us. In your every effort to bring about a healthier and better state of governmental affairs I pledge you the hearty co-operation of my office, and assure you, as well, that I will be glad to welcome any suggestion calculated to promote the prosperity of our people and the general domestic welfare.

AN IMPORTANT CASE

Patient Cured of Ataxia Gives the Entire Credit to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Mrs. S. C. Wellock, of 114 Cleveland Avenue, Everett, Mass., the wife of an employe in the government works at Chelsea, says:

"I had been troubled with nervousness for ten years and the disease kept growing on me. Then I learned that I was suffering from locomotor ataxia. I had terrible trembling in my right leg which would get rigid and when this happened in the street I had to stand still until it passed away to keep from falling. My right arm felt as if a thousand needles were pricking it. The sheet touching my knee in bed would nearly cause me to scream out with pain and both knees were so weak I could hardly stand.

"I had to use a cane and be helped about by my son. Then the pain began to settle in the calves of my legs and the muscles became numb and quivered constantly. The cords under my knees seemed to be drawn up tight and the terrible shooting pains in my legs would nearly drive me insane. My toes became numb and at times would prickle as if needles were being thrust into them. My eyes became dull and black spots floated before them. My heart was very weak.

"My attention was called to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I bought several boxes right away and soon felt relief. I was so pleased that I kept on taking them until they cured me entirely, and I have had no symptoms of the trouble for over a year."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Owes Double Allegiance.

Count Prosper D'Epinoy, who has been decorated in Paris by the British ambassador with the Victorian Order, is in the odd position of being a British subject and yet a Frenchman at the same time. He was born in the island of Mauritius some 65 years ago. The island, of course, is inhabited by a French-speaking population and once formed part of the territories of France. Both the count's parents being French, the count is regarded in France as a Frenchman, but being born under the British flag he is just as surely a British subject.

Comment That Stung.

The marquis of Lansdown, leader of unionist peers in the British parliament, speaks rarely but always with effect. He revels in grave sarcasm. On one occasion Lord Crewe, the liberal leader, made a speech on a subject which he desired to leave a matter for open voting among his followers. Lord Lansdown congratulated his friend on his eloquent speech. "I have followed it," he said, "with great interest, not only on account of the importance of the subject but also on account of the noble lord's judicial attitude. I admired his earnestness and eloquence, but what impressed me most was his impartiality." A pause. "Yes, until the last minute I did not know on which side of the fence his lordship was coming down."

French President's Doubts.

M. Fallières was until recently believed to be the only president of the French republic who had no double, but his counterpart has been found. The man who most resembles him physically is a respectable merchant of the Saint Honoré, who plays his part with decorum and dignity. He wears exactly the same kind of blue butterfly necktie with white dots as the president, the same kind of hat and exactly as daily cut a beard. And on his ponderous do is always accompanied by a friend who could easily be taken for the president's private secretary. Dignified and with measured steps the enviable double walks through the Faubourg Saint Honore and feels overjoyed at being saluted on all sides.

NEVER TIRES

Of the Food That Restored Her to Health.

"My food was killing me and I didn't know the cause," writes a Colo. young lady. "For two years I was thin and sickly, suffering from indigestion and inflammatory rheumatism.

"I had tried different kinds of diet, plain living, and many of the remedies recommended, but got no better.

"Finally, about five weeks ago, mother suggested that I try Grape-Nuts, and I began at once, eating it with a little cream or milk. A change for the better began at once.

"To-day I am well and am gaining weight and strength all the time. I've gained 10 lbs. in the last five weeks and do not suffer any more from indigestion and the rheumatism is all gone.

"I know it is to Grape-Nuts alone that I owe my restored health. I still eat the food twice a day and never tire of it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The flavor of Grape-Nuts is peculiar to itself. It is natural, not too sweet and has an agreeable, healthful quality that never grows tiresome.

One of the sources of rheumatism is from overloading the system with acid material, the result of imperfect digestion and assimilation.

As soon as improper food is abandoned and Grape-Nuts is taken regularly, digestion is made strong, the organs do their work of building up good blood cells and of carrying away the excess of disease-making materials from the system.

The result is a certain and steady return to normal health and mental activity. "There's a reason." Read the little book "The Road to Well ville" in pkgs.

VENTILATING A STABLE.

How It Can Be Done Without Draft and Cold.

To provide ventilation for a stable in a very cold climate it is well to have double windows. Make a wide frame and put one sash near the outer edge, and the other near the inner edge, leaving a dead air space eight to ten inches wide between the two. This arrangement will effectually bar out the cold and keep the warmth from passing out, for there is no more effective barrier for such purposes than perfectly dead air. The windows must be tightly fitted so as to prevent circulation of the air.

Put in about three of these double windows on each side and two on each end. Put in the same number of fresh air intakes, six inches in diameter, after the manner shown in Fig 1, and furnish each with a damper or cap so that it may be closed, or partly closed when the wind blows too fiercely from any quarter.

For removing the cold and foul air, says Montreal Herald, locate a flue where it will be least in the way. Build it in one corner, as shown in Fig. 2, by enclosing 12 inches on each side and making an opening 20 inches wide and 12 inches in height. Make this flue practically air tight, just as one would build a chimney and let it extend well above the highest part of the roof.

HOME GROWN FEEDS.

What Will Prove the Most Economical in Feeding the Cow.

The most economical feeds that I have been able to find for feeding dairy cows include corn, rye, peas, bran, clover hay and corn stover, writes a farmer in Farm and Home. The quantity will depend upon the size of the cow and should vary according to the amount of milk produced.

For the average cow, weighing around 1,000 pounds, and giving from two and one-half to three gallons milk per day, I find the following to be about the right amount for a dairy ration: Four pounds corn, three-fourths pound bran, 10-15 pound cow peas, 5-10 pound clover hay and all the corn stover that they will eat. Whenever I do not have the cow peas, I increase the amount of clover and add one to one and one-half pounds cottonseed meal.

I think cow peas one of the best and most economical feeds for dairy cows that we have. The cows like them better than any other dry feed, and they are rich in protein. I always try to raise enough peas to feed my cows a small amount during the winter. The only feeds I buy are bran and cottonseed meal.

My cows are fed in stalls and mangers similar to the Board's dairy stall, which is very satisfactory. In feeding, I think it best to be regular both as to quantity and time of feeding. Any increase or lessening of feed should be done gradually.

THE DAIRY.

Sunshine will make the stables sweet.

It is the cow that counts, not the name of the breed.

A thorough dairy cow milks close up to calving. She bangs on far better than the "scrub." This is the case where the well-bred makes only half the loaf.—Rural New Yorker.

You can't rub rust off your cans, pails and pans. Better get new milk things just as soon as they begin to show signs of rust.

Don't let the cows nor the young stock start to lose flesh this month.

BLOATED WITH DROPSY.

The Heart Was Badly Affected When the Patient Began Using Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. Elizabeth Maxwell, of 415 West Fonrth street, Olympia, Wash., says: "For over three years I suffered with a dropsical condition with heart being affected that it was due to kidney trouble. The early stages were principally backache and headache and finally down pain, but I went along without worrying much until dropsy set in. My feet and ankles swelled up, my hands puffed and became so tense I could hardly close them. I had great difficulty in breathing, and my heart would flutter with the least exertion. I could not walk for without stopping again and again to rest. Since using four boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills the bloating has gone down and the feelings of distress have disappeared."

No external remedy ever yet devised has so fully and unquestionably met these three prime conditions as successfully as Allcock's Plasters. They are safe because harmless, no deleterious drugs and are immediately upon scientific principles of medicine. They are sure because nothing goes into them except ingredients which are exactly adapted to the purposes for which a plaster is required. They are speedy in their action because their medicinal qualities go right to the part and relieving pain and restoring the natural and healthy performance of the functions of muscles, nerves and skin.

ANIMALS THAT SHED TEARS.

Travelers' Observations Have Proved That Weeping is Common.

Travelers through the Syrian desert have seen horses weep from thirst, a mule has been seen to cry from the pain of an injured foot and camels, it is said, shed tears in streams, says a writer in Harper's Weekly. A cow sold by its mistress to the butcher's young sokn ape used to cry from vexation. If Livingston didn't nurse it in his arms when it ailed him to. Wounded apes have died crying, and apes have wept over their young slain by hunters. A chimpanzee trained to carry water jugs broke one and fell to crying, which proved sorrow, though it wouldn't mend the jug. And, discovering their young drowned, have been moved to tears. A giraffe which a huntsman's rifle had injured began to cry when approached. Sea lions often weep over the loss of their young. Gordon Cummings observed tears trickling down the face of a dying elephant. And even an orang-outang when deprived of its mango was so vexed that it took to weeping. There is little doubt, therefore, that animals do cry from grief or weep from pain or annoyance.

OLD CAPT. CACK'S QUESTION.

Somewhat Pointed, But It Dangled Quick Intelligence.

Pierce Jay, the commissioner of banks of Massachusetts, at the American Bankers' association's convention in St. Louis, advocated a better accounting system.

"But above all," said Mr. Jay, in a discussion of his idea, "we want intelligence, if embezzlement is to be thoroughly put down. Systems are good, but intelligence is better, and the cashiers and tellers and bookkeepers and note clerks we want the same keen, quick intelligence that characterized old Capt. Hiram Cack, of Gloucester.

"Cack lay very ill. One day he got down-hearted, feeling that his case was hopeless.

"'I fear, doctor,' he said, 'there isn't much hope for me.'

"'Oh, yes, there is,' the doctor answered. 'Three years ago I was in your condition precisely. Just look at me now.'

"Cack, intelligent and alert, said quickly:

"'What doctor did you have?'"

ALMOST A SOLID SORE.

Skin Disease from Birth—Fortune Spent on Her Without Benefit—Cured Her with Cuticura.

"I have a cousin in Rockingham Co. who once had a skin disease from her birth until she was six years of age. Her father had spent a fortune on her to get her cured and none of the treatments did her any good. Old Dr. G—— suggested that he try the Cuticura Remedies which he did. When he commenced to use it the child was almost a solid scab. He had used it about two months and the child was well. I was there when they commenced to use your Cuticura Remedies. I stayed that week and then returned home and stayed two weeks and then went back and stayed with them two weeks longer, and when I went home I could hardly believe she was the same child. Her skin was as soft as a baby's without a scar on it. I have not seen her in seventeen years, but I have heard from her and the last time I heard from her she was well. Mrs. F. Engle, Burlington, N. C., June 16, 1905."

In answer for Georgia's small advance of 100 cents he has pretty well cornered her banking interests and has in keeping a goodly amount of her funds. The four banks of which he is president outside of the state of Georgia are situated in Florida.

What is Pe-ru-na?

Is it a Catarrh Remedy, or a Tonic, or is it Both?

Some people call Peruna a great tonic. Others refer to Peruna as a great catarrh remedy.

Which of these people are right? Is it more proper to call Peruna a catarrh remedy than to call it a tonic?

Our reply is, that Peruna is both a tonic and a catarrh remedy. Indeed, there can be no effectual catarrh remedy that is not also a tonic.

In order to thoroughly relieve any case of catarrh, a remedy must not only have a specific action on the mucous membranes affected by the catarrh, but it must have a general tonic action on the nervous system.

Catarrh, even in persons who are otherwise strong, is a weakened condition of some mucous membrane. There must be something to strengthen the circulation, to give tone to the arteries, and to raise the vital forces.

Perhaps no vegetable remedy in the world has attracted so much attention from medical writers as HYDRASTIS CANADENSIS. The wonderful efficacy of this herb has been recognized many years, and is growing in its hold upon the medical profession. When joined with CUBEBS and COPAIBA a trio of medical agents is formed in Peruna which constitutes a specific remedy for catarrh that in the present state of medical progress cannot be improved upon. This action, reinforced by such renowned tonics as COLLINSONIA CANADENSIS, CORYDALIS FORMOSA and CEDRON SEED, ought to make this compound an ideal remedy for catarrh in all its stages and localities in the body.

From a theoretical standpoint, therefore, Peruna is beyond criticism. The use of Peruna, confirms this opinion. Numberless testimonials from every quarter of the earth furnish ample evidence that this judgment is not over enthusiastic. When practical experience confirms a well-grounded theory the result is a truth that cannot be shaken.

MRS. JAMES McDONALD. CHOC

Bringing Up an American Daughter.

New York.—How Pastor Wagner's heart would rejoice could he take a peep inside the Waldorf-Astoria when the two pretty Stallo girls are there! The simple life at this conservatory of the very rich? To be sure! And, mind you, the two young sisters, 16 and 15, are the richest girls in their own right in all Cincinnati.

What's more, some day they will own a big slice of the Standard Oil company, somthing like $15,000,000 worth.

These two charming young girls, despite their great wealth, live according to rule. They rise by rule, eat by rule, study by rule, play by rule and retire by rule. Every moment of their time is regulated with the nicety of clockwork.

In a word, they are being brought up with the idea that great wealth brings great responsibilities, even for young women. And all their work and play is directed along these lines.

These two girls—cited as the picture of health and beauty—are the daughters of Edmund K. Stallo, Laura and Helena. Their mother died a dead. They are the wards of their grandfather, Alexander McDonald, a director in the great Standard Oil company and president of the Standard Oil company of Kentucky. He is Cincinnati's richest citizen, though he is as much in New York, at the Waldorf-Astoria, as he is out there.

Mr. McDonnld's wife, the young girls' grandmother, died three years ago. Their mother, Mrs. Stallo, only child of thn McDonalds, died when Helena was two years old. And now these two beautiful grandchildren are all that rich Mr. McDonald has left, and all his wealth will go to them, share and share alike. They have already inherited from their grandmother a million apiece. It is only a trifle of what is to come from their grandfather, who is their legal guardian by order of the New York courts.

Miss Laura is 16 years old, and Miss Helena is just 15. Both are beautiful brunettes, well-built, with rosy cheeks and flashing eyes and a wealth of dark, wavy hair. Their governess lays all of this to their simple mode of life.

Not that everything that money can buy is not theirs. They have horses and autos and private cars, travel in Europe or in the new world every summer in the most luxurious manner. They are in New York, as they have been recently, several times a year and a rich suite in the Waldorf-Astoria is always reserved for them. For here, as in Cincinnati, they must lead the simple life, says the New York World.

For them it is bed-time always at nine p. m. They rise in the morning at seven a. m., and breakfast is served on the dot at eight. No late hours, no parties, no theaters, no cards, no dances, no little club affairs on their daily schedule.

No play?

Why, certainly, but of the healthy, out-door kind. They ride and they drive and they run their automobiles when their lessons are done.

Their governess is their guide, philosopher and friend. She rules their work as well as their play. Breakfast over, their morning hours are devoted to study and to recitation. The governess instructs them in everything they are to know in a general way, and there are special teachers who come daily for music and the languages.

It delights their grandfather that both his wards are so musical. Both ploy the piano with ease and finished technique, and both show more than the average talent. They are at home equally well with guitar and mandolin, and their duets are a joy to the old man's big heart.

Their course of study is just what any girl in a public school would be expected to take. The list is laid down and adhered to rigidly, whether the girls like it or not.

Especially is attention given to the languages. The girls have been sent to Italy to study Italian under native teachers. They have learned French in Paris and German in Berlin and Munich. This plan of learning the foreign languages from their native beaths has proved highly successful. Miss Laura and Miss Helena speak the three languages fluently and with the most fascinating of accants. Though they speak so well they keep up the three languages regularly by reading books isid down in their regular curriculum.

Not Yet Ready for Society.

"We don't pamper our girls in the slightest," said their governess, proudly. "They will never come out into society nor will they be allowed to do so for at least two or three years more."

The governess didn't say it, but company at either the Waldorf-Astoria, or at Delray, Mr. McDonald's beautiful suburban home in Clifton, Cincinnati, is extremely limited. A girl friend in occasionally for an hour or so in the afternoon is about all that is permissible, according to Mr. McDonnld's ideas of the simple life for his carefully reared granddaughters.

Traveling is their greatest pleasure. And in this Mr. McDonald indulges them to the fullest extent. They have seen all of Europe; Egypt, with its pyramids and tombs and ruined cities is an open book to them. Last autumn they toured Mexico.

When his wife died Mr. Stallo turned his two tiny girls over to their grandparents. They grew into young womanhood knowing Mrs. McDonald as their mother. When she died here at the Waldorf-Astoria three years ago it seemed as if her place could never be filled, but Mr. McDonald stepped into the breach and resolved to devote the remainder of his life to the bringing up of his motherless granddaughters.

Gave Up Business Cares.

He began by retiring as quickly as he could from his business enterprises, retaining only the headship, without charging himself with heavy responsibilities.

"I want to devote as much of my time as possible," he explained to his friends, "to my motherless little granddolcen; they are all I have. We never had but one child, my daughter, the mothar of these little girls, and she has been gone these 12 years."

Mr. Stallo is the son of Judge J. B. Stallo, minister to Italy under President Clavaland. Ha lives here in New York at the Waldorf-Astoria, with his second wife, who was Mrs. Dan R. Hanna, wife of the son of the late Senator Mark Hanna. They were divorced. Mr. McDonald did not take kindly to his son-in-law's second marriage.

In London the two pretty Stallo girls stay at the home of Mrs. James McDonald, wife of the London representative of the Standard Oil and one of their nearest relatives. Mrs. McDonald is one of the smartest Anglo-Americans in all England and entertains lavishly, but in excellent taste. But none of this for her young guests. It is the simple life in London as it is here in New York or in Cincinnati.

Mrs. McDonald has just come over to pay them a visit and she has had much to say to a writter for the World Magazine concerning Anglo-American marriages and the American girl abroad.

"London Loves the American Girl."

"London loves the American girl," said Mrs. McDonald at the St. Regis, "but the American man—well, he is only tolerated. It would he hard for an Amsrican woman to have to choose between her own countrywomen and the English women for her friends, but if she is like ma she would love both.

"The American women are beautiful, vivacious, daring and most entertaining. They are excellent company and they are distinctive. The English women are quiet, reserved, probably not quite as pretty, but no less attractive, steadfast friends and ara themselves distinctive.

"The average American girl is hiase almost before the English girl is ready to leave school. The English girl never leaves her governess and home before she is 18, while at the same age the American girl has seen much of the world.

"Yet the American girl retains her vivacity and her interest in everything, and it is that one quality, I think, above all others that makes her so dear to the English woman. It is that quality that certainly wins for her the admiration of the Englishman, though at the some time it scares away his love.

"The Englishman admires the American girl. He likes to talk to her, to entertain her; but to marry her—why, that is a different matter. He doesn't understand her.

Natures Are Different.

"To trace the cause of the trouble in many of the international alliances between American girls and Englishmen that have turned out unhappily one would have to go the very natures are devoted to study and to recitation. The governess instructs them in everything they are to know in a general way, and there are special teachers who come daily for music and the languages.

It delights their grandfather that both his wards are so musical. Both ploy the piano with ease and finished technique, and both show more than the average talent. They are at home equally well with guitar and mandolin, and their duets are a joy to the old man's big heart.

Their course of study is just what any girl in a public school would be expected to take. The list is laid down and adhered to rigidly, whether the girls like it or not.

Especially is attention given to the languages. The girls have been sent to Italy to study Italian under native teachers. They have learned French in Paris and German in Berlin and Munich. This plan of learning the foreign languages from their native beths has proved highly successful. Miss Laura and Miss Helena speak the three languages fluently and with the most fascinating of accants. Though they speak so well they keep up the three languages regularly by reading books isid down in their regular curriculum.

Not Yet Ready for Society.

"We don't pamper our girls in the slightest," said their governess, proudly. "They will never come out into society nor will they be allowed to do so for at least two or three years more."

The governess didn't say it, but company at either the Waldorf-Astoria, or at Delray, Mr. McDonald's beautiful suburban home in Clifton, Cincinnati, is extremely limited. A girl friend in occasionally for an hour or so in the afternoon is about all that is permissible, according to Mr. McDonnld's ideas of the simple life for his carefully reared granddaughters.

Traveling is their greatest pleasure. And in this Mr. McDonald indulges them to the fullest extent. They have seen all of Europe; Egypt, with its pyramids and tombs and ruined cities is an open book to them. Last autumn they toured Mexico.

When his wife died Mr. Stallo turned his two tiny girls over to their grandparents. They grew into young womanhood knowing Mrs. McDonald as their mother. When she died here at the Waldorf-Astoria three years ago it seemed as if her place could never be filled, but Mr. McDonald stepped into the breach and resolved to devote the remainder of his life to the bringing up of his motherless granddaughters.

Gave Up Business Cares.

He began by retiring as quickly as he could from his business enterprises, retaining only the headship, without charging himself with heavy responsibilities.

"I want to devote as much of my time as possible," he explained to his friends, "to my motherless little granddolcen; they are all I have. We never had but one child, my daugh-

AN EXCITING WOLF HUNT AT CHICAGO.

SOUTH SIDE POLICEMEN ENJOY DIVERSION.

PAIR OF BOLD OFFICERS

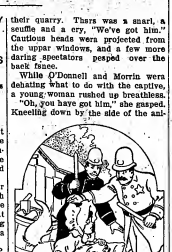
Dash Into Yard Where Little Girl Is Trying to Make Friends with "Savage Beast"—Young Lady Claims Animal.

Chicago.—An exciting wolf hunt broke the monotony of life in the Stanton avenue police station the other day, the police arriving like stage heroes, just in time to save a child from the "savage beast."

For 24 hours a large black timber wolf had been at large on the South side. The animal was captured in the back yard of a residence on Calumet avenue, while a little girl, supposing it to be a dog, was trying to make friends with it.

The rescuers were Patrolmen J. P. O'Donnell and D. D. Morrin. Morrin comes from the Black Hills, and boasts of having caught coyotes with his bare hands. He had an opportunity to display his ability in this line when the telephone bell of the police station rang and a hysterical voice over the wire announced that a big wolf was eating up a child.

Five minutes later the men arrived at the wolf "lair." The baby, dressed in a red coat, was toddling toward the animal, which, when it saw the two intruders, bristled and showed its teeth.



"Nice dogzie," said the little girl, as the animal, growling savagely, hacked into a corner. A frantic mother ran out at this moment, and, preceded by the police, seized the child in her arms.

O'Donnell and Morrin advanced cautiously, one of them holding a rope ready to lasso the beast. The wolf snapped viciously at Morrin, but its teeth caught in the man's glove. Then the animal battled for the basement. The occupants of the house, thinking that the wolf had come to devour them, fled in a panic upstairs.

In the gloom of the basement the wolf's eyes glowed like two jewels. Again the men pressed down upon their quarry. There was a snarl, a scuffle and a cry, "We've got him." Cautious heads were projected from the upper windows, and a few more daring spectators pesped over the back fence.

While O'Donnell and Morrin were debating what to do with the captive, a young woman rushed up breathless.

"Oh, you have got him," she gasped. Kneeling down by the side of the animal she began to stroka its sides. "Nice puppy, and was it lost?" she crooned.

"Nice Doggie," Said the Little Girl.

"I guess it was, ma'am," said the policeman.

"You ought to know better than to let savage wolves run amuck around other peoples' houses," came an indignant voice from upstairs.

The young woman, who had provided a muzzle for the purpose, attached it to her pet and led the wolf away. The animal barked like a dog and seemed glad to be found again. Tha owner is Thomas H. Pick, who caught the animal in the "Black Hole" of Colorado.

BOY PLAYS SANTA CLAUS; STICKS IN THE CHIMNEY

Lad Hauled Up Bruised and Penitent by Mother, Neighbors and a Clothesline.

Philadelphia.—Stuck in an old chimney for nearly two hours while his mother and neighbors fished for him with clotheslines, William Matson, a 13-year-old lad, of Shawmont, just above Roxborough, had the scare of his life while playing Santa Claus and was so badly scraped and shocked that his experience that he had to be taken to a hospital for treatment.

Matson, with his brother, Andrew; Matthew Conway, Joseph Miller and Harry Thompson, went to a vacant house in Shawmont avenue, near Ridge avenue, to play. The house was from nine to 14 years old, and when it was suggested that the time-honored dreams of Santa and the chimney be enacted William Matson clamored for the star part.

He got it, and, armed with an old satchel filled with straw, mounted to the roof of the old house, which has not been occupied for years. His companions waited on the floor below by an open fireplace, through which he was scheduled to make a triumphal entry.

Matson lowered himself boldly into the chimney, and began to slide down the ancient coat of soot with a joyous thrill. Half way down he stuck, and it became evident there was a bend in the chimney. His companions, instead of a joyous shout from the fireplace, heard a dismal cry from the wall above, and recognized their playmate calling wildly for assistance.

They ran to his home, a few doors away, and told his mother. She, thoroughly frightened, got a ladder and clothesline and a stout hook. Getting on the roof, she lowered the rope, and managed to get the satchel, but could not land the boy.

Then some men came out of the big crowd which had gathered in the street, and with several more ropes they managed to get a firm grip on young Santa Claus, and haul him to safety.

When the soot-begrimed, bleeding little figure was brought to daylight, he laughed. The youngster was so frightened that he almost fainted; his clothes were torn, his face and hands were bleeding and scraped and his frantic struggles to raise himself against the walls of the chimney.

He was taken to the hospital, where his cuts were dressed. Ha was then given a toole, a good wash and sent home.

KEPT HORSE IN BEDROOM.

Animal is Member of Grocer's Household for Two Years.

Cleveland, O.—John Radis, a grocer, on St. Clair avenue, was very indignant when the police haled him into court for violating a city health ordinance by keeping a horse in his house. Radic operates a grocery store and lives with his family in rooms in the rear. Until the other day his delivery horse occupied a room adjoining the sleeping apartments of the family with a door between and also one opening into the grocary store.

Sanitary Policeman Blackstock happened to walk into the store and detected the presence of the horse in the adjacent hedroom. Radic was arrested, charged with violating the health code, and fined $5 and costs. Radic waxed indignant over the alleged outrage.

"I keep my horse clean," ha assert ed. "He keen in house two years. My wife and me and my boys are never sick. In the old country I sleep in a room with six horses and I was always well."

Radic has temporarily moved his horse to a neighbor's barn. Being frugal, he has posted a sign in his house announcing a furnished room for rent. That is, the vacant stall.

Prince Subdues Wild Beasts.

Rome.—A thrilling affair has occurred at the exhibition grounds at Milan. In consequence of a dispute between the owners of two menagerie and the proprietor of a theater where the wild beasts were installed the lions did not receive their food for two days. They became very savage and fought so desperately among themselves that no one dare venture near their cage. Prince Wolfetta, who is a great lover of wild beasts, heard of the trouble and resolved to tame the animals. He accordingly took them in hand, and not only managed to subdue them, but forced them into separate cages.

Sporting Gossip.

In a recent number of Collier's Weekly Walter Camp, Yale's advisory football coach, picks his annual All-American eleven. Walter Eckersall, captain of this year's University of Chicago team, is the only western man named for a place in tha first lineup. Yale is given most of the glory, four Naw Haven men being given positions of honor, while Princeton was the only other team to get more than one man on the first eleven. The west comes in for a little more recognition when Marshall is named as an end on the second team and Garrels of Michigan as full back on the third aggregation. Seven colleges are represented on the All-America. Four Yale man, Forbes, Bigelow, Knox and Veeder put the Elis strictly in the foreground. The two Princeton players named are Cooney, of course, and Winter, the end. Cornell, Brown, Harvard, Chicago and Penn State each receive one place. The Harvard man to be honored was Burr, the big guard. One of the surprises by Mr. Camp was in his "overweight" of the Carlisle Indians. None of the redskins made either the first or second team. Two of them, Hunt and Exendine, got on tha third squad. The center position on the first team is given to Dunn, of Penn State, Hochenberg, center of the champion Yale team, getting the place on the second team. "Tad" Jones, of Yale, was, of course, second choice for the quarter back position, and E. Dillon came in for the remaining place at quarter on the third team. Annapolis has one place on the second eleven, which Dague, the end, fills, and the West Point team comes in for two lianes on the third aggregation. Mantle, of Vanderbilt, was recognized and put on the third team. Sizing up tha new game, Mr. Camp has the following to say:

"The changes have worked out to give us a game pleasing to the spectators, lessening the number of injuries, less exhausting on the players and admitting of greater strategy and less dependence upon brawn. It gives all kinds of men an opportunity. The light, native dodger is sought after, but he has not wholly supplanted the big, powerful man for the middle of the line. The heavy-weight, who may be too clumsy for other plays, may be just the bulwark for tha middle of the line, and need not be abandoned for the greater activity of the small man. A fast man and a good kicker are requisites; the passer is coming into greater demand; there must be one absolutely sure catcher of punts; there should be a drop or place kicker; the majority of the men must be good tacklers, and, altogether, any weakness of any kind in any department of the game is likely to prove disastrous to the team exhibiting that weakness."

E. H. Ten Eyck has been selected to handle the rowing interests at the University of Wisconsin. The new coach will take the place of Andrew M. O'Den, who resigned last year after the Poughkeepsie regatta. Edward Hanlon Ten Eyck will get $1,000 for his work, which extends from January 1 to June, though he may not. Ten Eyck comes from a rowing family, his father being John A. Ten Eyck, a rowing man, and the lad is the only American ever to take the "diamond sculls" at Henley. The son has received a broad water training, both from his father and at Philadelphia, where he has coached four and eight-oared crews. He was recommended by Coach Hutchins. Andrew M. O'Den is a racehorse in the far west. His resignation marks the end of a long Australian taught system at Wisconsin. O'Den was largely instrumental in awakening interest in rowing and maintaining it at the varsity and worked up the eastern trips year after year.

Interesting Bits of Gossip from Washington—Story of Lady Towmley's Part in Retirement of Durand Causes Surprise in Society Circles—Victory for "Uncle Joe."

WASHINGTON.—A sensation has been caused in official and social circles by the publicity given to the disclosure that the jealousy and earesam of Lady Susan Towsley had a good deal to do with the retirement from Washington of British Ambassador Sir Mortimer Durand.

In the innermost diplomatic circles tha Lady Townley affair has been known and discussed for some time. Now that it is in print the gossips are talking more freely, without disclosing additional incidents of interest, but confirming the almost intolerable conditions which merited Sir Mortimer's brief sojourn at tha capital. Several tangible reasons are given for his recall.

Aside from the influence of Lady Towsley, which is believed to have been considerable, in embarrassing the tenure of tha ambassador, tha British governmeat probably found it desirable, for political reasons, to place in Washington some one more in harmony with government officials here and with the plans of the two governments to reach an agreement upon questions left open and unsolved by the joint high commission.

Secretary Root in addition to his great aspiration to promote relations with Latin-America, desires to mark his administration of affairs of state by a settlement of the Canadian questions. Sir Mortimer gave no enthusiastic support to the proposition advanced by Secretary Root, and in which the Canadians acquiesced, to submit the questions to representatives of Canada and the United States, one commissioner to be appointed by each.

Sir Mortimer has been an obstacle instead of a help in the negotiations. He has been reticent and retiring. He was altogether out of harmony with his surroundings, and his government knew it.

Aside from the Townley incident there was nothing more natural under the circumstances than that the British government, desirous of maintaining an equal footing with other nations at Washington, should want some one here more in sympathy. Sir Mortimer's recall can be placed to no accumulation of incidents, political or well as social, which marked him not the popular diplomat his two immediate predecessors were.

"UNCLE JOE" WINS SOCIAL VICTORY.

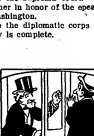
The president gave a dinner at the White House January 4 in honor of the speaker of the house of representatives.

Great significance attaches to this bit of news, for it means "Uncle Joe" has won out in the fierce feud waged between him and the chief justice of the United States supreme court over the question of precedence.

The speaker has kept away from White House dinners for two years, whenever there was any possibility of a conflict between himself and the chief justice, as to which was entitled to the seat of honor nearest to the president.

The rivalry has been a matter of great embarrassment to the president, who is always in a quandary about the seating arrangement when his list of guests includes both the speaker and the chief justice.

Whenever the diplomatic corps is entertained, the president places the secretary of state at his right, and the dean of the diplomatic corps on his left. Ambassadors and ministers are then distributed down the line, which would bring Uncle Joe, if he were present, to a place at the foot of the table.



"Uncle Joe" always manages to have a dinner of his own home the night the president entertains the diplomatic corps and the supreme court. The announcement that the president was to give a dinner in honor of the speaker was important social Washington.

The Cannon dinner came before the dinner to the diplomatic corps and the supreme court affair. So "Uncle Joe's" victory is complete.

CHASE OF GAINES IN A REVOLVING DOOR.

"Waltz Me Around Again, Willie," has been changed to "Run Me Around Again, Johnnie," as the result of a bloodless and ludicrous affray between Representative John Wesley Gaines of Tennessee and a man in Washington who is known as a publicity agent.

As the story goes, Gaines and the publicity agent engaged in an altercation in the rotunda of a leading hotel which concluded in an invitation to Gaines to "step out on the sidewalk and take a licklor." The alacrity with which the invitation was accepted somewhat discouraged Gaines' would-be antagonist, who led the way toward the street.

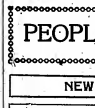
When a big revolving door leading into Pennsylvania avenue was reached the publicity agent's courage shrunk completely. Instead of passing into the street he calmly followed the door around in a circle, the irate Gaines at his heels. Around and around went the pursued and pursuer with ever-increasing velocity, each in his separate compartment, dragging his heels from under the door, following obstinately upon his footsteps.

As the compartments flew by the open space leading into the hotel and into the street loud words resounded only to be muffled a moment later as the compartment sped into the "round" on either side of the doorway. Finally Gaines is reported to have become exhausted from the chase, tha publicity agent vanished and when the police arrived Gaines was found alone on the field of battle with a smoking revolving door in both hands.

NO NICHE IN SENATE FOR ROOSEVELT BUST.

Whether the bust of President Roosevelt shall be set up along with the busts of others that have been vice presidents of the United States in the niches about the galleries of the senate chamber, or shall be forced to stand out in the loniiness of the main corridor, is an interesting question that will soon have to be disposed of.

Advices from New York are that the clay model of the bust to be executed in marble has been finished by James Earl Fisher, the sculptor.



The cutting of the bust will be finished this winter. The bust is intended to represent Mr. Roosevelt as one of the vice presidents. The theory is that each vice president shall be honored by having his bust in marble in the senate chamber, where it is possible to look down in solemn superintendence over the proceedings. When Mr. Roosevelt's bust is finished the only vice president that will not be represented by one will be Vice President Fairbanks. His will be executed later.

In view of the well-known antagonism between the president and various elements in the senate some might calculate that it would be a fine revenge to take on the president for his habit of shaking the big stick at the upper branch of congress to leave his bust out in the corridor and exclude it from the chamber.

Just how the matter will be settled it is too early to guess. The committee on rules will dispose of it. Possibly the bust of some one of the earlier vice presidents may be removed from its niche in the chamber and that of Mr. Roosevelt put in its place.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

NEW MEXICAN AMBASSADOR

Enrique Clay Creel, who has been named as ambassador to tha United States by President Diaz of Mexico, is an ex-governor of Chihuahua. He is known in Mexico as one of its most progressive and "American" business men. He is interested in banking, mining and street railways in northern Mexico, and is considered one of the wealthiest men of the country.

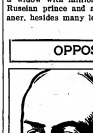
As a matter of fact, Creel is of American extraction. He is American in manner and appearance rather than Spanish. He is of medium height, wears a small mustache, and is frank and genial. He is the president of the Banco Minero, the leading financial institution in Chihuahua, and for years he has been the leading spirit in the Banco Central of the City of Mexico.

In 1901 Senor Creel was the guest of honor at one of the most important financial dinners ever given. Tha host was Charles R. Flint and the 25 guests who sat about the board represented aggregate fortunes of no less than $500,000. The dinner cost $60 a plate.

It was as a member of the monetary commission appointed by the Mexican minister of finance a few years ago that Senor Creel's fema as a financier began to grow international. The commission studied the methods of putting the finances of the republic on a gold basis, doing away with the peso of daily changing and steadily depreciating value.

Senor Creel has now given up all business interests and purposes to devote tha rest of his life to public affairs and the upbuilding of his country. Washington is his first diplomatic post.

MAY BECOME LADY KITCHENER



Alice Louise Carr Chauncey, "the most beautiful widow in the world," whose charms it is rumored, have captured the heart of England's most famous bachelor, Lord Kitchener, was born the daughter of a poor Hoosier merchant, who in later years was made United States pension agent in Louisville, Ky.

She was a pretty golden-haired child. Out of her father's salary as pension agent she had nothing to adorn her beauty but made-over gowns and turned ribbons, but when she was graduated in white ewise that she herself eat up nights to trim, she made a sensation.

Throughout her girlhood misfortunes crowded upon her. Just after she was graduated her father was taken ill and died. The little family was once more plunged into poverty, and not daring to face it in a big city, returned to Leavenworth, Ind. Shortly after the return, however, Alice was united in marriage to Mr. and Mrs. George Griffin in Louisville, who took her to Florida, and there she met Samuel Sloan Chauncey, a man of the world, a member of the New York Stock exchange and millionaire.

Before the end of the summer she had promised to become the wife of Mr. Chauncey, and at the beginning of the following year she was married in Christ church, Louisville. Happiness lasted complete for one year, when a daughter was born. Poor health afflicted Mr. Chauncey soon after, and he was obliged to travel from state to state, but without relief. He died at Colorado Springs, and his wife became almost a recluse. Finally, for the benefit of her daughter, she was induced to go abroad, and before she knew why she was heralded as the rival of the beautiful Mrs. George Law, like herself a widow with millions. In the train of her admirers already have been a Russian prince and an Austrian duke, Lord Rosebery, and now Lord Kitchener, besides many lesser personages.

OPPOSES UNION OF TEACHERS

Nicholas Murray Butler, who recently told the Chicago school board it was breeding anarchy by recognizing the Teachers' Federation and said that all unions among employes of the public are dangerous, is a noted educator and president of Columbia university in New York city. It has been said on good authority that on the event of either Senator Platt or Depew resigning Prof. Butler would succeed to the position.

A year ago Prof. Butler made a trip to Germany. His breakfasted with tha kaiser and suggested an interchange of professors which has since resulted in President Roosevelt sending an American educator to a Berlin university. Prof. Butler's observations led him to believe that Germany's recent wonderful advances are due to "fads" in the schools. He said:

"I believe in what are called the fads and frills—in other words, the teaching of physical culture, of manual training, of drawing, that which trains the hand and eye. There is a growing sentiment in favor of such education and within ten years the personnel of the teachers will be so changed that these branches will be generally adopted. They will be taught, too, not in a perfunctory or lackadaisical way, but by teachers who believe in them. It will, of course, be hard for those instructors who were brought up with the idea of teaching only certain things to follow this new idea."

Prof. Butler is 44 years old and the author of several leading educational works.

FRENCH GIRL ARTIST WINS FAME

Although she is only 25, and, one might think, altogether too pretty to be a real genius, no one can question the claim of Mlle. Lonlee Lavrut to be one of the most gifted women artists of the day.

Having won some of the highest honors in the French world of art, Mlle. Lavrut recently went to London to give an exhibition of her paintings, and, considering her great ability and the fact that she has the backing of the king himself, it is not surprising that her visit proved more or less of a triumph. Commissions for portraits of leading members of the fashionable world are coming in faster than they can be executed by the young French artist.

The story of Mlle. Lavrut's career is a truly wonderful tala. She showed an aptitude for drawing soon after she began to walk. When at school at the Legion of Honor establishment sha a mere child she was allowed to draw with crayons, and her studies attracted the attention of Jules Lefebvre, who was at that time one of the visiting professors. He watched the child, and finally, after much opposition from her family secured permission for her to attend the Julian academy.

After a thorough grounding in the elementary art there she was allowed to enter the ateliers of Jules Lefebvre and Robert Fleury. When 17 years old her first picture was exhibited at the Salon. She was kept hard at work in the studios of her two masters, until at 19 her picture at that year's Salon brought her an honorable mention. Then she established her own studio and began taking commissions.

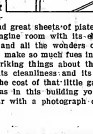
Adamless Eden Hotel Proves a Failure and Will Hereafter Be Devoted to Money-Making Purposes—Anarchist Berkman Opens Job Printing Office—Other Notes.



NEW YORK.—The Adamless Eden in New York does not pay? Tha Martha Washington, after a struggle of four years as a hotel for women exclusively, is admitted a failure and will be turned over to a lessee. This, after a record for a full house and a spotlessness of character that made other hostelries green with envy.

During its entire existence the list of casualties comprises two infants of the male sex (smuggled in by fond mammas when the clerk wasn't looking); one over-stimulated guest, one fira scare and one suicide.

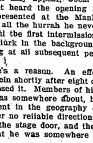
But, while prices have trebled since the opening and tha bill of fare has shrunken to a mere shadow of its former self; while tha staff has been reduced to the minimum requisite for law and order, the stockholders have received no dividends on the enterprise, which made an era in the city's history.

WHERE THE WHEELS GO ROUND.

New York never has been particularly shy about its public exhibitions of all kinds and long has held its reputation for showing lots of things that most persons would not agree were of public interest. But one of the most unusual "free shows" in town that are permanent is the comparatively recent one of inviting the public to view the engine room of a new Broadway hotel, and nleo the one in a mammoth office building. You have to go in search of the one in the hotel in question, but in the office building you are invited to look at the wheels go round through an attractive sign on a glass door in the arcade of the building that bears the legend, "Visitors' Gallery, Engine Room."

On opening the door there is a short flight of winding marble steps that lead you down to a little gallery all inclosed with polished white ties and great sheets of plate-glass through which you can see every part of the engine room with its shining array of machinlems, brass pipes, copper caps and all the wonders of the present-day electrical engines that do not seem to make so much fuss in their work as the steam engines did. In fact, the striking things about this exhibition is tha unusual quietude of the place, its cleanliness and its heat. On top of this one cannot help wondering over the cost of that little gallery, which must have meant a pretty penny. But as in this building you can also have, for the asking, a postal card souvenir with a photograph of the structure on it, money does not seem to count.

BERKMAN GOES TO WORK AT HIS TRADE.



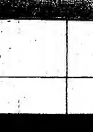
Alexander Berkman, the anarchist, who served 13 years in prison in Pennsylvania for attempting to kill Henry C. Prick in the strike in Homestead July, 1892, has opened a job printing office at 398 East Twenty-seventh street.

Berkmnn, who learned the printer's trade before his imprisonment, expects to get a good share of the smaller printing for the radical societies of the city. He will employ no help, as he true anarchist does not believe in work in the exploitation of another man's labor for his own benefit. As his business grows he will take partners.

"Some of my friends wanted me to open a big shop downtown and guaranteed sufficient work to keep five to seven men busy, but I would not do that," said Berkman; "all I care for is the return of my own labor. That will maintain me."

Since his release he has spent most of his time in New York, speaking frequently in weekly meetings of anarchists and aiding the cause of Russian revolutionists.

"ROOF WARDS" LATEST MOVE OF HOSPITALS.



"Roof wards," which represent the latest advance which medical science has made in the treatment of pneumonia and typhoid fever, soon are to be opened on the top of the main building of the Presbyterian hospital. The structure, radiating and various appliances are the gift of a patron of the institution, who made the donation simply as "A Friend."

Two other hospitals, whose superintendents have inspected the new roof wards of the Presbyterian, are making arrangements to install a similar equipment.

So successful was the treatment of pneumonia and kindred diseases on the roof of the institution last winter, under the direction of Dr. William P. Northrup, that it was decided to make it a feature of the hospital. Of the cases that were treated there only one death occurred, and that was due to double pneumonia, complicated with several other maladies.

This open-air sanitarium cost about $16,000. Although the trustees decline at the present time to make any announcement concerning the donor, it is generally understood that it was given by Mrs. W. E. Vanderbilt, Sr.

NEVER HEARS FIRST ACT OF OWN PLAYS.

Remarkable as it may appear, Oscar Hammerstein has not yet heard the opening act of any opera he has presented at the Manhattan Opera House. Amid all the hurrah he never has been in evidence until the first intermission, and he has continued to lurk in the background during the early evening at all subsequent performances.

Of course, there's a reason. An effort to locate Mr. Hammerstein shortly after eight o'clock the other night disclosed it. Members of his staff were sure that he was somewhere about, but being somewhat deficient in the geography of the house they could offer no reliable directions. He had been noticed at the stage door, and the chief engineer thought that he was somewhere in the cellar.

In an underground passage connecting with the stage by a narrow stairway the impresario was finally found. He was seated on a stool in a tin-plated room that was as severe as the frown upon his brow. Between his lips was a huge cigar, which he removed now and then in order to growl forth his pent-up feelings.

His language was not complimentary. He was talking of his enemies.

"The firemen won't let me while I have this," he grumbled, pointing to the big cigar. "And I'm lost without my after-dinner smoke. I can't smoke out in the front of the house, so I've had this little private smoking-room built. It's fireproof. The trouble is that I've educated myself to a cigar that keeps me smoking from eight until nearly nine o'clock. I'd like to hear one of my first acts, but I don't see how I can arrange it."

MONEY KINGS MUST ANSWER QUESTIONS

WALL STREET FINANCIERS WILL BE SUBPOENAED TO TELL OF HARRIMAN DEAL.

Commerce Commission Wants Light Thrown on Alleged Profit of Standard Oil Crowd in Union Pacific Stock Purchase.

Chicago, Jan. 11.—Fearing that William Rockefeller, James Stillman, president of the National City bank of New York, and other Wall Street financiers will flee to Europe to escape the jurisdiction of the interstate commerce commission in the investigation of the alleged $25,000,000 "rake off" in the gigantic Harriman railroad combine, orders were given by government attorneys in Chicago Thursday to have subpoenas served on the financiers to prevent them from leaving the United States.

Reports that Rockefeller and Stillman are planning to make a sudden and hurried departure to Europe and will be absent when the commission resumes its inquiry in New York in February, aroused the suspicion of attorneys to this sensational action.

Subpoenas will also be served in New York on H. H. Rogers of the Standard Oil company, Henry C. Frick, former partner of Andrew Carnegie; Jacob Schiff of Kuehn, Loeb & Co., and other financiers who, it is feared, may also make a sudden determination to leave the country while the investigation is in progress.

Disclosures Expected Soon.

The evidence on the charge that E. H. Harriman and the Standard Oil officials personally profited to the extent of $25,000,000 in the $110,000,000 deal by which the Union Pacific railroad purchased stock in competing lines is expected to be obtained by information gained from Rockefeller, Stillman and other financiers. Knowledge of this, the government officials believe, is responsible for the reported activity of the millionaires to evade the jurisdiction of the commission.

Orders were sent from Chicago to the government attorneys in New York to have the subpoenas prepared and served on the Wall street magnates at once. It is not known whether Rogers, Frick and Schoff have planned flights to Europe, but the government officials will forestall any move of that kind.

At the request of the commission in Chicago Thursday James H. Hilliard, third vice president of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road, was the first witness called. He was followed by Julius Kruttschnitt, director of maintenance and way of the Harriman system.

New York, Jan. 11.—Many financiers, Harriman and Frick were each shown the dispatch from Chicago announcing that counsel for the government had asked for writs of no creat to prevent them from leaving the country. TWO COMPANIES CONVICTED IN LICORICE PASTE TRIAL.

For Forming Illegal Combination and Being a Monopoly—Individual Defendants Acquitted.

New York, Jan. 11.—A jury in the United States circuit court Thursday returned a verdict in the so-called "tobacco trust" trial, which had been on hearing before Judge Hough for the past three weeks. The jury acquitted Karl Jungbluth and Howard E. Young on all the counts charging conspiracy in restraint of trade and combining to control the licorice paste industry but found the MacAndrews & Forbes company and the J. S. Young company guilty on two counts, one of forming an illegal combination and the other of being a monopoly.

The corporations named, which were the defendants with Jungbluth and Young, were acquitted of the charge of conspiracy.

Counsel for the defendant companies at once moved for an arrest of judgment and Judge Hough will hear arguments on the motion next Monday.

The cases were prosecuted for the government by Special Assistant Attorney General Henry W. Taft. The evidence was largely documentary, the government having in the presentation of its evidence introduced over 275 exhibits, consisting of private letters passing between the various defendants relative to licorice paste business. These letters the government found in the defense to give up after a fight which was carried to the United States supreme court in Washington.

A fine of not more then $5,000 or less than $1,000 can be imposed for each violation of which the corporation has been found guilty.

TERRIFIC GAS BLAST IN A CROWDED HALL

ACETYLENE PLANT EXPLODES AT CARD PARTY IN WILMINGTON, ILL.

Two Men Are Killed; Many Persons Hurt—Victims Are Blown Through Wall While Trying to, Repair a Leak.

Wilmington, Ill., Jan. 12.—Two men were killed and more then a score of persons injured, including several women, by an explosion of acetylene gas at a card party in Woodman's hall here.

Blast Shakes Town.

The explosion imperiled the lives of 60 other persons, blew out the rear of the building and shook the town, shattering glass in the windows of houses blocks away, and caused the residents to rush from their homes in a panic. Following reports of predicted earthquakes the citizens of the town believed the shock was the preliminary of a great seismic disturbance.

The dead: F. H. Pope, grocer, aged 55; Edward Schreiber, aged 65. The seriously injured: Rev. Fr. Dwyer, Catholic priest; Miss Rose Heek, aged 23; Mrs. James Cavanaugh, arm broken in two places.

The acetylene gas plant was leaking and the two men killed went into a rear room to make repairs.

The explosion followed, and the two men were blown through a partition.

The accident happened while a card party was in progress in the hall. More than 70 persons were present, a large proportion being women. Many prominent families of the town were represented in the little social gathering where all was joy and brightness. It was a merry crowd, mostly young people, who laughed, joked or made love in the secret language of the eyes as they played cards.

Try to Stop Gas Flow.

A strong smell of gas had sent two men of the party into a rear room where the gas plant was located. Suddenly the the babble of mirth and clatter was drowned by a mighty roar. The building shook, quivered and reeled under the shock, and every person in the room was buried to the floor by the concussion. At the same instant the bodies of two men crashed through the wall between the main hall and the gas plant room, and fell in the midst of the prostrate card players.

The rear wall of the building flew outward, and plaster dropped in great chunks from the ceilings and walls, cutting and bruising those in the hall, and a stifling smoke filled the room.

The explosion was followed by a chorus of screams, cries and groans, and those least injured struggled to their feet and started in a mad rush for the stairs.

Many of the women were trampled on and severely injured in this panic. Men who retained their presence of mind aided the injured to escape from the building.

CONFESSES GOX MURDER

PRISONER IMPLICATES HARGIS AND EX-SHERIFF CALLAHAN.

John Smith Declares They Ordered the Killing and That They Paid Him $100.

Jackson, Ky., Jan. 12.—John Smith, one of the men under indictment for the murder of Dr. B. D. Cox, has made a confession, which is now in the hands of Commonwealth Attorney Jewett. Smith names ex-Judge Hargis and ex-Sheriff Edward Callahan as moving spirits in the crime. He says that Hargis and Callahan induced him to enter the conspiracy against Cox, making promises to see that he was acquitted and to give him a job. He declares Callahan gave him $100 after the killing, saying "Jim" Hergis sent it to him.

According to the confession, three men shot Dr. Cox. Smith's words in describing the murder are:

"So Judge and Ed put us three—Spicer, Abner and myself—under the stairs back and sent Elbert Hargis to stand on the corner. When Dr. Cox left his office and started home and got opposite where we were in hiding, Elbert Hargis was to call him so we would know it was Dr. Cox.

"And when Dr. Cox did start from his home and came down just across the street from us, Elbert Hargis called to him and said: 'Is that you, Doc?' and he said: 'Yes,' and stopped, and all three of us fired at the same time, or so near the same that it was all one report."

Conditions are easier here since the writ of prohibition was granted, preventing Special Judge W. M. Carnes from presiding in the trial of ex-Judge Hargis, charged with the assassination of Dr. Cox. Judge Carnes left for Frankfort Friday to explain to the court and counsel the reasons in making rulings in favor of Hargis. His said if he was prevented from trying Hargis he would go into the cases of William Bitton, John Smith, John Abner and Elbert Hergis, all charged as accessories before the fact.

It is almost certain that troops will be sent here to prevent rioting.

SENATOR HOPKINS DEFENDS SMOOT

ILLINOISAN SAYS SENATORS CAN BE PUNISHED ONLY BY COURTS.

Blount Case Cited as Precedent—Utah Man Declared Qualified for His Office and of a Personal Character Above Reproach.

Washington, Jan. 12.—The first speech in defense of the right of Reed Smoot to a seat in the senate was delivered Friday by Senator Hopkins of Illinois.

Sebetor Hopkins took the position that senators were not federal officers to the extent that the senate could pass upon their qualifications and eligibility or could impeach them for high crimes or misdemeanors. If a senator was to be punished, it must be done by the state or federal courts. Only, federal officers, he maintained, were impeachable, and this impeachment must be for acts committed as such federal officers.

The precedent cited was the unsuccessful effort to impeach Senator Blount of Tennessee, charged with treasonable correspondence with a foreign nation, more then 100 years ago. The conclusion then, Senator Hopkins said, had never been reversed, and that was that the senate had no right to try the case, as Senator Blount was not an officer of the United States.

Personally Above Reproach.

Referring directly to Senator Smoot, he continued: "It is conceded by the chairman of the committee on privileges and elections that Senator Smoot possesses all of the qualifications required of him in the constitution itself. It is also conceded, not only by the able chairman of this committee, but I think by all who are at all familiar with the case, that Senator Smoot is not a polygamist, that he has never married a plural wife, and has never practiced polygamy; that he is a man in his personal relations as son, as husband, as father and citizen, above reproach; that in all of the relations of citizenship he has lived a singularly pure and upright life."

A general service pension bill was passed by the senate Friday which, if it becomes a law, will give to survivors of the civil end Mexican wars who have reached the age of 62 years, $12 per month; $15 will be given 70 and $20 to those 75 years of age.

Lively Scenes in House.

Washington, Jan. 11.—The house late Thursday took on its accustomed air of the closing days of the Fifty-fifth congress, commonly known as the "War congress," when altercations between members were frequent.

Late in the afternoon Mr. Gaines of Tennessee and Mr. Madden of Pennsylvania were only prevented from meeting in a personal encounter by the intervention of other members. Mr. Gaines was making a speech on his bill to "dock" members' pay for absence, when the house end began being twitted by both sides of the chamber, to his evident embarrassment, that he had dodged Mr. Madden's having absent from the house 95 per cent. of the time.

Mr. Madden thundered:

"Any man who charges me with being away from this house 95 per cent. of the time tells an untruth."

Mr. Gaines started down the aisle from his seat. "No man can tell me I lie!" exclaimed Mr. Gaines.

Gallant Charge by Gaines.

When order had been restored Mr. Madden again arose. He had been cautioned by the chair that if words against the rules to address a member in the second person, he must have his words, saying he would speak in the "fourth person." He said:

"The charge of the gentleman from Tennessee that I am away from this house 95 per cent. of my time is a deliberate falsehood."

With a rush Mr. Gaines reached the center aisle of the chamber, making directly toward the gentleman from Pennsylvania, insisting as he went that no man could call him a liar without personel chestisement.

The rush of Mr. Gaines upon his adversary brought a dozen members before the speaker's desk. Messrs. Ollie James of Kentucky, Taylor of Alabama, Bell of Georgia, Williams of Mississippi, the minority leaders, and Stafford of Wisconsin, grabbed Gaines who, resisting vigorously, was borne back to his seat.

The friends of Messrs. Gaines and Madden engaged in an effort to bring about a reconciliation in which they were successful. Both gentlemen apologized. Mr. Madden stated upon the chamber and the two clesped hands amid loud applause.

Railway Labor Bill Passed.

By a vote of 70 to 1, the senate Thursday passed a bill providing that railway employes engaged in the handling of trains shall not work more than 16 consecutive hours, which period is to be followed by ten hours' off duty. The one negative vote was cast by Senator Petrus.

The bill provides under certain contingencies and in case of accident the time fixed may be exceeded. The enforcement of the law is given to the hands of the interstate commerce commission and the federal courts, the penalty provided being a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000. The act is to apply to trains doing an interstate or foreign commerce business.

American Idealism.

Since my first arrival in America I have held that the moral spirit is idealistic and that the average individual American is controlled by idealistic impulses. Those who contradict me can not have sounded the depths of the philosophy of Ralph Waldo Emerson, or they have not read the speeches of Abraham Lincoln, and considered their far-reaching effect on the American people. Without a great character nothing can be moralstriding than the way in which he combined reality and the loftiest ideal with a thoroughly practical capacity to achieve that ideal by practical methods. This society seems to give him a far-sighted, almost superhuman vision, which enabled him to pierce the clouds obscuring the sight of the keenest statesmen and thinkers of his time.—Baron Speck von Sternburg, in Forum.

COSTLY PRESSURE.

Heart and Nerves Fail on Coffee.

A resident of a great western state has given strong testimony regarding with a comprehensive brevity that is admirable. He says:

"I am 56 years old and have had considerable experience with stimulants. They are all alike—a mortgage on nerve energy and ruinous interest. As the whip stimulates but does not strengthen the horse, so do stimulants set upon the human system. Feeling this way, I gave up coffee and all other stimulants and began the use of Postum Food Coffee, therefor a reason. The beneficial results have been apparent from the first. The rheumatism that I used to suffer from has left me. I sleep sounder, my nerves are steadier and my brain clearer. And I hear testimony also to the good value of Postum—something that is lacking in coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. There's a reason. Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Coal is Found.

Owatonna.—A large vein has been discovered on the Albert Kasper farm two miles south of this city. The vein is five feet or more in width and one hundred feet under ground. The coal is said to be valuable for fuel purposes, being a species of soft coal, but still resembling anthracite.

Some years ago, owners of land near this farm discovered coal on the banks of Straight river, which flows a short distance in the rear of the farm. The coal was found at the foot of a hill and close to the surface of the water, which washes against it at this point. A small quantity of the coal was tested and found to be good. Since that time, however, no further developments have been made and the discovery has been allowed to go.

A short time ago, Mr. Kasper engaged well diggers to drill a well near his house, and this work later was started. The work went along smoothly until the drill was about one hundred feet below the surface, when it was found that some hard substance was being encountered by the drill. An investigation immediately was ordered by the owner of the machine, Edward Austin, and the substance was brought to the surface and carefully examined. It then was discovered that a bed or vein of coal had been struck by the drill.

Samples of the fuel were then taken to the Kasper home and tested and burned in the stove where they were found to burn well. Samples also were brought to one of the local blacksmith shops and were used in the forge.

Blackduck.—A wood-working factory for this city is now an assured fact, according to C. W. Jewett, who with his associates has been negotiating with a large Minneapolis concern which has had several points in view for some time for such a plant.

St. Cloud.—Frank C. Taylor, twenty-two years of age, sentenced from Hennepin county in Dec. 1906, to the state reformatory for an indeterminate sentence for grand larceny, was one of the three pardoned by the board. With Taylor it was a case of a good boy falling in with bad company for the first time. Then came a burglary and he admitted the crime of stealing a watch he had with his first drink of liquor.

St. Joseph—John Philips, charged with intoxication and threatening to shoot out the lights if they did not obey him, has been sentenced to thirty days in the county jail. According to the testimony Philips went home in a hilarious condition, and with a revolver knife in his hand drove his wife and eight children out of the house. He threatened to kill them. The children range in age from two to ten years.

Mankato.—One of the leading dairy farms that is supplying milk to patrons in the city this morning marketed six high-grade Jersey cows and one steer at the local packing house, and when they were slaughtered the federal inspector, Dr. Herrr Dahl, condemned the six cows, as they were found to be badly infected with tuberculosis. The lungs, livers and in most cases the udders were found to be a mass of tubercles.

Winona.—Considering the efficiency of the city's fire department, the report of the fire department of fire losses during the last year is considered large. The total loss approximated $136,225, as against $10,682 for the preceding year.

St. Paul.—The insurance order of Knights of Honor must materially revise its rates and plan of insurance in order to protect its policy-holders, according to a report issued by insurance Commissioner O'Brien.

Brainerd.—William Buchite, charged with manslaughter in shooting Lewis Kling by mistake for a deer on Nov. 24, was found not guilty.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

IS NOW IN FULL SWING AT THE STATE CAPITAL.

Several Important Measures are introduced Including a Two cent Railroad Fare.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 7—Harmony prevailed at the caucus of the republican members of the senate at the Ryan hotel this afternoon, and the dove of peace was also present at the caucus of the republican representatives of the house, which this evening at the capitol. The senate caucus was practically in charge of Senator E. E. Smith, of Minneapolis, and there is every indication that the combination which worked in the senate two years ago has been reorganized this time, the members being brought into line by each one in the combination giving the appointment of some employee. The senate state agreed upon was as follows:

Senator A. Langum, of Preston, secretary.

W. H. Alton, of St. Paul, assistant secretary.

W. A. Simonton, of Glenwood, reading secretary.

Frank Holcomb, of St. Paul, enrolling clerk.

E. A. Nelson, of Hallock, engrossing clerk.

James H. Ege, of Minneapolis, sergeant-at-arms.

Rev. J. W. Eckman, of Dunnell, chaplain.

The action of the house caucus this evening was simply a ratification of agreements hatween steering committees arrived at during the day. The slate went through without a hitch, as follows:

Speaker, L. H. Johnson, Minneapolis.

Chief clerk, Adolph E. L. Johnson, Minneapolis.

First assistant clerk, Archibald H. Vernon, St. Paul.

Second assistant, Oscar Arneson, Herman.

Reading clerk, John T. Jones, Minneapolis.

Enrolling clerk, Lester Bartlett, Buffalo.

Engrossing clerk, D. W. Meeker, Moorhead.

Sergeant-at-arms, F. B. Selz, Red Wing.

Postmaster, Albert H. Spring, Rochester.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 8—At noon today the thirty-fifth Minnesota legislature came into existence with the calling to order of the state senate by Lieut. Gov. A. O. Eberhart and the opening of the house of representatives by Julius H. Schmahl, secretary of state. In the senate the members were sworn in by Charles M. Start, chief justice of the supreme court; in the house, by Calvin L. Brown, associate justice.

In both branches of the legislature the minority made some objection to the republican slate, but with no avail so far as changing of the schedules was concerned. In the house, Lawrence D. Johnson of Minneapolis was nominated for speaker by Judge H. G. Hicks of Minneapolis. Dr. J. H. Dorsey was nominated for speaker for the democrats by James Handlan of St. Paul. Johnson received 106 votes, Dorsey 13. The governor-elect of the state then went through without any trouble. Adolph E. L. Johnson of Minneapolis received 116 votes for chief clerk, Archibald H. Vernon of St. Paul was elected first assistant. A score of men were elected to the committee clerks, door, cloak room, and gallery keepers, all at the usual compensation of $5 a day.

The program followed by the senate was like that of the house, the adoption of the prepared slate and the doling out of a lot of minor jobs to waiting politicians. Senator A. Langum of Preston was named secretary of the senate, a job he has held every two years for a long time; only "the earliest settlers" can remember he ever had a predecessor. W. H. Alton of St. Paul, a veteran, was named assistant secretary. Frank Holcomb of St. Paul was named enrolling clerk. E. A. Nelson of Hallock secured election as engrossing clerk and so on down the slate. Then came a lengthy recitation by Senator "Andy" Stephens of the big county, naming the long list of minor employes. Senator Stephens, democrat, of Minneapolis, wanted action delayed on the resolution until the morrow. The republicans could not hear him. He then announced notice of debate. Notice of debate means the old senate rules compels the tabling of a resolution for 24 hours. But Senator Goff Sherburne ruled that the senate as yet had no rules, the old ones not having as yet been readopted, and the resolution would have to go to immediate vote. It carried by a vote of 57 to 4, a good preliminary score of the republican machine in the senate. After the transaction of some minor business preliminary to perfecting the senate organization, adjournment was taken.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 9—The presentation of the governor's message to the legislature which was expected, and the introduction of a grist of thirteen bills in the senate, which were unexpected, were the two events of today's session at the capitol. The senate convened with the house to hear the message. The galleries were crowded with people, many being ladies. Gov. J. A. Johnson spoke for nearly three hours. Even though he took this length of time, he cut out considerable of the message as it left his typewritten manuscript in the delivery.

Senator Peterson has the honor of introducing the first senate file, S. F. No. 1 which was a bill to appropriate $100,000 for the general expenses of the legislative session.

There were several other senate bills worthy of special mention. Senator Sullivan introduced S. F. 5, to permit the state board of control to establish a plant at the state prison for manufacture of farm machinery and thus compete with the farm machinery trust in this industry as well as in the manufacture of binder twine. The board is authorized to use half the labor of convicts in the prison for this purpose by the bill. The same senator fathered a measure to create a legislative reference library under the bureau at the capitol, similar to the Wisconsin law.

Senator Calhoun introduced a bill to provide for election of delegates to state, congressional and judicial conventions by the Australian ballot, anyone desiring to be allowed to have his name placed on the delegate ticket.

Senator Wilson introduced a bill to create a state tax commission of three members. Senator Thomas introduced two measures, to appropriate commissioners of three members each for separation of Minnesota exhibits at the Alaskan Yukon Pacific exposition at Seattle in 1909, and at the Jamestown, Va., exposition in 1907. The two bills carry an aggregate appropriation of $150,000.

Senator Green introduced a measure to fix a two cent a mile rate for passenger traffic on railroads. Senator Cashman had a railroad measure to establish a distance tariff, that freight for ten miles same class of freight per ton mile must prevail for both long and short hauls. Another bill by Senator Gundersen on railroads was the product of Senator Moonan. No bills were presented in the house.

The expected happened last evening when the republicans of the house and senate in caucus by a vote of 108 all present, nominated Knute Nelson to succeed himself as United States senator from Minnesota. Senator Gundersen of Alexandria made the nominating speech for the caucus.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 10—The legislature today practically decided upon a joint investigation of the alleged harvester and general farm machinery trust, and of the coal combine which has been said to control the price and supply of fuel in Minnesota and the northwest. In the house, the resolution calling for the farm machinery probe was introduced by L. C. Spooner of Morris; the one for the coal investigation was introduced by Miles Rochis of Madison. The resolutions called for joint committee of the senate and senate to be appointed, and were promptly passed. In the senate the same resolutions were introduced by Senator Peterson and Senator Hanson, but were laid over for further consideration on suggestion of Senator Ege. The coupling of the committee could combine the work and accomplish it better than two.

Seven bills made their appearance in the house today, the first of the session. Among them were three measures for five cents per mile rail-road fare. John Zelch of Cottage Grove got in the first one. Burdette Smith of Winona called up A. G. Johnson of St. Paul followed.

W. C. Bicknell of Morris introduced a bill for the regulation of railroads for a tax of 1 per cent on incomes up to $2,000, 2 per cent on incomes up to $15,000; over $15,000, 3 per cent.

W. A. Nolan introduced his famous anti-pass bill, which was killed which defeated two years ago after a hard fight.

The senate took another spurt in the introduction of bills, running the number from 13 yesterday up to a round two dozen. Senator Wright of Litchfield introduced several railroad measures, to apply the primary law to railroads, to permit orders of the railroad commission to go into immediate effect, and to create a 7 per cent gross earnings tax for express companies. Senators Wright and McGown both introduced bills calling for the appointment of a commission of state of all legislative lobbyists who must give a strict accounting of their actions and for the money spent. Senator Works fathered a bill to extend the Lyman Law's scope to, exceptionally, rural counties of the state. It now only applies in the three largest, Senator Fosseen had a measure to increase the personal tax exemption from $200 to $300. Senator Wilson presented one to create a permanent legislative committee of two members, at $6,000 a year salary each.

Both senate and house adjourned to 10 a. m. next Monday, that members might go home for Sunday.

FIRST MAKER OF DIAMONDS

M. MOISSAN AWARDED NOBEL PRIZE FOR CHEMISTRY.

Noted French Experimenter Also Invented the Electric Furnace—Was First Man to Discover Calcium Carbide.

London.—The manufacture of diamonds has been successfully performed by M. Henri Moissan, to whom the Nobel prize for chemistry was awarded the other day, but that is not his chief claim to fame. The electric furnace, which nowadays plays so large a part in industrial processes, owes more to him than to any other experimenter.

About the year 1878 M. Moissan was engaged in developing an electric furnace, which consisted in its simplest form of two blocks of lime or limestone, forming the body of the furnace, through which an arc was formed between carbon electrodes. The peculiarity of M. Moissan's furnace was that it was able to produce far greater temperatures than had previously been attained. As much as a hundred horsepower was used to concentrate its energy on a small charge, and in this way a temperature was reached only limited by the boiling point of carbon, which lies between 6,000 and 7,000 degrees Fahrenheit.

At this tremendous temperature, which is probably not far off that which exists in the sun's atmosphere, the most refractory metals are converted into vapor, and chemical changes or combinations are produced which are quite impossible at the comparatively low temperature of ordinary furnaces. The investigations of M. Moissan, which have been placed freely at the disposal of the world, unhampered by patents, have done more than those of any one else to advance the use of the electric furnace in the industries, that was, for instance, the first to discover that calcium carbide so largely used for the production of acetylene, that brilliant and convenient illuminant, could be cheaply produced in the electric furnace by the fusion combination of lime and carbon; and the whole department of electro-chemistry, which has revolutionized so many industries and promised so much water power that was previously running to waste, owes more to him than to any other of the numerous workers who have built it up in the last 20 years.

The most interesting, though not the most industrially important, of the researches which M. Moissan has carried out in his electrical furnace is the manufacture of artificial diamonds. We have long known that the diamond is only a crystallized carbon. If we could melt carbon and allow it to cool slowly, there is no doubt that it would solidify into the brilliant crystals which we call diamonds. Unfortunately carbon cannot be melted at all under ordinary conditions. It is one of the few elements which pass directly from the solid to the gaseous condition—like iodine.

But there is another way of producing crystals. Instead of melting the substance which we desire to crystallize, it is sufficient to dissolve it and allow it to crystallize out as the solution by evaporating the latter. The crystals of barley sugar which are to be seen in every confectioner's window are thus produced. Molten iron happens to be a good solvent for carbon, which is usually set free when it cools in the form of graphite scales. M. Moissan, however, hit upon the brilliant idea of making the molten iron charged with carbon cool under great pressure. This pressure is easily obtained, by using the property which cast iron shares with water and a few other bodies, that it expands instead of contracting at the moment when it solidifies.

HENRI MOISSAN.
(French Chemical Investigator Awarded a Nobel Prize.)

M. Moissan thus melted iron mixed with carbon in his electric furnace, at a temperature of about 7,000 degrees Fahrenheit, and then plunged it into cold water or into molten lead. When cooling solidified the outer skin of the ingot. The expansion of the inner part, still liquid, on solidifying within this hard skin, produced enormous pressure, and it was found that the carbon under this pressure actually crystallized into minute diamonds. The largest yet made is only about one-fiftieth of an inch in diameter, but they are genuine diamonds, and M. Moissan is thus the first and only diamond maker.

HE GUARDED JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Fred Bach, Sr., of Bloomington, Ill., Tells of Handcuff Incident.

Bloomington, Ill.—One of the few survivors, perhaps the only one, of the fifteen officers who guarded Jefferson Davis following his capture at the close of the civil war is Fred Bach, Sr., of this city. Mr. Bach remembers distinctly the incidents connected with the incarceration of the famous prisoner in Fortress Monroe.

He says Davis was irritable and peevish and constantly complained of the noise made by the guards pacing back and forth. The prisoner was kept in the cell in which he lay, supposedly, at all counties of the state. It now only applies in the three largest, Senator Fosseen had a measure to increase the personal tax exemption from $200 to $300. Senator Wilson presented one to create a permanent legislative committee of two members, at $6,000 a year salary each.

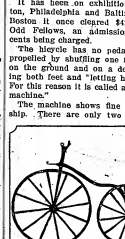
this action and declined physically and mentally. When Dr. Craven reported the effect of the shackles upon the prisoner the war department promptly ordered them removed.

HAS NO PEDALS OR SEAT.

Curious Bicycle, Imported in 1836, Still in Existence.



Boston.—Frank O. Hale of Springfield, Mass., has in his possession a curiosity in the shape of a bicycle, brought from France in a New Bedford whaling vessel in the year 1836.

Mr. Hale, as a boy, used to knock about the docks at New London. Then he became acquainted with Capt. Ira Potter, who presented the curio to him about the year 1860. The wheel was given to the captain by a passenger on his vessel while coming over from France.

It has been on exhibition in Boston, Philadelphia and Baltimore. At Boston it once cleared $42 for the Odd Fellows, with an admission of two cents being charged.

The bicycle has no pedals and is propelled by shuffling one foot along on the ground and on a decline lifting both feet and "letting her coast." For this reason it is called a "walking machine."

The machine shows fine workmanship. There are only two pieces in the iron frame. The steering is done by turning a swivel, an ingenious contrivance. The wheels are of wood. There is no seat and the rider was accustomed to place a cushion on the iron frame.

A bicycle similar to the one owned by Mr. Hale is recorded as having been run in France in 1816.

This mode of riding was hard on the footwear and the bicycle tourists of those days were accustomed to wear special iron-shod shoes.

After this old style came the high wheels, then safeties with hard and then with soft tires; until the present perfect machines were evolved.

Amboy—The annual hunt proved to be a success, although no big game was killed. There were twenty hunters on a side, and the start was made at 1 o'clock in the afternoon. All game was returned to the lodge at 7 o'clock that evening. The trophies of the chase consisted of 300 cottontails, 1 jack rabbit, 1 crow and 3 owls. Capt. William Klenbole's company won by 148 points.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

It would seem that the citizens of Thief River Falls, and particularly those who are interested in the cross ferry down there had enough to take an active part in assisting the people up this way to get boats running on this river. The milling Company claim that there was a loss to them running the boats last season, and The Red Lake River Transportation may find that it is not a business to engage in, so far as the revenue income of the boats may go, but they will gain by having a way to get their products to market, and this is the only way they will have of disposing of their cream this season.

Bisonce the supream court is to decide the County seat removal case between Red Lake and Thief River Falls this week. It has been said that no one but the supream being could tell how a jury would decied a case, and we think it would keep him acting some to tell how a Minnesota Supream court would decide a county seat scrap, as they reversed themselves on the Columbia County proposition but his honer has exaulted ideas of justice when it comes to deciding a county seat scrap, and we have always had an exaulted opinion of honors decision on these matters since that decided that last exaulted opinion in the Columbia County seat matter.

A bill has been introduced in congress by representative Garrett of Tennessee to restore the right of newspapers to make contracts with mail carriers for the exchange of advertising space in order for the value in money of all of the special agents and postmasters and fireclerks local mail offices throughout the United States, and to give the widest publicity there to that the price of some of said acts of February 28, 1885, for the summer destruction of indicated and established rights existing in violation of said act will be rigidly enforced on and after April 1, 1907.

A Surprised Preacher.

When a clergyman in the course of his sermon asks a question he doesn't expect any one to answer it. At a watch night service at St. Paul's church, Brixton, England, the vicar was preaching a sermon on the prodigal son in the course of which he said: "Last year some people came to watch night service from a neighboring public house, and some of them were drunk. Is there any one here like that tonight?"

"Yes," said a respectable looking man seated in the aisle; "I'm here, and I'm drunk".

The effect on the congregation was electrical. The preacher was startled for a moment, but after saying, "Poor fellow, poor fellow!" proceeded with his discourse.

"I tell you I'm drunk," said the intruder.

"Hold your tongue," said the vicar, "I am speaking now and must not be interrupted."

A Fine Piece of Work.

"I tell you," exclaimed the young medical student, "our professor is an eminent surgeon."

"How's that?" asked his chum.

"Well, a fellow was brought in with a crushed leg. The professor said it must come off, but by some means or other he cut off the wrong leg."

"Do you call that a fine piece of surgery?"

"Wait a bit. The professor said it would be terrible for the poor fellow to go about with no legs at all, so he splinted up the crushed leg instead of cutting that off, too, and now it is as good as ever. An ordinary surgeon would have left the fellow legless. Wonderful skill, the professor's!"—Strand Magazine.

Did the Dog Reason?

The late Duke of Beaufort, who was an excellent observer, notes in his diary how (he was hunting the hounds himself) the pack drove down to a well and flashed over all but Bachelor. This hound missed the scent as he reached the top of the well and, standing there, waved his stern as if in thought. Then it seemed to flash across him, "If the fox has not crossed he must have turned short under the wall." So Bachelor dropped back into the road and, racing along, picked up the line.—T. F. Dale in Outing Magazine.

Not Guilty.

"Tommy," said the teacher reproachfully, "why didn't you take your hat off to me when you passed me yesterday?"

"I didn't have me hat on, ma'am," replied the boy.

"Don't tell me that. I saw it on your head."

"I know you seen me, but you didn't see me hat. That was me brother's hat I had on."

New Order From The Department Of Interior.

Washington, D. C.

January 3, 1907.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Sir: Referring to the circular of instructions to special agents of your office, approved by me on January 29, 1904, relative to their duties under the act of February 26, 1885 (23 Stat., 321), entitled "An act to prevent unlawful occupancy of the public lands," you are advised that said circular is hereby amended and modified as follows:

Strike out from said circular paragraphs 5 and 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

It shall be me duty of the special agent on receipt of any charge or complaint or upon information being acquired by him from any source, that an unlawful inclosure is being maintained by any person or persons, association, or corporation, to at once proceed to secure sufficient data, including a discription of the lands inclosed, with reasonable certainty, not necessarily by metes and bounds, nor by Government subdivisions of surveyed land, but only so that the inclosure may be identified and the person or persons guilty of the violation, as nearly as may be, and by description if the name can not, on reasonable inquiry, be ascertained, and to at once submit such case, with the data thus obtained, to the United States attorney for prosecution.

It shall be the duty of the special agent and he shall be instructed to be alert and vigilant in his district and to proceed in accord once therewith as here in above directed, and that he is not to consider his duties as requiring that, before proceeding in the matter of an unlawful inclosure, there must first be filed with him a formal complaint of some person or persons adjudicated with the facts, but it shall be his duty, as hereinabove stated, to take the initiative himself.

In this connection you are further instructed to give attention to the Order of the President to at once notify all of the special agents and fireclerks and fireclerks local land offices throughout the United States, and to give the widest publicity there to that the price of some of said acts of February 28, 1885, for the summer destruction of indicated and established rights existing in violation of said act will be rigidly enforced on and after April 1, 1907.

The Word "Important."

Originally the word "important" signified merely "not belonging to." When Wyclif said that there were many men in this world who were "impertinent to earthly lords" he did not mean that they were "pleeky!" but merely that they had no masters. Then, as used by Shakespeare, "impertinent" came to mean "irrelevant." Just 200 years ago it was defined as signifying "absurd, silly, idle."

Stupidity and Sangfroid.

Commander Gambier of the British navy tells in his book this story of a soldier, servant named Andrews, a fellow of stupidity and sang froid: "We were practicing with a revolver pistol in my brother's quarters, and Andrews was in a small dressing room adjoining when a ball went through the door and took the tip off his ear. Most men would have made some remark. He did not, and we knew nothing about it until by chance, looking into the room, we saw him groping about under the table for something, he had lost. 'What are you looking for, Andrews?' said my brother. He drew up, stood at attention and replied in an apologetic tone—as if deprecating his master's wrath, 'I was just looking for a bit of my ear as come off when you fired that shot through the door, sir.'"

Early Protest Against Tea.

The introduction of tea into European communities met with considerable protest. In Germany tea drinkers were considered immoral, and many pamphlets were published condemning the use of tea in any form. Tea was first brought to England from Holland in 1666. Soon the drinking of it became fashionable in London, and a pound of tea could have sold for 60 shillings. Thomas Garway was the first dealer in tea in England. He recommended it as a cure for all disorders and sold great quantities of it at a large profit. Receipts show that tea at times been sold in England for as much as £10 a pound.

Mr. O. in Chicago as Dead as Cæsar.

One of the most remarkable reversals of public opinion on record is that which has taken place in Chicago in the past year in the matter of municipal ownership and operation. The municipal ownership theory, which little more than a year ago flourished here with as much vigor as to attract the attention of the entire civilized world, is now the greatest dunk in the bunk. Apparently nobody believes in it any longer. Certainly nobody ever talks any more about it.—Chicago Journal.

When a Man Lies.

"If you want to tell whether or not the man you are talking to is telling the truth, don't look him in the eyes," said a Denver bank teller to some friends last night. "I thought it was just the other way," said one of those present. "I've always understood that it made it harder for the liar if you looked squarely in his eyes." "That's a wrong impression," continued the bank teller. "The man who knows how to tie knows how to look you in the eyes while he's doing it. And the man who isn't a regular liar, but who has made up his mind to lie to you, decides first that he must look you straight in the eyes. It is the voice, when you don't look at the eyes, that tells you whether the other fellow is lying. We use the system frequently in the bank. A man will come in to tell us some business tale. We look at his feet or his hands or his knees, but never in his eyes. If he's telling the truth his voice will be firm and straightforward, and the absence of your gaze in his eyes will not affect it, but if he's lying he'll be confused by your action and his voice will tremble. He'll hem and haw and clear his throat. You may rest assured then that he's stringing you."—Denver Post.

Too Much.

While a great many persons probably take themselves too seriously, entertaining an altogether exaggerated opinion of their ability and worth, not many nowadays go to the extreme length of the German whom the English poet Coleridge met at Frankfort. He always took off his hat when he ventured to speak of himself. Were this practice to become general what a number of people would be permanently bareheaded!

LUDICROUS LEGAL LORE.

A Legend of the Early Jurisprudence of Michigan.

The early history of the jurisprudence of Michigan, if faithfully chronicled, would furnish forth an entertainment abounding with the soul and point of humor. Many of these little legends yet float around the scenes which have given birth to them and serve sometimes to give rest to a bar dinner or to enliven a bar meeting. Among ther is the following:

Judge B., a plain and worthy man, but no lawyer, was once county judge of Oakland under the old system. A case came on for trial before him on one decision in which the action was founded in tort, and the plea of the defendant, which was special, was such as to give him the affirmative of the issue, upon the strength of which he claimed the right to open and close the case. This point was denied by the counsel for the plaintiff, "who never in the whole course of his practice had heard of such an enormity as the defendant's presuming to open the case." Authorities were brought and cited, however, and the judge, after mature consideration, determined that such was the defendant's right and so pronounced his decision. After a short pause, during which the plaintiff was grumbling his dissatisfaction, the court told the defendant's lawyer to go on.

"Your honor," said he, rising, "I am not quite ready to open the case. When I get ready I will let the other side know." This opened, if not the case, at least the eyes and mouth of the other side, who sprang to his feet and bellowed forth denunciation upon the stupidity of the judge, whose absurd decision had placed him in such a dilemma. "You see, your honor, what you have done. You have actually placed the case in the hands of the defendant. He took possession of our case, and when we brought an action to recover them he took possession of that also." "I can't help it, sir," said the learned judge, with great sternness. "The decision is made, and it is too late to alter it. The law must take its course. You must withdraw your action and sue again."

"If he does, your honor," said the defendant's counsel, "I shall plead the pendency of this action in bar and bent him." "Then, Mr. ——," said the judge, "I see no other way for you but to sit down quietly and wait till the defendant gets ready to try this case." The plaintiff took the judge's advice, but the time appointed has never elapsed, and he is waiting yet. — Philadelphia North American.

The Pay for Roads.

Jobbers collect the taxes that are levied by tenants and send them to auction rooms, where they are sorted into piles marked "Meat," "Groceries," "Children's." Sevfral poor people made fair bids, but the auctioneer did not seem anxious to sell. Finally a man pushed his way through the crowd and offered 10 cents apiece for the whole lot. His bid was successful.

"I was killing time with task waiting for that fellow," said the auctioneer afterwards. "He always pays high for these shods, and he does not want them for wearing, either. He wants to beat them out for the leather in them. He gets what material there is, puts it through a process and makes stamped imitation leather novelties, such as picture frames, bags, pocketbooks, penknife holders and even chair backs and seats. He finds a ready sale for these novelties and gets a good price for them."—Shoe Retailer.

The Word Cigar.

The word cigar occurs in a German dictionary for the first time in 1813 and in the Dictionnaire of the Freiberg Academie in 1826. Kant used the word "cigarro" in 1796. It occurs at the present day the word "cigarro" means a cigarette, for which the Spaniards have the word "pitillos." Their name for a cigar is "puro."

A Matrimonial Mishap

BY R. NORMAN SILVER
Author of "Wonders of the Deep."

(Copyright, 1905, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

"Dear sir: Having seen and liked a copy of your paper, The Golden Circle, I venture to trespass a little upon your attention. I am young, only 22—"

"And have inherited some money from an aunt, with whom I had lived since childhood, and who has just died. Thanks to her, I have been fairly well-educated, and I believe I am naturally neither stupid nor awkward. Yet I am now altogether alone, and am very unhappy. If you could see me, you would know why; I am just the ugliest woman in the world. Yet I think if some one could know me as I am, he would love me. Can you help me? I enclose $25. I am sure it would never be worth your while to attend to my case at your ordinary rates. I am so very, very ugly. Believe me to be, yours very truly, Stella Garner."

A few days after Thaddeus Field's receipt of "Stella Garner's" letter he received an important visit. This tall footman opened the double doors, and bowed in a handsome man of middle age—a man with blue eyes, crisp, iron-gray hair and beard, and dazzling white teeth. Thaddeus Field was impressed, and rose graciously as Pierre, the footman, retired.

The newcomer held out his hand. "Mr. Thaddeus Field?" he said.

"I am Mr. Thaddeus Field," answered that gentleman, assuming his official dignity.

His visitor bowed.

"I am Stephen Osborne," he explained. "Stephen Montgomery Osborne, of your service."

"Pray be seated," said Thaddeus, offering a chair.

Mr. Osborne sat down, and crossed his legs.

"In what way," demanded Thaddeus, "can I have the pleasure of serving you?"

Stephen Osborne laughed out heartily.

"I want a wife," he answered.

"What kind of a wife do you want, Mr. Osborne?" Thaddeus asked.

Stephen Osborne seemed embarrassed.

"To be quite honest, Mr.—Mr. Field," he replied, "it isn't so much the kind of a wife I want, as the kind of wife I've got to have."

"Indeed!" said Thaddeus, frigidly.

"Yes," said his client, irritably; "I haven't a great deal of time. You see, when I was a bit younger I was fool enough to tell my papa, who had married again—I was the only child of the first marriage—that I would never marry if I couldn't get some one a little better looking than my new step-ma. So we quarreled and parted, and when the old boy died last winter—there were no more children, and step-ma died some years ago—he left me his money on condition that I married a girl uglier than step-ma, and gave me 12 months to make up my mind. I didn't expect ever to need the money, and so took it easy, but some of my speculations have done decently bad, and I absolutely sonno cash before long or go bust. That's why I'm here."

Thaddeus Field's eyes shone—it was just the kind of case he liked.

"If you will call to-morrow about this time, Mr. Osborne," he said, "I think I shall have something to say. Good-day."

With this comforting assurance he rang the bell, and Mr. Osborne departed.

That afternoon Mrs. Christina Field left for Boston. Her instructions were not to return without Miss "Stella Garner."

On the succeeding morning Christina, accompanied by a heavily-veiled lady, entered the anteroom. Christina left her charge sad went into her husband's sanctum. Thaddeus was standing on the hearth-rug, chawing his mustaches with impatience.

"Will she do?" he asked.

Christina grianed.

"As ugly as sin," she said; "but smart."

"That's all right," concluded Thaddeus; "bring her in."

Christina opened the door and called. The veiled lady rose and entered.

"Miss Garner, I understand," said Thaddeus, rapidly; "pleased to meet you. Miss Garner, I want you to see a gentleman; if you can like him, I think he can like you. If you take a fancy to him I shall be glad to ask you to meet him at my house some evening soon. I can't stop to explain. You must just step in there with my wife, and leave yourself in her hands. You'll be able to see all right; our man's almost gone."

No sooner had the two ladies been safely disposed of than Mr. Osborne was shown in, and was soon in deep converse with Thaddeus.

Thanks to the tact of Mr. Thaddeus Field, Mr. Osborne laughed and chattered and looked so merry and handsome that the lady behind the carved screen knew her heart to him, and when Mr. Field escorted Mr. Osborne out, and the door closing behind them, the ladies were at liberty to come forth again, Miss Stella Garner laughed herself, and chatted, and looked not so ugly after all. And Mr. Stephen Osborne, who with Thaddeus had gone round another way into the hidden cupboard, that the former might spy upon Miss Garner as she had spied upon him, drew a deep breath, and whispered to the matrimonial agent, "I suppose I can't do better—she seems a decent sort."

"Quite the lady, I assure you, Mr. Osborne," murmured the wily Thaddeus in his ear; "any amount of accomplishments—strong, and a little bit of money in the bank. Will you come up to my house to-night? I'll ask her round too."

"No, thanks," said Stephen Osborne, "let it be to-morrow. I've something else on to-night."

"To-morrow, then," replied Thaddeus, "you will make the acquaintance of the future Mrs. Osborne."

Now, there was one thing in the world for which Christina Field lived and moved and had her being, and that was jewelry. In her bedroom at the little uptown house she had a small strong safe built into the wall, and the key of that safe never left her possession. Her diamonds were not imperial, still they were valuable, and had been mounted to her own instructions, and she had a ruby bracelet for which many a fairly honest woman would have risked her soul. When an opportunity arose for Mrs. Christina to don her glittering treasures she was happy; when there were women present to envy them she became positively radiant.

In obedience to this ruling passion, Christina—dressing for the early dinner at which Stephen Osborne was to meet Miss Stella Garner, and which was to be followed by a visit to the theater—clasped about her white throat and dainty arms some five thousand dollars' worth of precious stones. Very well she looked, too, did Christina, when she took her place at the head of the table and beamed on the ugly Miss Garner, the admiring Stephen Osborne and the complacent Thaddeus.

It was a wonderfully merry little party; each seemed to vie with each in brilliancy. If Christina was gay,

It Was a Wonderfully Merry Little Party.

Miss Garner was brilliant; if Thaddeus was overflowing with good humor, Stephen Osborne proved a prince of entertainers.

Suddenly upon the mirth of the party there descended an astonishing quiet. Thaddeus, strange to say, fell asleep in his chair, and Christina, after a gallant struggle to keep awake followed his example.

Then Mr. Stephen Osborne and Miss Stella Garner indulged in a very remarkable proceeding. They rose from their places and calmly proceeded to strip their sleeping hostess of her jewelry. Miss Stella's light fingers unclasping Christina's necklace and bracelets, and removing her rings, Stephen Osborne the while deftly concealing the jewels about his person. Then Christina's shoulders, wrists and fingers were bared of their glittering load, the pair turned their attention to the slumbering Thaddeus, relieving him of a diamond stud and ring, worth together a hundred dollars or so. Then they paused, and, looking at one another, laughed silently.

"It's a fair 'have,' Pollie," said the man who had called himself "Stephen Osborne."

Miss Stella Garner nodded.

"Are you sure that stuff'll only make them sleep?" she asked, anxiously.

"Certain sure," said the other. "Do you think I want to swing? Not much. Come on, look slippy, nag; this way out."

And with that Mr. "Stephen Osborne," Miss "Stella Garner" and about five thousand dollars' worth of "swag" disappeared through the French window of Mr. Thaddeus Field's dining room.

Mr. Thaddeus Field never found a sufficiently ugly partner for Mr. Stephen Osborne, in fact he never saw Mr. Osborne again. Nor did he ever set eyes on Miss Stella Garner, nor find her some one to love. They had vanished into the unknown through that French window, and Christina still mourns her diamonds.

For Freedom from Wrinkles

Wrinkles come from hard work, is the assertion of a famous beauty specialist. The mind and the body work. And they come from[aching feet. Tired feet will make wrinkles very fast. Don't let your feet get tired unless you want to have wrinkles in your face.

"I went to a beautiful English woman last year—one whom I had known a long time and to whose club I belonged—and I said: 'Please tell me how you manage to keep so free from wrinkles.'

"By walking and keeping out in the open air,' she said, 'and by not worrying.'

"But suppose your shoes pinch and your feet hurt and your ankles are not comfortable and you are miserable after you have walked a mile,' I ventured.

"You must wear big shoes,' said she, leaning toward me. And then she whispered something in my ear. It was this: 'Wear No. 8's when you go out for a constitutional. You can't get your shoes too big. When you come in the house take off your big shoes and put on your little ones. But when you are out for your health wear shoes so big that you have to tie them on to keep them from slipping off. My shoes almost turn around upon my feet. And I walk like a queen.

"It was a fine lesson in wrinkles to me, for women get wrinkles from the tired feet as well as from a tired mind."

Praises Modern Ideas in Bringing Up Girls

Here is a tribute to the wisdom of the modern ideas on the upbringing of girls. It is the professional opinion of an English physician, writing in the Medical Brief on the subject of hysteria:

Hysteria is the generic name applied to some of the most horrifying as well as most interesting cases with which physicians have to deal; cases which produce what might be called phenomeno of the nervous system, morbid and abnormal manifestations which have been and are being studied by medical men everywhere.

A nation whose women are inclined to develop hysteria is to be pitied. One whose women are conspicuously free from this tendency is to be congratulated. The physician referred to above, after noting the fact that hysteria is less common in England now then it was a generation ago, declares that much stress must be laid on the defective education and upbringing of English girls 25 and 30 years ago. They were allowed but little freedom of thought or action and were kept closely tied to their mothers' apron strings. This mother was a well meaning person, but she had but little intuitive and was hidebound by convention.

She was orthodox, but her orthodoxy was that of her mother, supplemented by the teaching of the village parson. This degeneracy reached its highest point in the cathedral towns of Great Britain.

A quarter of a century has marked a great change in this respect and has been concurrent with an increased robustness of health of our girls. They are stronger now physically, mentally and morally.

The advent of bicycling and motoring and especially of greater facilities for traveling in foreign countries, has had much to do with this, chiefly by permitting a more vigorous and intimate social intercourse between young men and women.

The girl of to-day dictates the policy of her mother and with a healthier outdoor existence there are fewer of the factors which tend to develop hysteria and its attendant evils. It is comparatively rare nowadays to meet with a neurotic English girl, and the most typical and exaggerated form of the disease must be sought among the Latin races.

A New Fabric.

A new material for evening wear is gaze pekinee, something on the order of silk mousseline. There is really very little novelty in the fabric this winter for evening gowns, but the former materials are improved and are most beautiful in design. Nearly all the sheer fabrics are trimmed with velvet or fur or both, until one would imagine that their weight would destroy the thinner robe beneath.

Made from Scraps of Silk.

Attractive opera or slipper bags may often be evolved from odd pieces of silk. In the first case these may be embroidered, hand-painted or beaded and put on bright clasps, or in both cases they may be put on drawing strings of velvet or satin ribbon.

Corsets Have Much to Do with Appearance

All Frenchwomen wear corsets; a great majority have their corsets made to order. My own cork, for instance, does, and she pays 30 francs (about six dollars) a pair. These for best last her three or four years, says a writer in Harper's Bazar. In families driven to the last limit of economy, corsets are commonly home made. Very poor women, obliged to purchase their corsets, ready made buy invariably a good article, paying on an average three dollars a pair. These initial expenditures become relotively economical, by virtue of the excellence of the article secured and by the care and cleverness which the French exercise in cleaning and repairing corsets.

There exists a number of characteristics in common which are clear principles of the Frenchwoman's art of being pretty. First, there is the perfect orderliness which the Frenchwoman's hairdressing invariably presents. By the aid of invisible pins, even of invisible nets, and, for out-of-doors, of veils, the Frenchwoman, having thoroughly washed, brushed and studiously arranged her hair, is protected always against the least appearance of disheveiment which among all classes is abhorred. A point of beauty always sought by the French in the arrangement of the hair is to prevent a loll nuque—that is, a pretty nape of the neck. Effects they produce in this respect are wonderful, and are chiefly attained by care in securing a graceful line marked by the hair from ear to ear, and a charming contour which clever waving of the hair produces.

With proper corsets and her hair attractively arranged, the woman who is resolved to lead a better life in the matter of being pretty need not despair if money to buy a complete new and becoming wardrobe is not at hand.

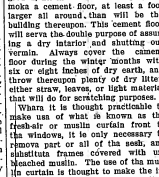
POULTRY AND BEES

DESIGN FOR POULTRY HOUSE.



Building Which Will Accommodate One Hundred and Fifty Fowls.

The size of the building here represented is 12 feet wide and 80 feet long, divided into six separate apartments for poultry, with a passage way in the rear of the separate apartments. This is called a connected apartment house, from the fact that from the hallway in the rear you could enter each apartment. When it is desirable so to do, there need not be any partitions, but the whole building may be thrown into one large room.

The advantages gained from the separate apartment house are several. First of all, it will be better when not to exceed 25 or 30 are permitted to live in each apartment. This building, as represented here, would furnish six rooms large enough for 25 each of fowls this size of Plymouth Rocks or Wyandottes. Thirty Leghorns might be kept to good advantage in each apartment. The roosts should all be constructed on the level from a drop ping board. Underneath the dropping board may be constructed the nests, or the nests may be built against the partition while that divides the apartments. It is always best to raise the nests from the ground, and to hovt the hens enter them from the rear or behind to lay. That hides the hen and the eggs cover from those on the floor, and does not tempt them to fly up and eat the eggs.

The run or areas way in front of the poultry house can be large or small, according to the ground space that you have to devote to the same. The more the better. Fowls always do the best that have a large space of ground to roam over.

The gable may he constructed fashioned after either one of the end elevations presented, or, where it is preferred, the rear wall may hs built high enough so as to have a shed roof from rear to front in the entire width of the building. In this construction of a poultry house, great stress should he laid on having of dry floors and dry interior. Perfectly dry floors usually assure a dry interior. In selecting the location for a poultry building, always place it on the high ground, where there is an under and surface drainage. If this cannot he, dig out the building deep enough and then make a cement floor, at least a foot layer all around, than will be the better option. This cement floor will serve the double purpose of assuring a dry interior and shutting out vermin. Always cover the cement floor during the winter months with six or eight inches of dry earth, and throw between plenty of dry litter, either straw, leaves, or light material that will do for scratching purposes.

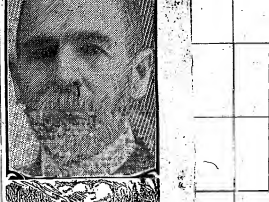
What is thought practicable to make use of what is known as the fresh-air or muslin curtain front of the building, it is only necessary to remova part or all of the sash, and substitute frames covered with the muslin curtain. The use of the muslin curtain is thought to make the interior more healthful for the poultry. The continual passing of the air through the curtain has a tendency to dry the atmosphere within the poultry house. While such buildings, says Country Gentleman, are considerably colder than glass fronts, the interior is apt to be perfectly dry, and the hooded roost may he made tight and cold enough to keep the fowls warm during the frost of winter weather.

As to a correct ration of feed for the production of eggs during the winter months, try a dry grain ration, one-third cornmeal, the rest made of a mixture of all kinds of small grain. If a mash food is fed, always feed it at noon. It is best when composed of equal parts, by measure, of cornmeal, ground oats, bran and middlings, all mixed with either scalding milk or water, and allowed to set to cool.



Some animal food of some kind—beef scrap or ground green bone—should always be furnished them in winter. In addition to this, plenty of green food of some kind, water and grit should always be at hand. If fed this ration, and to this ration, and properly housed, hens should always furnish a full egg supply in winter.

Packing Fowls.

When fowls are packed, in barrels or boxes for shipment, all the animal heat should be got rid of them, before them before that time is to increase the opportunities for the heat to develop in the center of the box or barrel and the forces of decomposition begin their work. It will be seen that this might easily lead to heavy losses as it frequently does.

The next thing to green bone for eggs is good thick buttermilk.

Cold Affected Head and Throat—Attack was Severe.

Chas. W. Bowman, 1st Lieut. and Adj. 4th U. S. M. Cav. Yoke, writes from Lanham, Md., as follows:

"Though somewhat averse to patent medicines, and still more averse to becoming a professional affidavit man, it seems only a plain duty in the present instance to add my experience to the columns already written concerning the curative powers of Peruna.

"I have been particularly benefited by its use for colds in the head and throat. I have been able in fully one myself or some severe attack in forty-eight hours by its use according to directions. I use it as a preventive whenever threatened with an attack.

Novelist's Early Earnings.

A pocket series of Mr. Thomas Hardy's stories is to be published soon, and lately a complete edition of his books in 20 beautiful volumes was issued in America with success. When Mr. Hardy took the manuscript of "Under the Greenwood Tree" to the late Mr. Tinsley that enterprising publisher offered the novelist the sum of $125 down for the book. Mr. Hardy accepted the sum, although he owned that he was "a bit disgusted," adding that nevertheless he "meant to keep on." Next came his book "A Pair of Blue Eyes," for which Mr. Tinsley gave the novelist $500, saying: "There is no money in the book, but I can see that Hardy is going to get a grip some day."

Of Rheumatism Calls for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills if You Would Be Easily Cured.

Mr. Frank Little, a well known citizen of Portland, Ionia Co., Mich., was cured of a severe case of rheumatism by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. In speaking about it recently, he said: "My trouble began in my arms and continued to withstand disease and about five years ago I began to feel rheumatic pains in my arms and across my back. My arms and legs grew numb and the rheumatism seemed to center in every joint so that I could hardly move, while my arms were useless at times. I was unable to sleep or rest well and my heart pained me so terribly I could hardly stand it. My stomach became sour and bloated after eating and this grew so bad that I had inflammation of the stomach. I was extremely nervous and could not bear the least noise or excitement. One whole side of my body became paralyzed.

"As I said before, I had been suffering about five years and seemed to be able to get no relief from my doctors, when a friend here in Portland told me how Dr. Williams' Pink Pills had cured him of neuralgia in the face, after all else had failed to draw it to one side. I decided to try the pills and began to see some improvement soon after using them. This encouraged me to keep on until I was entirely cured. I have never had a return of the rheumatism or of the paralysis.

"The pills are for sale by all druggists or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Vitality Sapped by Years of Suffering with Kidney Trouble.

Capt. J. W. Hogun, former postmaster of Indianola, now living at Austin, Tex., writes: "I was afflicted for years with pains across the loins and in the hips and shoulders. I had headaches also and neuralgia. My sight, eye, from pain, was of little use to me for years.

The constant flow of urine kept my system depleted, causing nervous chills and night sweats. After trying seven different climates and using all kinds of medicine I tied the good fortune to hear of Dean's Kidney Pills. This remedy has cured me. I am as well to-day as I was twenty years ago, and my eyesight is perfect."

SAVES HER VISITING CARDS.

One Woman's Pet Economy Certainly a Queer One.

Women are proverbially niggardly on one or two points; every woman that ever existed had some pet economy, no matter how extravagant she may be in some respects. There's the woman who spends hundreds of dollars on imported gowns, but hates to give up one penny for a paper of pins. The paper-saving person who drops into department stores and hotels to borrow stationery rather than spend any money upon the commodity always is with us; we all know the stamp-stealer and the match borrower; but the visiting-card economizer is a new brand of woman who exists only in the most exclusive society. So discardly is she on the point of her visiting cards that she demands them back from her intimate friends from her mere acquaintances she steals them at an opportune moment when the servant's back is turned, or when the mistress has left the room. She puts them slyly back into her card case. By a clever series of manipulations it is said she can make two of them go as far as 500 went before.

THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILROAD AND WESTERN CANADA.

Will Open Up Immense Area of Free Homestead Lands.

The railway facilities of Western Canada have been taxed to the uttermost in recent years to transfer the surplus grain crop to the eastern markets and the seaboard. The large influx of settlers and the additional area put under crop have added largely to the grain product, and notwithstanding the increased railway facilities that have been placed at the disposal of the public, the question of transportation has proved to be a serious one.

It will, therefore, be good news to everyone interested in Western Canada to know that an authoritative statement has been given out by C. M. Hays, president of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, that that railway will do its share towards moving the crop of 1907 from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba to the seaboard, and thus assist in removing a serious obstacle which has faced the settlers during recent years. Mr. Hays, who has just completed a trip from Portage la Prairie to Edmonton in a private schooner, a distance of 738 miles, which was covered in eighteen days, is enthusiastic about the country.

This will be gratifying to settlers in the Canadian West, even if Mr. Hays declines to be bound to a time limit with the exactitude of a stop-watch. The Grand Trunk Pacific road will be in a position to take part in the transportation of the crop of 1907, and that will be satisfactory to the settlers in that country when the harvest is garnered.

The wheat crop of 1906 in Western Canada was about 90,000,000 bushels, and, with the increased acreage which is confidently expected to be put under crop next year, it is safely calculated that fully 125,000,000 bushels will be harvested in 1907. The necessity for increased transportation facilities are, therefore, apparent, and the statement made by Mr. Hays will bring encouragement to the farmers of the Canadian West, new and old. The opening up of additional thousands of free homesteads is here assured by the agent of the Canadian Government, whose address appears elsewhere.

Destructive Yellow River.

Thousands of men work all their lives at securing the banks of the great Yellow river in China. Yet every now and then the tide sweeps away all opposition and the loss in human life is greater than any war ever caused. Nineteen years ago the river burst its bonds. Day after day the torrent flowed, 20 miles to the hour, 30 miles wide and ten feet deep. The flood has been described as that of five Danubes pouring from a height for two months on end. For 2,000 years the Chinese have been embanking this river.

SCALY ERUPTION ON BODY.

Doctors and Remedies Fruitless—Suffered 10 Years—Completely Cured by Cuticura.

"When I was about nine years old small sores appeared on each of my lower limbs. I scratched them with a brass pin and shortly afterwards both of those limbs became so sore that I could scarcely walk. When I had been suffering for about a month the sores began to heal, but small scaly eruptions appeared where the sores had been. From that time onward I was troubled by such severe itching that, until I became accustomed to it, I would scratch the sores until the blood began to flow. This would stop the itching for a few days, but scaly places would appear again and the itching would accompany them. After I suffered about ten years I made a renewed effort to effect a cure. The eruptions by this time had appeared on every part of my body except my face and hands. The best doctors in my native county advised me to use arsenic in small doses and a salve. I then used to bathe the sores in a mixture which gave almost intolerable pain. In addition I used other remedies, such as Iodine, sulphur, zinc salve, ——'s Salve, —— Ointment, and in fact I was continually giving some remedy a fair trial, never using less then one or two boxes or bottles. All this was fruitless. Finally my hair began to fall out, and I was rapidly becoming bald. I used ——'s ——, but it did no good. A few months after, having used almost everything else, I thought I would try Cuticura Ointment, having previously used Cuticura Soap and being pleased with it. After using three boxes I was completely cured, and my hair was restored, after fourteen years of suffering and an expenditure of at least $50 or $60 in vainly endeavoring to find a cure. I shall be glad to write to any one who may be interested in my cure. B. Hiram Mattingly, Vermillion, S. Dak., Aug. 18, 1906."

MEN STILL LIVE IN CAVES.

Troglodytic Villages Are Found in Northern Africa.

Grottoes and caverns are used more or less as shelters by primitive peoples and thus inhabited caves are of coarse most frequent in Africa. A considerable number of natives make their homes in caves along the southern shore of the Strait of Gibraltar and in some of those caves are found the polished stones and arrow heads of the stone age. Troglodytic villages are frequent in the Tehessa territory of Algeria, one of which, at Djeurf, 250 feet above the gorge of the Wadi Hallail, is reached by steps cut in the rock.

The inhabitants of the Tunisian island of Galite are cave dwellers, their habitations being grottoes which they have dug out of the limestone, or ancient burial caverns that they have enlarged. The subterranean villages of Matmata and of Medenine, hewn out of the rock, are in southern Tunisia.

A Christian subterranean church underground in the twelfth century still exists at Goba, Abyssinia. The enormous cavern discovered several years ago within two hours' walk of the port of Tanga, in German East Africa, contains rooms the roots of which are from 120 to 250 feet above the floor. Only a few of these vast chambers have yet been explored, for the entire cavern seems to be inhabited by millions of bats. One of these filled with a stick measured nearly five feet across its extended wings.

SAD YEAR FOR CUPID WAS ONE JUST PAST

DOMESTIC JARS FREQUENT AND SEVERE

Matrimonial Wrecks Almost Beyond Counting Have Strewn the Shores of Life--West Far Ahead of the East in the Number of Divorces That Have Been Asked For and Granted.

Chicago.—Surely New York's day must have been the saddest that Cupid over has spent.- When the little god balances his books for 1906 he will be compelled to sit down and weep, for the list of the matrimonial wrecks of the year shows an awful number of disasters. There have been enough domestic jars to shake the continent worse than the earthquake shook San Francisco. If they all had occurred at one instant. The tears that have been shed would make a salty sea if they could be collected in the desert basin of Sahara.

Indeed, it has been a bad year for Cupid. Divorces have been more numerous than in any other twelve months since marriage became an institution. Princes, dukes, counts, statesmen, magnates, end millionaires, butchers, doctors, grocers, lawyers, and laborers have come to grief in their love affairs.

In the good old days people married and lived happily ever after." Now the problem of the novel begins instead of ending at the altar. People get married and then get divorced.

Chicago still leads the world in divorce population, and perhaps in the facility with which divorce is granted, due cause belog shown. The herring of testimony and the grunting of a decree in default cases in this city takes only a few minutes, and the average length of time consumed is estimated at ten minutes by people who study divorce methods. That is why the local courts are known as "divorce mills." They work with the speed of a steam buzz saw as they go through the knots of matrimony. Your lawyer files the papers, your case is called, and burr-r-r—you are divorced.

It is the women who keep the buzz saw working in the divorce mills in Chicago. Four out of five suits are brought by the wives. The men are meaner than the women, perhaps; or else the husbands are more willing to rough it out without appeals to the court.

Air of Festivity in Courtroom.

While Cupid weeps at the sight of a divorce court, that is more than the complainant does. One Chicago divorce lawyer says that there is a noticeable air of festivity in the courtroom when cases are being heard. The average woman who appeals to the courts for release manifests no sense of sorrow or humiliation. It is a business proposition with her. She sues her husband for his cruelty or desertion and tells the story to the court in a business-like way. The uniformed stranger, strolling into the courtroom, easily might think the dispute was over a grocery bill or a ruined gown, rather than a ruined life. The law says she may have a divorce, and she proposes to get it. That is all. If her husband has a good position or a bit of property, she asks for alimony. The struggle for some form of maintenance sometimes becomes strenuous, showing that the woman regrets the loss of the man who has been her support rather more than the loss of the man who has been her husband.

All this is like a comic opera, but it makes Cupid weep. He has been telling the world for thousands of years that marriage is e sacred institution, and now he first discovers that it is a joke.

The proportion of divorces to marriages to New York is one in four. In Chicago it is one in nine; in San Francisco it is one in four. The further west you go the more frequent are divorces. The decree separation has hitched its wagon to the star of empire. Kansas City, Los Angeles, and Seattle are as bad as San Francisco, in each of these cities there being one divorce to every four marriages. The statistics for Sioux Falls are kept locked up in a reporter proof vault.

The most notable case of the year, perhaps, was the international tragedy of the Castellanes. For years the world had witnessed the extravagances and indiscretions of Count Boni and wondered how much longer the poor woman would endure them for the sake of her children. American sympathy, almost without exception, has been with Anne Gould, for however much Jay Gould, the railroad magnate, may have been distrusted, his daughters always were popular. Count Castellane was a ridiculous joke to people who took life lightly and no exaggerated villain to those who took it seriously.

Troubles of Heiresses and Titles.

When the countess finally left her husband, people on both sides of the Atlantic said it served him right. The matter of separation has been settled, but the count still is clamoring for money—millions of it—to pay his debts. Perhaps in the final disposition of the case he will receive an allowance even greater than the alimony of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, who draws $250,000 a year from her former husband, W. K. Vanderbilt. Count Castellane is said to have cost $15,000,000 when the Gould family first bought him his title and it probably will take as much more for them to be rid of their bad bargain.

The domestic wreck of the Marlboroughs was more of a surprise to the world. There had been rumors of disagreements, but these were not thought to be serious. The duke of Marlborough, like the count de Castellane, was not able to understand the character of American girls. They might be attracted by a title, but they would not submit to the indignities—it is a mild word—of their husbands. It was sold at the time Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt married the duke that she had made the best bargain of any American girl that ever bought a foreign lordling, but her grave charges against Mrs. Hartje and her coachman and counter charges on the part of the wife that she was the victim of a conspiracy in which her husband—the man she had loved and with whom she had lived—sought to blast her reputation by hired and perjured testimony. This was one of the most notorious domestic tragedies ever aired in any court of any land. It was worse even than the Tegagrt case. Alone it was enough to make the year memorable in the matter of divorce.

In contrast with this the trouble of Mrs. Charles T. Yerkes and Wilson Mizner were almost farcical. Mr. Yerkes, the traction magnate, died in New York in December last under circumstances that called the attention of the whole world to his widow. Although they had not been living together harmoniously during the later years of his life, Mrs. Yerkes declared that her husband had never ceased to love her, and that she was devoted to his memory.

Yet within a month it was announced that Mrs. Yerkes had married Wilson Mizner. At first the public refused to believe it. Mizner was not 30 and the widow of Yerkes was more than 50. He was a gay young soldier of fortune, and people only laughed when he smiled and admitted that the marriage had taken place, especially as Mrs. Yerkes tearfully and indignantly declared that the idea was absurd.

But the news was true. Mizner and Mrs. Yerkes were man and wife. Before people were through talking about the case the couple quarreled and parted and remained apart. It was said, though not known to be true, that Mr. Mizner had insisted upon her giving him $1,000,000, and that she had refused. After the separation Mrs. Yerkes-Mizner explained the marriage by saying: "Mr. Mizner came to me at a time when I was looking at life through eyes that were filled with tears. He was an artist. He enchanted me. The way I was approached first startled and amazed me, then captivated me." But within a few days she discovered, she says, that the young man did not love her. The case was a nine days' joke to the public, but it was a great shock to Cupid, who insists that all matters pertaining to love be taken seriously.

Cupid and Senator Platt.

Senator Thomas C. Platt of New York is reported as saying: "It is better to be wise than to be rich," and that "A good wife is the best of all a man's possessions." Yet Senator Platt was not wise enough to get a good wife, if what he says be true. Or if his wife was good, as she declares she was, then the aged New York senator was not wise enough to keep her. He is not the first man marked by Cupid, however, as hising unable to live up to his own epigrams.

When the separation of the Platts occurred a few months ago Mrs. Platt defied her husband, notwithstanding the charges he made, and threatened to bring suit against him. She insisted that he should give her a share of his fortune. She is quoted as saying: "He bought my beauty; now let him pay for it." If the senator did not pay in money, at least he paid in sorrow and humiliation and loss of dignity—paid to the last farthing.

Love Leaves After Many Years.

It is small wonder that Senator Platt declared in one of his latest interviews that his life as he had lived it "was not worth the living," and that if he had the years back he would spend them differently. Rich and powerful as he is he finds nothing in his old age to compensate him for his disrupted home.

W. J. White, the chewing gum magnate of Cleveland, was the central figure in one of the domestic wrecks of the year. Perhaps he was spoiled by good fortune, as Mr. Corey was said to be. Mr. White lived for 33 years with the wife of his youth. To her sorrow they had planned and worked to build up the foundations of his millions. After they had grown old and each together they found that love had flown out through the window as the million came pouring in at the door. Mr. White left home and Mrs. White sued for divorce. There was no public scandel in the case, but it certainly was one of the sadder Cupid wee. He likes to see the white haired man and wife going down the hill of life hand in hand. Having borne the burden of the day together, they should reconcile themselves to the calm and peace of the evening.

W. J. Lemp, the millionaire brewer of St. Louis, also had trouble which resulted in his separation from the beautiful Mrs. Lemp, known in St. Louis as the "levendar lady" on account of the prevailing color scheme of her many beautiful gowns.

Four Times as Many Separations.

Among the more famous Chicago cases of the year might be mentioned that of Clarence Eddy, the organist. This was a musical romance, in which the first discord was struck after nearly 20 years of married life. The "artistic temperament" of the great organist is mentioned in connection with the domestic unhappiness. Cupid has had trouble from time immemorial with the artistic temperament. The separation of the Eddys occurred in Paris, and Mr. Eddy first brought suit in Chicago, but afterward dismissed his case and secured the divorce in South Dakota last summer.

The list of the year's domestic tragedies might be continued almost endlessly. It is no wonder that Cupid weeps. Efforts are being made by divorce congresses and reformers to cure the evil by a national divorce law. It is claimed that if the road to separation were made more difficult to travel there would be fewer divorces and perhaps less unhappiness.

In recent years, while the population was increasing 30 per cent, the number of divorces has risen 200 per cent. The disproportion is increasing rapidly. If it keeps on for another generation there will be a divorce for every marriage.

Meantime dejected Cupid ponders the case. He knows how to make people fall in love and marry, but he can find no way in which they may be happy though married. He thinks much if legislation against divorces would compel them to continue to love one another.

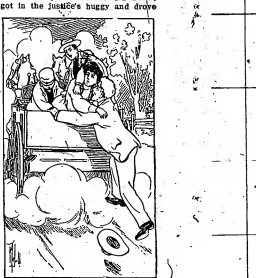
GETS SWEETHEART IN OLD ROMAN WAY.

LOVER CAPTURES HER IN TUG OF WAR WITH BROTHERS.

KNOT THEN QUICKLY TIED

Irate Father Accepts the Inevitable and Forgives—Story Showing Romance Still Lives in Tennessee Hills.

Dresden, Tenn.—A good story of a lover who captured his sweetheart and carried her off and married her in the good old Roman way come from the Twentieth district of this county and is told as follows in a local newspaper:



It appears that Ed Grief has been much in love with Ellie Francis for some time. The courtship, however, was carried on very much against the wishes of the young women's parents. For some six months they had kept their eyes upon her at church, at school and at home. If they were not watching they had some person always near whose intention was to keep down the match.

In that mysterious way known only to lovers, however, they kept up a correspondence with each other, she assuring him upon every occasion possible that her heart was still true. One recent Sunday morning she conveyed the intelligence to her lover that she was going to visit her uncle in Hyndaver community, and would likely be accompanied only by her two brothers, aged 15 and 17 years. This news was sufficient for the young man, and he made preperations accordingly.

He came to Dresden and procured the necessary license. He then secured the services of Squire W. W. House, a hosom friend of his, and posted him near the roedside where the wagon was to pass. At the hour often the wagon came rolling along, and sure enough the young woman was in it, sitting on the front seat between her two brothers. As it pessed Grief came out of the bushes, belted it and reached for his sweetheart.

The brothers, seeing what was about to happen, whipped the mules, but Grief bed teken the precaution to build a rail fence across the road just in front. He swung on the wagon with all his strength, and the team soon came to a standstill. He seized Miss Francis with both arms around the waist, while the brothers hung on to her feet, but like all lovers in such cases he pulled her loose, and they struck across the open field to find the justice. He was not very far away, and the knot was tied before you could say "Jack Robinson."

After the marriage, the couple, fearing the father, who bed just lost a daughter, and gained a son-in-law, might carry out his often-expressed desire to thresh the life out of both of them if ever this important event which had just occurred did occur, got in the justice's buggy and drove to his house for dinner, where they could at the same time have the protection of the law.

The boys in the meantime had gotten over it out of their system to their uncle and hed struck for home and told the story. Francis, finding his daughter had beaten him, rode onc of the mules back, looking for the fleeing couple. He learned that they were at the justice's residence and celled with the voice of a roaring lion.

Squire House went out to see him and efter much discussion and persuesion he agreed to take his daughter back and receive his new son-in-law into the family. They put the girl on the mule, while the father and son walked homeward together, discussing the weather end crops like old-time friends.

MAROONED ON DESERT WITH NAVAJO INDIAN

Colorado Girl Keeps Lonely Vigil Beside Sagebrush Fire, Even Welcoming Howls of Coyotes.

Denver, Colo.—Camped all night on the desert with a Navajo Indian, Triet to what Miss Grace Gertrude Dalton, a young nurse, of Durenge, Col., did, and she smiles as she tells the story. "Oh, it was nothing," said Miss Dalton. "You see, I was just going from my uncle's trading store for a visit with relatives, and our team gave out, and we hed to camp out over night on the way—the Navajo was taking me on the trip. The Indian took me in a buckboard. It was 60 miles across the desert of sagebrush and sand. At noon the team gave out, and sundown caught us a long way from Ojo Alimo.

"We had reached a small stream when the Indian made signa that we would have to spend the night there. We got out of the buckboard, and the Indian hobbled the ponies. He gathered a lot of sagebrush and started a fire. After awhile we went to bed, the Indian on one side of the fire and I on the other, rolled in blankets. I never slept a wink. It was the longest night I ever spent. When the coyotes began to howl close to us I was glad to hear them, for it somewhat broke the monotony of waiting out there on a lonely desert, miles and miles from any person, with only an Indian for company.

"I wasn't afraid, and if I had been it would not have helped matters. There was no danger. I would sooner trust the average Navajo Indian than lots of the white men. They are fine fellows, and can be trusted in any case."

Miss Dalton is a buxom blonde, pretty, and about 22 years of age. With an aunt she visited the St. Louis World's Fair, accompanied by a tall, handsome young Navajo, whom they took along as a servant. Miss Dalton and the young Indian attracted much attention on the streets of St. Louis.

CRACKED HER MAMMA'S RIB.

Buxom Girl Hugs Parent, Who Sustains Injury as a Result.

Atlantic City, N. J.—Overjoyed at seeing her mother, whom she visited in eattelpation of Christmas, Miss Daisy English, buxom and pretty, crushed the mother to her breast in a fervid embrece and broke one of the mater's ribs.

The mother, Mrs. Emma English, who is a rather frail little woman, swung free of her daughter's embrece and complained of e pain in her side, which a physician diagnosed quickly as a fracture of the lower rib.

Miss Daisy lives in this city with e sister and had not seen her mother, who lives at Northfield, for several weeks prior to the visit. Mrs. English saw her daughter coming up the front footway of the little cottage yard and ran to the door to meet her.

The hug was given with food force on each side, but Miss Daisy failed to take account of her fresh young strength until she heard the verdict of the surgeon.

College Gets a Mule.

Oberlin, O.—A big mule in Peter's hall was whet greeted Janitor May as he entered the building early the other morning.

No sound did the animal make except the shuffling of his hoofs as he stood on the second floor in the gallery overlooking the central court. He was a large specimen and if it required the united efforts of May and Folk, the college carpenter, to get him out of the building.

The stairs were broad and it was not very difficult for a bunch of college boys to lead him up, where he would have caused trouble had he not been discovered by the janitor. Whether it was a class "stunt" hes not been learned, but it is attributed to the freshmen.

Girls Make Pins.

The making of common, everyday pins is an interesting process. The wire is fed into a machine that cuts the pin the right length and puts a head on it. Then they are thrown into e fluid that brightens them, and fed into a hopper by girls, who regulate sumchine that puts the pins into the paper, ten rows at a time quicker than you can say "Jack Robinson."

THE SUNBEAM.

VOL. VI. SUNBEAM, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, JAN. 25, 1907. NO. 43.

Washington Letter

What Is Going On in the National Capital—Perry Belmont Building Spite Fence to Shut Off View of Thomas Nelson Page—Great Demand for Ten-Dollar Bills.

WASHINGTON.—Perry Belmont and Thomas Nelson Page have "a mad" with each other. Rapid-fire developments in the strife between the millionaire and the author have kept society and officialdom at the capital wondering what would come next.

Mr. Belmont won the latest round. He built a spite fence right across from Mr. Page's best beloved window seat, and those who have followed the Belmont fortunes in the struggle claim easy honors for the capitalist.

Mr. Page drew first blood, and it was perhaps a stinging blow which marked the battle's inception, when he wrote some pieces for the magazines which were not highly flattering to Perry Belmont nor to his brother, G. H. P.

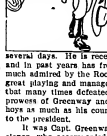
Directly across from the charming home of Mr. Page is a triangular bit of ground, large enough for a front yard, but too small for a city park. One of the items that gets into the "dotty" columns concerning the "home life of great authors" ascribes to Mr. Page the supreme pleasure of lingering in his window seat and peeking across his own lawns into the restive bit of landscape gardening.

Mr. Belmont read the magazine articles. He also heard of the anecdote in which Mr. Page played the lead. A few days later the real estate transfer noted that the triangular tract of ground had passed into the possession of P. Belmont.

When next Mr. Page sought recuperation from literary toil his joyous land-scape had degenerated into a barnyard symphony. Mr. Belmont's laborers had erected a high and unsightly wire fence and another fence started in on a rock wall, which sent Mr. Page's property into a settlement by itself and with the view terminating at the lot line.

AN INDICATION OF GENERAL PROSPERITY.

Secretary Shaw has succeeded in securing the return to the treasury of 600 $1,000 bills. The place of these in the circulation has been taken, in large part, by new ten-dollar bills. The reason is that appeals have been coming to the treasury constantly to send out more tens, because there was a tremendous demand for them.



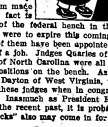
This demand is simply a sign of the great prosperity of the country, according to financial men. Several years ago there was a constant cry for one and two-dollar bills. That cry has passed and people are waiting for tens.

The supposition is that in these fat financial days the multitudes are looking upon the ten-dollar note as lightly as they looked upon a note of one-fifth or one-tenth its value in the days when banks were breaking and people were asking the way to the soup-house.

There is probably no less ground for alarm about the statement that the demand for bills of a high denomination means that prosperity is abroad. When wages are low and when people are spending little or nothing for luxuries they may want ten-dollar bills, but they don't get them.

The requests for "tenners" worried the treasury department for a long while. Under the law it couldn't put these bills out except in exchange for money didn't come in as rapidly as it should; so if was that an attempt was made to get some notes of large denomination from the financial centers and to put the "sawbucks" out in their place. There isn't much use for $1,000 bills in the paths of general circulation, and it was considered better to get them in and let the tens out. In this way the secretary managed to put 60,000 ten-dollar bills into the country practically at one shipment.

"JACK" GREENWAY DECLINES FEDERAL JOB.



Capt. "Jack" Greenway, rough rider and personal friend of President Roosevelt since they fought and camped together on the wet soil of Cuba, has been offered the position of commissioner general of the land office to succeed William A. Richards, who is shortly to go out of office. He cannot, however, accept, and greatly regrets his inability to do so, because of the affection he bears his friend and chief.

Capt. Greenway is engaged in iron mining in Minnesota and has given certain pledges to the company he is employed with. He does not think he is at liberty to ask release from any of these pledges.

The noted ex-sotldier and football player of Yale has been a guest of President Roosevelt for several days. He is received there on terms of the most cordial friendship, and in past years has frequently visited the president and family. He is as much admired by the Roosevelt boys as by the president. It was Greenway's great playing and management of the Yale football team in his college days that many times defeated President Roosevelt's alma mater, Harvard. The prowess of Greenway and his victories in the past appeal to the Roosevelt boys as much as his courage in war and his manly qualities in peace appeal to the president.

It was Capt. Greenway and John R. McIlhenny, now a civil service commissioner, who accompanied the president on his last trip through the south, and he affectionately spoke of them as "the two Johns." He succeeded in getting McIlhenny to come to Washington and take an official position, and when he began to hunt for a man he thought would be beyond proof against certain influences exerted in the land office he thought of Greenway. The latter's mining ventures are paying him too well, though, to take a government office.

FEDERAL JUDGES FACING CRITICISM.

Before the winter is over considerable is likely to be heard about federal judges who overturn laws on constitutional grounds after the ablest lawyers among the nation's statesmen have spent weeks and months in perfecting the same. Recent decisions with respect to the employers' liability act have already started the discussion.

In his last annual message to congress the president referred to the almost nonchalant ease with which federal judges declare unconstitutional measures which have been "solemnly" considered by congress.

Almost everybody has forgotten that Judges Evans and McCall were once members of the lower house of congress. Neither of them made a mark as a constitutional lawyer. The fact is being pointed out that many occupants of the federal bench in the lower courts to-day are men who, if their terms were to expire this coming spring, would be known as "lame ducks." Most of them have been appointed simply to take care of them when they got out of a job. Judges Quarles of Wisconsin, McComas of Maryland and Pritchard of North Carolina were all senators who had lost out when elevated to life positions on the bench. Aside from Judges Evans and McCall, there is Judge Dayton of West Virginia, who was a member of the house. Few, if any, of these judges when in congress ever cut any figure in constitutional debates. Inasmuch as President Roosevelt has freely criticised judicial decisions in the recent past, it is probable that the policy of rewarding so-called "lame ducks" also may come in for criticism from other sources of public life.

HEADS BIG RAILROAD SYSTEM

James McCrea of Pittsburg has assumed the reins of government of the Pennsylvania railroad lines, having been elected to succeed A. J. Cassatt as president of the company. He was also elected to all the vacancies created by the death of Mr. Cassatt.

That Mr. McCrea was fully in accord with the policy of Mr. Cassatt and that he will go on with the labors begun by him was assured by his announcement made directly after his election.

Like Mr. Cassatt, Mr. McCrea began at the very bottom of the ladder. Born in Philadelphia on May 1, 1849, he entered railroad service in June, 1865, as rodman and assistant engineer with the Connellsville & Southern Pennsylvania railroad and remained in that position for two years. He then took the position of rodman on the Wilmington & Reading railroad. In 1868 he became an assistant engineer of the Allegheny Valley. In 1871 he went to the Pennsylvania and successively became an assistant engineer and division superintendent, manager, general manager and fourth vice president of the Pennsylvania lines west of Pittsburg. He was soon promoted to the second vice presidency and since 1883 has been first vice president.

McCrea also has been identified with other railroads. Since September 8, 1893, he has been president of the Cincinnati & Muskegon Valley railroad; since January 15, 1896, president of the Terre Haute & Indianapolis, and since August 1, 1896, president of the Grand Rapids & Indiana.

WILL DIRECT CAMPAIGN

With the retirement of George B. Cortelyou Harry S. New of Indiana becomes acting chairman of the Republican national committee. For several years Mr. New has been vice chairman of the organization. On numerous occasions he has demonstrated ability as a party leader, notably during the last presidential campaign, when he was in charge of the western quarters of the national committee. In that position he exerted himself in rolling up the tremendous plurality for Roosevelt and Fairbanks. He has a wide acquaintance with public men and is very popular personally. He has been a delegate to many conventions, has served in the Indiana senate and was a captain of volunteers during the Spanish-American war.

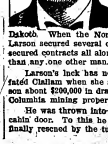
The present Republican national committee will direct the organization of the next national convention. A national committee is a much more important body in Republican than in Democratic conventions as all contests in Republican conventions are first passed upon by the national committee and delegates seated by it are entitled to vote. Its work, of course, is reviewed by the credentials committee and the convention, but its power is shown by the manner in which the Roosevelt delegates from Wisconsin were turned down three years ago. It is expected there will be an unusually large number of contesting delegates from the south in the 1908 convention.

NEW MAJOR GENERAL

Maj. Gen. Jesse M. Lee, recently detached from command of the department of the Visayas in the Philippines has been placed on the retired list of the army, the compulsory age of law on account of age, and Brig. Gen. J. Franklin Bell, chief of staff, the senior officer in his grade, promoted major general.

Gen. Bell is one of the younger general officers. He is from Kentucky, and was graduated from the military academy at West Point in the class of 1878. He was then appointed second lieutenant, Ninth cavalry, and became captain, Seventh cavalry, in March, 1901. He served with distinction in the volunteer army during the Spanish war and the Philippine insurrection. Entering as a major of engineers, he subsequently commanded the Thirteenth United States volunteer infantry, and was appointed brigadier general of volunteers in December, 1899.

In recognition of his gallant services, the president promoted him in February, 1901, from captain, Seventh cavalry, to brigadier general in the regular army. While acting as superintendent of the General Staff college at Leavenworth, Kas., last spring he was summoned to Washington for duty as chief of staff to succeed Lieut. Gen. John C. Bates, retired.



FORTUNE TO AID IN POLITICS

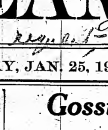
As the second son of the earl of Rosebery it is not at all probable that Hon. Neil Primrose would ever have found himself in such straitened circumstances as would necessitate his working for a living. That is rendered still more remote contingency by his recent inheritance of $500,000 and a big London house, under the will of his father, Lord Rosebery, who died a bachelor. Hon. Neil is a lucky fellow. His elder brother, Lord Dalmeny, will come into the titles and estates some day, but wealthy dads does not always follow the laws of primogeniture, and, it is well-known that Neil has been endowed with the bigger share of his father's ability and unmortered gifts. He is only 24, but years ago his friends predicted for him a brilliant political career; and it was to help him "make good" that Miss Cohen left him a handsome slice of her fortune. He may have to wait, though, until the next general election before he finds a chance to seek parliamentary honors.

Hon. Neil Primrose is a straight, fine fellow, and an uncommonly good looking one, too. Although he won high honors at Oxford he distinguished himself at athletics also, and was one of the best heavyweight boxers in the university. At polo, too, he is a hard man to beat.

"LUCKY PETE LARSON"

Peter Larson, 25 times a millionaire, has again proved his right to the title of "Lucky Pete Larson," by which he is known throughout the northwest. Next to Senator W. A. Clark, he is the richest man in that section. Forty-five years ago Larson landed in New York a poor Danish immigrant without a word of English. Thanks to his luck—

Pete Larson to-day walks the streets of Helena with all the vigor of a youth of 20, despite the fact that less than a year ago medical experts told him he could not survive a month. All he did was to adopt some simple home remedies.



"Lucky Pete" got a job on the government fields being built in the south soon after his arrival in America. He saved $800 and went to Dakota. When the Northern Pacific started to build west from Bismarck Larson secured several contracts and thus reached Montana. He eventually secured contracts all along the Northern Pacific and built more of its mileage than any one other man.

Larson's luck has never deserted him. He was a passenger on the ill-fated Claiman when she sank off Victoria two years ago. He had on his person about $200,000 in drafts, with which he intended to purchase some British Columbia mining properties.

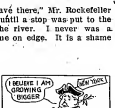
He was thrown into the water, but contrived to find among the flotsam a cabin door. To this he held with bull-dog tenacity for several hours, until finally rescued by the tug Scallon.

Gossip of Gotham

Rockefeller and Other Millionaires Annoyed by Quarrymen Along the Hudson—Remarkable Increase in Population of City—Heiress Joins the Bachelor Maid Class.

NEW YORK.—John D. Rockefeller is willing to pay $1,000,000 to obtain surcease from an annoyance that has been wearing on his nerves several months. Having been cured of his indigestion, he finds that both his health and his enjoyment of his extensive Pocantico estate at Tarrytown are being seriously affected by shocks from blasting at Hook mountain on the westerly side of the Hudson river.

In their eagerness to get out as much rock as possible before they are prohibited by law, quarrymen have been shaking up the entire countryside in the vicinity of Nyack by the violence of their blasts. Residents of the east bank of the river, three miles away, suffer as greatly from the shocks as do people near by because the rock stratum which emerges on the west bank in Hook mountain underlies the river and forms the foundation for much of the land on the Tarrytown side.



The entire colony of wealthy men whose properties extend from Ossining to Dobbs Ferry is complaining of the miniature earthquakes that rock their houses, break panes of glass, and throw vases and other objects to the floor. Night does not bring relief, as the company which operates the quarry, is working day and night shifts.

The house of Mr. Rockefeller and his son, John D., Jr., situated on small hills back of Tarrytown, are both sensitive to the tremors sent across the river from the lofty rent mountain. When the blasts are particularly heavy the Rockefeller houses shake perceptibly. In some of the rooms plaster has been knocked from the walls.

The senior Rockefeller told a friend recently that the pleasure of living in his Pocantico home had been almost completely destroyed by the blasting. For this reason the Rockefellers have not spent as much time there this season as in their custom.

"If it were not for the splendid golf links I have there," Mr. Rockefeller is quoted as saying, "we would close up the place until a stop was put to the terrible work in progress on the other side of the river. I never was a nervous man, but those terrific blasts rather set me on edge. It is a shame that they are not stopped at once."

CITY GAINS OF A THOUSAND PEOPLE A DAY.

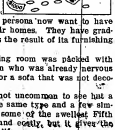
According to the New Year's custom, Father Knickerbocker has been taking account of stock and finds occasion to congratulate himself that in 1906 his City of Gotham has broken all records for growth. Its total increase in population has been 375,000, or more than 1,000 new inhabitants for every day in the year.

The floating population—visitors and others whose stay is temporary, whose homes are the hotels and lodging-houses and whose presence gives the air of bustle and rapid life to the shopping district and the Great White Way—is estimated at 350,000 to 200,000. To the city and its suburbs during the year has come an entrance of $900,000,000 in real estate values—a trifle, to be sure, but nearly three times the property valuation of the entire state of Nevada in 1904, nearly equal to that of Arizona and Wyoming combined, far greater than that of New Mexico, Idaho or Utah, and about equal to the entire property valuation of South Dakota in that year.

For the five years work on rapid transit routes the total will have been $300,000,000, and the work under way will cost $1,000,000,000 by the time it is completed. Just to keep in touch with things the old genuttleman in the powdered wig has broken another record—that for telephone installations. Within a radius of about 35 miles of the city hall there are now in service 385,000 telephones, so that New York has in service more phones than London and the ten other largest cities of Great Britain combined; more than France, Holland, Belgium and Switzerland combined, and more than are to be found in the 20 largest cities in Germany. New installations in the territory in and near New York for the year numbered 67,000, or nearly 200 a day.

HEIRESS CHOOSES TO BE BACHELOR MAID.

Miss Alice Lewisohn, the daughter of the late Leonard Lewisohn and heiress to $2,000,000, is the latest of New York's rich young women to join the bachelor maid class. Miss Lewisohn has rented the house at No. 46 West Thirty-second street, and it is understood she is to make it her home.



The young woman has shown an independence that is characteristic of her family, and her present move to set up an establishment of her own, is no surprise to those who are acquainted with her.

It was Miss Lewisohn who became part backer of the recent production of Browning's "Pippa Passes" at the Majestic theater. This did not become known at the time. Under the name of Leonora Leigh she appeared in the cast, playing the role of Phene. She was recognized by many of her society friends in the front of the house and then the story became public.

Miss Lewisohn hastened to deny the report that she had any intention of following the stage. She explained that she had appeared in amateur theatricals several times and welcomed the opportunity offered by Mrs. L. Moyne to play Phene, as she always had been interested in the study of Browning.

Miss Lewisohn is a sister of Jesse, Fred and Adolph Lewisohn. She is about 23 years old and the idol of her three brothers. She has devoted a great deal of her time to settlement work on the East side.

SIMPLICITY IN HOMES IS NOW THE STYLE.

Simplicity in the decoration of homes is now the fashionable fashion and when one enters the mansion of a nabob in anticipation of feasting his eyes upon rare tapestries and beautifully carved and upholstered furniture and wondrous works of art he is usually doomed to disappointment. The present fad for having rooms so bare and empty that they look almost unfurnished is a physical result brought about by a condition that has manifested itself before in different forms.

Bathrobes are nervous, hurried and crowded; and for that reason they have finally realized the importance of having their homes as restful in effect and as homelike as possible. Less than a decade ago the average New York millionaire's home was an institution to look at more than a place in which to dwell in comfort. These same persons now want to have a feeling of repose, at least when they get to their homes. They have gradually learned that the restful influence of a room is the result of its furnishing and decoration.

Ten years ago the average New York drawing room was packed with furniture and bric-a-brac such as to make a person who was already nervous more fidgety. At that time there was not a chair or a sofa that was not decorated with either a flinger or a draper.

Now these fussy rooms have gone and it is not uncommon to see but a half-dozen mission chairs, a buffet and table of the same type and a few simple decorations to match in the dining-rooms of some of the swellest Fifth Avenue homes. Of course, the furniture is rich and costly, but it gives the rooms that sweet charm suggestive of the simple life.

TRAIN BURIED TEN DAYS IN THE SNOW

REACHES ST. PAUL AFTER A SEVERE EXPERIENCE IN THE DRIFTS.

New Blockades Feared—Farmers in North Dakota Are Suffering—New York City Is Trying Day With Heavy Snow Storm.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 18.—After being delayed for ten days in Montana and North Dakota, the Great Northern train No. 4, from Seattle, finally arrived in St. Paul Thursday afternoon. The coaches were literally covered with ice and snow and the train crew showed the results of days of unceasing toil. The passengers appeared none the worse for their detention, as they had been well cared for by the railroad company.

Now that the great blockade in Montana, near Cutbank, is opened there is danger of another blockade in North Dakota. It has been snowing for the last 24 hours to such an extent that the drifts are piling over the rotary plows, and if weather conditions do not give relief, there is likely to be a worse blockade on the Great Northern system.

The Canadian Pacific road is still completely paralyzed and is temporarily out of business in the west. This road, being so far north of the other two roads, receives the full effect of the blizzards and communication is completely cut off.

Distress in North Dakota.

Reports still continue to come in from the snow-bound districts of North Dakota and each tells of the severe conditions in that section. The farmers, perhaps, are suffering more than any one elen from the climatic conditions, which they say are the worst which have existed for very many years, and they are much worried over the fact that they are unable to ship their cattle to markets.

At Cando things have become quite serious and supplies of certain necessities have long since been exhausted. Mails have not been received for more than a week and plans are being formulated for the carrying of mail to the main line of the railroad by means of teams.

From Hope, N. D., comes word that not in ten years has the residents of that section been compelled to contend with such severe weather as has prevailed during the past four days The residents along the Aneta branch of the Great Northern have had keen cause for alarm, and when the bread supply in the restaurants gave out a week ago, anxious faces were seen on all sides.

Snow Worries Gotham.

New York, Jan. 18.—A six inch snow storm visited New York Thursday, affording it the first genuine touch of wintry weather. But the effects of the storm were felt in more or less degree all day, but with those hands long bound and caught and held prisoners in slowly moving cars, with traffic on the two hundred miles by delayed, the real seriousness of the situation did not develop until the rush hours at night. Thousands of commuters homeward bound to points in New Jersey and States lieand were subjected to delays of several hours, which were compelled to feel their way from shore to shore. Many hotels reported overflows of guests from suburban places who could not get home. The telephone service to out of town points was badly crippled.

The city was totally unprepared for the sudden transition from spring to arctic winter and much suffering among the poor is the result.

MERGER OF FREIGHT LINES.

Many Concerns Soon to Be Operated Under One Head.

Milwaukee, Jan. 19.—The most important mail by far the most sweeping consolidation of freight lines of the great railway systems and combinations of the country that has been brought about in years is booked to be unit within a short time by the Vanderbilt system. The plans, it is learned, are now practically matured.

The plan is the absolute consolidation of nil of the "fast freight" lines and "dispatch" lines which have for years been operated under the general Vanderbilt system, and will place all the lines under one corporation—the Merchants' Dispatch company.

REFORM SCHOOL ATTACKED.

Charity Board Moves to Annul Charter of Peoria Institution.

Springfield, Ill., Jan. 18.—The state board of public charities Thursday adopted the report of the committee appointed to investigate the state industrial school for girls at Peoria, to the effect that the home was badly mismanaged and that cruelties were practiced on the part of the superintendent, and that inmates were insufficiently fed and lodged. The board directed State's Attorney Scholes, of Peoria county, to proceed in the courts of that county to annul the charter of the institution.

Laurits' Slayer an Aristocrat.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 17.—Consternation has been caused in governmental circles by the discovery that the assassin of Gen. von Der Launitz, late prefect of police, was the son of a prominent personage connected with the government and a member of an aristocratic family.

OHIO FLOOD IS SERIOUS

THOUSANDS OF PERSONS ARE RENDERED HOMELESS.

Relief Measures Taken by Cincinnati Authorities—Shawneetown, Ill., Is Not Much Alarmed.

Cincinnati, Jan. 18.—With the river flood n reality in a region extending a distance of more than 400 miles, thousands of peoples are suffering for the necessities of life and thousands more are homeless. All indications point to n stage of at least 65 feet in this city, making this the greatest flood since that of February, 1884.

The city authorities Thursday afternoon begun to care for the persons who have been made homeless or are otherwise suffering. Mayor Dempsey and Chief of Police Millikin inspected all flooded sections of the city and the mayor will at once draw on the $10,000 emergency fund for the relief of sufferers by flood. All school buildings and churches in the East end have been opened as temporary homes for the persons who own homes and whose homes have been invaded by the river.

The street car lines in both the East and West ends and in the suburbs on both sides of the river have been crippled.

About 2,000 people on n hill known as Turkey Ridge in the East end have been isolated by the flood, which cut them off from the mainland. Many of them were removed by the police to places of greater safety Thursday.

In Newport, Ky., the flood area covers eight blocks and 300 families have been compelled to vacate their homes. Much damage is being done in Covington to residences and business houses along the river front. Traffic generally in the river district on both sides of the river has been suspended.

Cincinnati, Jan. 19.—At eight o'clock Friday night the Ohio river registered 61 feet and was rising at the rate of one-tenth per hour.

Shawneetown, Ill., Jan. 19.—The flood situation in Shawneetown Friday night was somewhat threatening, but not alarming. The gauge showed 44 feet, and indications were that it would reach 50 feet, which is the danger line. The levee around Shawneetown has been thoroughly inspected by experts and found to be in excellent shape and it will, it is believed, stand all the water that comes during this rise. Rain water has covered the extremely low parts of town, and a few families have had to move out, but in this matter is far from serious.

Pittsburg, Pa., Jan. 19.—At ten o'clock Friday night the water in the Monongahela river reached a stage of 21 feet nine inches and was stationary. Reports from up river points are that the water is falling.

D. P. DYER, JR., ACQUITTED.

St. Louis Subtreasury Teller Not Guilty of Embezzlement.

St. Louis, Jan. 19.—David P. Dyer, Jr., son of the United States district attorney, and a teller in the local subtreasury, was acquitted by a jury in the United States district court Friday night on a charge of having embezzled $61,000 of government funds. The jury was out five hours and the verdict was greeted with cheers, the courtroom being nearly filled with friends of the Dyer family and federal employes.

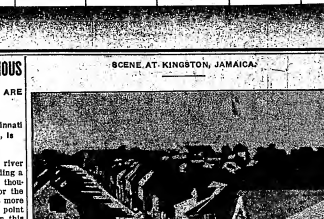
Dyer's defense was that, while admitting that his books showed a shortage of the amount stated in the indictment and that he had falsified the records to cover the discrepancy, he had no knowledge of how the shortage occurred and had refrained from reporting it in the hope that he could find and correct the mistakes.

DISTURBANCES IN SICILY.

Mt. Etna More Active and Slight Earthquakes Felt.

Catania, Sicily, Jan. 17.—The earthquake at Kingston, Jamaica, was followed by increased activity of Mt. Etna, and slight earthquakes in the Medonian mountains. Prof. Ricke, director of the Etna observatory, says that either the fire openings inside the crater, which were discovered in 1832, have increased in size, or that eruptions are occurring inside the crater, as from the south side nothing but smoke and a reflection of fire can be seen.

Vesuvius, reports Prof. Matteucci, director of the observatory at Mt. Vesuvius, reports increased agitation of this volcano coincident with the Kingston earthquake.



Big Gift for Poor Children.

Boston, Jan. 16.—The will of the late Charles F. Farrington, a merchant of this city, leaves $200,000 to be used to establish a memorial for the testator's father and mother, and is to be devoted to the benefit of children of all classes. The fund will be parceled out from time to time by Boston's poor children and free country trips and other diversions for small children then are to be given. circumstances that those things are denied them.

Landslide Destroys Gas Mains.

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 17.—Landslides along Elk river destroyed gas mains, and Charleston may be without gas for three days. Every industry is paralyzed, street cars and newspapers suspended, and people are hungry and cold. Because no printing can be done, the legislature will probably adjourn. The coal and coke railway tracks are covered with a huge slide for almost a mile eight miles above here.

SCENE AT KINGSTON, JAMAICA

View of One of the Principal Streets Was Caused by the Earthquake Section.

Leading to Harbor. Great Damage and Fire Which Followed in This

NO AMERICANS ARE KILLED IN QUAKE

HAVANA CABLE AGENT GIVES LATEST INFORMATION FROM JAMAICA.

Dead Mostly Negroes—Governor Sending Survivors Into Country—England Grateful, to Evans—More Details Direct From Kingston.

Kingston, Jamaica, Jan. 19.—The streets of this city are pickeled with American guards. Admiral Evans at the request of the British authorities landed a force of marines from the battleships Missouri and Indiana!

Six hundred bodies have been recovered and more are being constantly found.

Dynamite is being employed to clear away the debris of shattered buildings.

No Americans Killed.

Washington, Jan. 19.—The state department was furnished Friday with copies of cabled reports that the Western Union has received from its agent in Havana regarding the Kingston earthquake. In one of these reports it was stated that the latest information from Kingston was that no American was killed or seriously injured up to seven o'clock January 17.

The report further stated that it was estimated that the number of dead would reach 1,000. These reports were furnished the state department by President Clowry of the Western Union, upon its request for a statement of the situation. The department being unable to secure speedy transmission for its own dispatches and being overwhelmed by inquiries from persons in this country as to the safety of their friends in Jamaica.

The first cablegram is in part as follows:

"Havana, Jan 18.—Robert C. Clowry, President, New York—Cable ship Henry Holmes left St. Thomas for Jamaica with operators and instruments, also medical supplies. Reports from Kingston state one operator missing and one injured.

"Latest information from Kingston reports an American killed or injured up to seven p. m. January 17. Impossible to touch charred remains, found in bad state of decomposition, necessitating cremating some of them. Estimated dead will reach 1,000, mostly negroes. Residential section totally destroyed, none escaped without damage. Gov. Swettenham gradually relieving congestion, ordering people into country, where water supply is sufficient to meet all needs and preventing outbreak of contagious disease which generally follows such disasters. West India regiment stationed at Kingston suffered many casualties. Varona, Manager Havana Telegraph Office."

Some Vivid Descriptions.

London, Jan. 19.—The partial restoration of communication is bringing a number of belated dispatches to hand from which give additional details of the calamity. The city is described as "rocking like a ship in a choppy sea during the quake, and when the fire started the scene became hellish."

The only wharves left are those of the Hamburg-American, the Direct Mail and the Royal Mail Steamship companies. All the lumber yards and stocks have ben destroyed.

Many painful sights were witnessed as rescues were being made, and when dead bodies were being extricated from the ruins. A number of negroes trying to escape through open windows, became jammed therein by falling timbers and were either killed outright nr burned to death.

Bodies of the dead are being transported by lighter across the harbor to the Palisades and buried well away from the city. .

Many Flee to Ships.

Immediately after the first shock there was a mad rush of refugees in the sea front, and 700 persons were rescued by being taken on board vessels in the harbor.

Since the fateful Monday the visitors to Jamaica have been leaving the island as fast as they are able to secure passage. This thinning out of the population tends to relieve the anxiety of the authorities by reducing the number of mouths to feed.

Among others killed are Dr. Savage, a prominent medical man and a councillor of the city of Birmingham, Eng.; Mr. Machado, a tobacco exporter, and Isaac S. Brandon, a merchant.

Grateful to Admiral Evans.

The Daily Mail and other newspapers pay a tribute of gratitude to the splendid and prompt help given by Admiral Evans at Kingston, and the Mail asks regretfully why there was not a British warship at hand to render this service. "

A number of colonists interested in the West Indies met in London Friday and decided to ask the government to grant a loan to rebuild Kingston on a safer site. The Mail, supporting this idea, urges the government to accompany the offer of a loan by a commission from the Imperial grant that is not to be repaid.

More Details of Disaster.

Kingston, Jamaica, Jan. 19.—The awful devastation caused by the earthquake becomes more apparent as time passes.

Without warning the earth began to shake and tremble at; 3:20 Monday afternoon. The shocks, which came from the westward, lasted exactly 36 seconds. The whole city rocked like a ship in a choppy sea, and buildings reeled and fell eastward. A dense cloud of dust rose and enveloped Kingston in a semidarkness. The shocks were most destructive along the harbor front, where entire streets were leveled. Crowds of frightened, shrieking people streamed northwards towards the race course, hundreds with heads and bodies cut and bruised, covered with blood. Those who escaped with slight injury reported that large numbers of persons were buried under the fallen stores and tenements.

Flames Spread Rapidly.

As the dust lifted pillars of smoke arose in Harbor street, near the parish church, and shortly afterwards flames shot into the sky. It was then perceived that fire would complete the work of the earthquake. In half an hour the flames were leaping from block to block in the business sections. The fire department was useless. Lack of water, following upon the indequate supply of water, the earthquake having broken the mains, apparently a northerly breeze blowing at the time, which confined the conflagration to the south portion of the city, and the absolute panic that and ultimately spent its force Tuesday forenoon.

The buildings in the upper portion of the city were unhabitable and the residents sought refuge in the public parks and in lawns adjoinin the wrecked houses. It was a pitiable sight. Thousands of persons were homeless and hundreds were enduring agony from broken heads and limbs under the open sky. The city doctors were busy all night, amputating limbs and dressing wounds. The worst cases were taken to the general hospital, where the staff doctors attended to them, but many expired before morning.

Hundreds of Bodies Recovered.

The work of rescuing the entombed people was continued Tuesday and Wednesday and fully 400 corpses were recovered, but many more were hurt to ashes in the fire. Attempts at burying were made by the rabble, but the military guards stationed at the principal corners succeeded in restoring order.

Ecorts, as this dispatch is filed, are being made by the troops to clear away the debris from the streets, but the laborers are afraid of the ruins and are further shocks and consequently slow progress is being made.

On Monday night 15 distinct shocks were felt. On Tuesday there were 20 shocks and on Wednesday there were ten.

Refugees at Santiago.

Santiago, Cuba, Jan. 19. — The steamer Tomas Brooks has arrived here from Kingston with 17 refugees. They paint a horrible picture of the catastrophe and confirm the reports of the destruction of the principal buildings. The pilots in ant dare in enter the harbor owing to the changes in the channel.

The Machado cigar factory, in which many persons were at work, crumbled and 120 of these were killed.

Relief supplies are greatly needed at Kingston.

MOVE ANNOYING FOR REPUBLICANS

THEY MUST VOTE DOWN THE BLACKBURN AMENDMENT ON BROWNSVILLE.

Its Author Stubborn—Determined to Force the Issue—Lumber Trust Attacked—House Votes for Higher Salaries for Congressmen.

Washington, Jan. 19.—In the absence of Senator Aldrich, Senator Crane took charge of the forces in the senate Friday in opposition to the Blackburn amendment to the Foraker Brownsville resolution, and by two o'clock he had succeeded in inspiring more confidence than had been felt earlier in the day. He then announced his opinion that a vote would be reached on Monday and that the Blackburn provision would be laid on the table by a practically unanimous Republican vote.

When asked for his version of the situation Senator Blackburn, the author of the amendment, said that he was "standing pat."

Blackburn is Determined.

"I mean to force the issue as far as I can," he said, "and I do not believe that a fighting man like the president of the United States will oppose an amendment like mine, which is in line with his own course and conviction." He said he had been importuned by the Republicans to withdraw the amendment, but that he had declined to do so because he believed that the president was entitled to this declaration of faith and right, and he stated that if the Republicans should vote it down the consequences must be upon their shoulders. He declared that the amendment is an abstract declaration and that it is entirely disconnected with the Brownsville affair.

He repeated his conviction that a practically unanimous Democratic vote would be cast for the amendment, but expressed doubt as to whether a vote would be secured Monday.

Gets After Lumber Trust.

The senate Friday agreed to a resolution directing an investigation of the "lumber trust," and passed a bill increasing the artillery corps of the army.

An address was made by Senator Whyte, of Maryland, in protest against my encroachment by the federal government in the powers of the states.

Senator Kittredge spoke regarding the "lumber trust," declaring there was a combination in the country controlling the lumber industry and detailing its methods.

House for Higher Salaries.

By a ruling vote of 133 to 92 the house adopted an amendment to the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, which was taken from the speaker's table with senate amendments, increasing the salary of the vice president, the speaker and the members of the cabinet to $12,000 per annum; the senators and representatives, delegates from territories and the resident commissioner from Porto Rico to $7,500 per year, the increases to take effect March 4, 1907.

Effort was made to have a roll call, but only 34 members arose, which was not a sufficient number, and the house was relieved of the necessity of going on record.

An urgent deficiency bill was passed carrying a total of $344,650.

End of Debate in Sight.

Washington, Jan. 19.—Senate leaders Wednesday night regarded the end of the Brownsville discussion as in sight and it was confidently expected that a compromise resolution offered by Senator Foraker just before the close of Wednesday's session will be adopted. Senator Foraker had the floor to make what he expressed the hope would be the concluding speech on the subject. He will proceed immediately after morning business Thursday unless interfered with by the special order of the day, which is the delivery of eulogies on the life of the late Senator Isle of Tennessee.

Whether he speaks Thursday or Friday, he expected that he can will soon follow, although it is possible that other brief speeches may be made before the end is reached.

Forsker's New Resolution.

While on the floor Mr. Foraker offered a substitute for all of his previous resolutions on the Brownsville affair as follows:

"Resolved, That the committee on military affairs is hereby authorized and directed by subcommittee or otherwise to take and have printed the testimony for the purpose of ascertaining all the facts with reference to or connected with the affray at Brownsville Texas, on the night of August 13, 1906. That committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths; to sit during the sessions of the senate, and if deemed advisable, at Brownsville or elsewhere; the expenses of the investigation to be paid out of the contingent fund of the senate."

Anti-Pass Law For Idaho.

Boise, Idaho, Jan. 19.—The house Friday in committee of the whole voted to pass an anti-pass bill effective immediately after its passage and approval by the governor. This action was taken after Representative McCracken had held up to the view of his colleagues an annual pass over the Oregon Short Line and had declared that it was sent to him unsolicited Thursday night.

BUILT OF FOSSIL BONES.

Queerest House in the World is in Wyoming

"The queerest house in the world," said a geologist, "is undoubtedly the famous Bone cabin of Wyoming, near the Medicine Bow river. This cabin's foundations are built of fossil bones.

"Bones of dinosaurs jaws of the molodocus, teeth of the brontosaurus, knuckles of the ichthyosaurus, vertebrae of the camarasaurus, chunks of the hesperosaurus, the ceteosaurus, the brachiosaurus, the stegosaurus, the the antelopelcoles or bird resting dinosaur—all entered into this wonderful cabin's foundations, making it the most curious home in the county edifice, not excepting the Pennsylvania capitol, in America.

"This hut was built by a Mexican sheep-herder, who had happened by chance on the grandest extinct animal bed in the world. This bed is 200 of about 50 yards square wherein lay in rich profusion the bones of all the animals of the reptile race. The heaviest and the lightest, the largest and the smallest, the most tranquil and the most ferocious lay side by side.

"The place was evidently ones a river bar, and the dead bodies that floated down the stream were here arrested, to lie for hundreds of thousands of years till a sheep-herder csms along, and, rooting among the bones as he sat as bowlder, set about the building of the world's queerest cabin."

Slightly Mixed.

A travelling salesman died suddenly in Pittsburg, Pa., and some of his friends telegraphed the undertaker an order to make a large wreath. Investigation showed that the telegram ordering the wreath read as follows:

"Rest in peace,' on both sides and if there is room we shall meet in heaven."

Judges on Their Dignity.

The ceremony of the United States supreme court judges marching from their robing room across the corridor to take their seats on the bench, which occurs at high noon every week day while the court is holding session, is always a matter of interest to the average visitor at the capitol. Every day there is a small crowd waiting to see the stately procession. The other day Justice Moody, as the youngest member of the august body, brought up the rear. A flicker of a smile appeared on his face as he noted the black-robed figures ahead of him, but it passed away instantly and he became as solemn and grave as the others.

FLOOD OF BILLS ROLLS IN STEADILY

BOTH THE SENATE AND HOUSE SHOW GREAT ACTIVITY.

Resolutions to Probe Farm Machinery and Coal Combines Introduced in Both Houses — Presiding Officers Announce Committees.

St. Paul, Jan. 14.—Three measures aiming to collect a greater tax from the iron ore wealth within the state, were introduced at the legislative session tonight. Senator Victor L. Johnson presented one calling for a royalty of 50 cents a ton for 1907, and an addition of 4 cents a ton each succeeding year. H. O. Bjorke presented a bill in the house providing a tax of 5 cents for every long ton, based on reports of mining companies which must be filed, the income to be divided between the road and bridge fund and the drainage fund. A house bill by R. II. Jeffers of Bingham Lake, provides for a tax of 25 cents per long ton. There are two other important features; one provides for a new state officer, a mining tax commissioner, and the other is held out to tempt the establishment of a smelting works by giving a credit of 20 cents per ton for ore smelted within the state.

H. O. Bjorko of Lake Park presented a new bill for the licensing of dogs, $2 for males, $3 for a female and $1 reward for the killing of each unlicensed dog, the income to be created to go to an establishment of a state Pasteur institute.

C. M. Bendixon of Morgan introduced another anti-pass bill in the house. The bill follows the provisions of the federal anti-pass law, applying its sundicates to the state.

The house passed a resolution introduced by J. A. Gates of Kenyon, calling for the appointment of a committee of five to make an investigation of the Minneapolis chamber of commerce and the Duluth board of trade. The committee, yet to be named, is given power to subpoena witnesses and engage clerical help.

St. Paul, Minn. Jan. 15.—The overflow of today in both branches of the legislature was the announcement of the committee appointments by the presiding officers. Though both presiding officers have devoted weeks of time to preparing the committees, there is the usual amount of grumbling heard from disgruntled ones who did not get the most choice positions. In the house, Wells is made chairman of appropriations, Peterson of corporations; drainage, Wright; elections, Tighe; general legislation, Hugo; manufactures, Timberlake; railroads, Spooner; taxes Thayer; towns and counties, Rachie; judiciary, Hicks.

In the senate, Sundberg is chairman of drainage; Dunn of elections; Peterson, of finance; Wallace of legislative; Laybourn of insurance; Smith of taxes; Canfield of towns and counties.

The event of today's session in the house was the fight on the so-called Gates resolution, calling upon the governor for a special message on the subject of a temporary tax levy option. The republicans of the house held a caucus at noon and decided to tomorrow pass the resolution. Then Nolan introduced a resolution for an investigation of the lumber business throughout Minnesota and it was referred to the committee on rules. In the senate the same resolution was fathered by Senator E. E. Hanson. It was laid over.

Knut Knudson introduced a resolution calling for an investigation of the Great Northern iron ore deal, on account of the chance of the Great Northern not permitting other roads to handle mineral lands. The resolution was adopted without a dissenting vote.

Resolutions for the investigation of ore land matters, the taxation and their handling were passed in both houses. The one in the house was fathered by C. M. Bendixon, of Morgan; the one in the senate by Senator Morgan.

Eighteen bills put in appearance in the senate today. Most important were several by Senator Julius Cotler, of Scott county, calling for increases in salaries of state officials to the following figures: chief justice, $7,500; associate justices, each $7,000; governor, $7,500; secretary of state' $4,000; attorney general, $6,000; each assistant, $3,000.

A. G. Johnson, of St. Paul, introduced two bills in the house, one of which caused considerable talk. They fixed the price of illuminating gas at not to exceed 80 cents a thousand and street car fares at eight rides for a quarter.

St. Paul, Jan. 16—It was today put up to Gov. J. A. Johnson to commit himself on the subject of county option and liquor traffic in general. This is the result of the house passing the pending so-called Gates resolution. It went through today by a viva voce vote. A large number of people had gathered in the house galleries expecting a hot debate, but the republicans gave no time for objection by the democrats, and shot the resolution through today as soon as it came up. It is understood Gov. Johnson welcomes the resolution and will give a message strongly endorsing county option.

S. D. Moran of Slayton introduced a resolution in the house today to allow each member $200 for legislative expenses. The resolution received numerous seconds and it looked as though it was going to quickly slide through, but A. J. Rockne held it up for twenty-four hours by giving notice of debate.

O. B. Johnson of Lake Elizabeth, presented a memorial resolution protesting against the action of the internal revenue department at Washington on the ruling which makes industrial alcohol remain at a price which is out of reach for industrial purposes. A bill was introduced in the house by B. H. Timberlake and by Senators Dunn and E. Smith, both Minneapolis men, establishing a pension for firemen over fifty years of age and who have served 20 years, no pension to exceed $40 a month. A fund for this purpose is established in cities by a two per cent tax on fire insurances premiums in such cities being diverted from the state to the Firemen's Relief association.

The event of the senate session today was the introduction of a bill by Senator Thorpe of Willmar, providing for county option on the liquor license question. The bill was referred to the committee on temperance. Senator McGowan of Minneapolis followed it with a measure to prohibit corporations from contributing to political parties, committees or candidates, and another authorizing the public examiner at his discretion to make examinations of corporations to see that the law was not being violated.

Lieut. Gov. Eberhart announced on the part of the senate the appointment of two investigating committees, following the passage of two pending resolutions. The committee consisting of Senators Cook, Laybourn and V. L. Johnson, is for the investigation of mineral lands and taxes; the other, consisting of Senators Thorpe, Pugh, Wilherstine and Calhoun, is to investigate the grain business at Minneapolis and Duluth.

St. Paul, Jan. 17—An important bill put in an appearance in the legislature today when Senator P. Fitzpatrick, democrat, of Minneapolis introduced Senate File 78. The bill establishes the initiative and referendum relative to legislation. A petition of five per cent of the voters may propose any law, new or constitutional amendment desired, to be accepted or rejected at the polls the ensuing general election. Or, on a petition of a like number of voters, any legislation enacted by the legislature will be referred to the voters by the people. The bill was referred to the judiciary committee. Senators Eberhart and Swanson introduced bills to authorize the state board of control to establish stone crushers to be operated by convict labor, the crushed stone to be given to counties applying through their county commissioners, for the improvement of county roads. Senator F. L. Claggs, speaker of the house two years ago, presented a bill to create a new judicial district, the Nineteenth, composed of Lincoln, Lyon, Murray and Pipestone counties. Senator Thorpe introduced a measure to abolish private banks in cities, a duplicate of a bill he framed two years ago but which went down in the business buzzsaw in the senate.

In the house today, Wales of the town of Cloquet, introduced a bill, prompted by the investigation of the cause of railroad accidents, to compel the installation of safety devices on railroads where ever the state railroad commission may think such devices needed. Fred V. Burdorf entered a bill important to Northern Minnesota, to permit the town supervisors to construct and maintain drainage ditches. The ditches are to be constructed on petition of property owners of property to be benefited. J. D. Mapleton of Wahpeton, with a view to aiding voters to retain their health, has introduced a bill to prohibit political candidates from distributing cigars or intoxicating liquors.

Up to today, there have been introduced 118 bills in the legislature, 74 in the senate, 44 in the house. Two years ago on the same legislative day, the 6th, there were but 81 bills presented. At the last session the total number of bills was 1,434. At the increased ratio of the present session compared with the last, continues, the number of bills this session will reach 1,419.

Wm. H. Williams, state labor commissioner, has been investigating the employment of pages in the senate. He has found three boys under 16 years of age employed, which is in violation of the child labor law. The senate is going to patch the matter up by getting special consent therefor for the three boys in question during the three months of the session.

No State Printer Chosen.

St. Paul—The election of a state printer has been deferred until after April 1. The state printing commission had a session Jan. 19 but could not come to any decision and adjourned the meeting.

There are three candidates—A. N. Dare of Elk River, the present incumbent; J. T. Mannix of Minneapolis, a newspaper man of that city and representative in the legislature in the last session, and G. F. Wright, supervisor of the 1905 census and now employed by a Minneapolis printing firm.

On State Boards

St. Paul—Gov. Johnson has announced the appointment of R. E. Denfeld of Duluth as a member of the state high school board. He succeeds John M. Jordan of Minneapolis, who has been a member of the board for many years.

The governor also announced the appointment of Merrit C. Tifft of Long Prairie as a member of the state normal board. He succeeds W. S. Hammond of St. James, Mr. Hammond's term expires next spring and he did not seek reappointment.

TRAVELERS DIE IN WRECK AND FLAMES

FAST PASSENGER TRAIN CRASHES INTO FREIGHT AT FOWLER, INDIANA.

AT LEAST THIRTEEN PERSONS KILLED

Rail Disaster Occurs in Early Morning During a Fog—Fire Aids in Horror—Car of Officials Is Only One Saved.

Fowler, Ind., Jan. 21.—The most horrible railroad wreck of the year occurred on the Big Four railway a quarter of a mile east of this station at 2:15 Saturday morning. Queen City special No. 38, which left Chicago at 11:30 Friday night, running at the speed of 50 miles an hour, crashed head-on into a westbound freight and at least 13 lives were sacrificed. The leader of No. 38 in front of the day combination coach crashed into it and reduced it to splinters. The coach caught fire and a high wind from this southwest fanned the flames. Inside of half an hour many bodies were cremated.

Partial List of Victims.

A partial list of the dead follows: Higgender, E. J., Indianapolis; conductor of the passenger train. McGee, J., baggageman of the passenger train. Miser, Harry, fireman of freight train. Outcalt, Henry, Cincinnati; fireman of the passenger train. Shannon, John, 250 Potomac avenue, Chicago.

The injured, all of whom were taken to Kankakee, are: Barnes, C. L., Cincinnati, passenger; severe bruises. Cretos, M. A., New York city, an American, last man rescued from combination car wreck; scorched death from flames by same margin. Grid, Edward, Indianapolis, engineer of the freight train; badly cut and bruised. Harris, Walter B., Indianapolis, passenger in combination car; both feet mangled in wreckage. Laag, L. F., Omaha, Ill. Shock and leg injured; condition not serious; was in smoker in combination car. Link, T. W., Milkinga. Lynch, H. W., 236 Wabash avenue, Chicago; leg broken, head bruised, internal injuries; will probably recover. Tripp, E. W., Indianapolis engineer of passenger train; saved life by jumping; was nearly drowned in pool beside railway embankment; condition serious.

Dense Fog Cause of Wreck.

Owing to the dense fog the engineer of the Big Four flyer was unable to see the light on the semaphore, which directed him to stop, as a westbound freight had the right of way. The train dispatcher, knowing that the flyer would arrive at the station, had men from seeing the block signal, went outside and waved his lantern frantically and fired at least half a dozen shots from his revolver, but the trainmen went crashing by with their train and a moment later the crash came.

The firemen of both trains were killed instantly, but the engineers escaped by jumping. The report of the collision was heard all over town. Fire bells and whistles called the people to the aid of the injured.

Immediately following the crash the wreckage caught fire and the dead were burned before they could be extricated from the ruins. Ten feet of the burning cars was an inferno, and the would-be rescuers could not get near enough to help. The injured and some of the dead were taken to Kankakee, Ill., on the private car of Vice President Schaff, which was on the rails. Mrs. Schaff was in the private car, but was not injured.

Only Two Are Rescued.

One man who was pleading piteously for aid was pinned under a car seat. He was rescued when the flames were within six feet of him. Another man was thrown out of the window of the smoker into a ditch. These were the only two passengers rescued from the combination car.

The killed included one woman. All but could be seen at daybreak was the smoldering skeletons of human bodies and the wreckage of the combination and baggage cars. None of the passengers in the sleepers was killed.

Coroner Comley has taken charge and Prosecuting Attorney Hall will assist the coroner in making an investigation of the wreck.

Three Trainmen Killed.

Desoto, Kas., Jan. 21.—The locomotive drawing eastbound Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe freight train No. 26 exploded on a bridge near here Saturday morning. The bridge was demolished and the engine and its freight cars went into the creek. F. W. Bartell, engineer; W. W. Bendix, fireman, and H. E. Shaw, brakemn, of Argentine, Kas., were killed, their bodies being hurled under the wreckage.

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Re-elected.

The board of managers of the Minnesota Agricultural Society have re-elected E. W. Randall secretary for the year 1907. This will be Mr. Randall's thirteenth year in charge of the state fair, which has been a continuous success under his direction. E. L. Matteson, cashier of the Swedish-American National Bank of Minneapolis, was chosen treasurer, vice F. J. Wilcox of Northfield, who has served in the capacity for many years, and who retires with the respect and regard of the entire board.

Practically the same list of superintendents and committees as in 1906 was announced by President C. C. Cosgrove. Col. W. M. Liggett remains in charge of the cattle division which he has managed for 16 years; G. W. Patterson is superintendent of horses; J. M. Underwood, of agriculture and horticulture; B. F. Nelson of the exposition and woman's buildings and C. M. Griggs of the amusements. Wm. B. Lee will manage the manufactures and farm machinery division.

Although this year's fair will not open for nearly nine months, a very large list of amusement attractions was laid before the board and the fair will be able, it is said from the best that the country affords. The needs for several new buildings were discussed at some length and various requests for changes in the premium offers were received, but action on all these matters were deferred—except that the market gardeners secured a raise in the amount of their premium offers and the board voted to renew the offers for cattle in carload lots made last year with much satisfaction to the breeders and cattle men.

A New Campus.

Hamline—According to R. B. Johnson's estimate, $600,000 will be the net cost of the new campus extension fund. This is the strongest effort of the alumni and friends of the University of Minnesota.

The proposed tracts include seventeen blocks south of the present campus, and extending south of the campus along University avenue. Mr. Johnson estimates that the property south of the campus, not including the buildings, would cost $211,000; for that on the north, $140,000, making a total of $351,000 for land alone.

On this property there are 208 houses, which, it is thought, could be purchased for an average of $2,500 each, or $520,000 in all, bringing the total cost of the houses up to $813,000, and the total cost of both land and buildings to $1,000,000.

Important Decision.

Dockage.

St. Paul—Members of the legislature will be "docked" $5 for every day they are absent without excuse. This is the interesting feature of the revised statutes, a "woodchuck" which got away from the legislature two years ago, and is likely to create all sorts of trouble at this session. The discovery will cause a scramble for excuses, and the early repeal of the obnoxious section is predicted.

There was only one member absent on the opening day of the session, but Tuesday, Jan. 16, Wednesday, there were five senators and ten representatives absent without excuse, as shown by the journals of the two houses. Thursday, the third day, there were six senators and nineteen representatives recorded as absent without excuse.

Inheritance Tax.

Minneapolis—An amendment to the inheritance tax law by which the county treasurer would share in the fees is favored by State Auditor S. G. Iverson in his annual report to the legislature. He believes that if the county treasurer could assist in collecting the amount of the tax. He says:

"Up to Aug. 1, 1906, the sum of $155,-464.31 had been collected under the law. From Aug. 1, 1906 to the present time, Dec. 1, 1906, $93,367.96 has been collected. Several large estates are now being administered in the probate courts, which will add goodly sums to the state's revenue.

Torkelson, barn boss for the Lumber Jack company, after he had lost consciousness and was temporarily suspended from the trestle by bitter cold and the icy waters of the ship.

Moorhead—John Holst, a machinist in the roundhouse here, met with a terrible death in the form of an accident. He was engaged in repairing a rainy flue in the boiler when it burst, covering him from head to foot with scalding steam. A companion who was assisting him also was burned, but not seriously. Immediately after the accident Holst was removed to the hospital, where it was found that his body was literally parboiled. He lived several hours, however, remaining conscious until his death.

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879

We are pleased to note, that President Roosevelt has been called down on reform spelling. We claim the honor of being the originator of reform spelling, and it began to look to us if the president was trying to steal our thunder.

Three bills providing for a 2 cent passenger fare in the State of Minnesota were introduced in the house of representatives last week. All of them provide for a straight 2 cent a fare. The only difference in the bills is the time they go into effect and the penalties provided for violation of their terms. We hope that the bill that goes into effect first will be the one to pass.—Thief River News.

The papers of the state are making much of John R. Rockefeller returning his legislative railroad pass, but the St. Cloud Times says: "Who can be added to the roll of honor."

And the Herald echoes "Who?"—Duluth Herald.

The sixty first legislative district the largest district in territory and population in the state—has a senator that returned his railroad pass, and is now in St. Paul working for the best interests of the people in all matters. We refer to Hon. A. L. Heron, of Ada.—Thief River Falls News.

This is the kind of people we feel proud of, and we have them, if we only look them

As was expected, by a considerable had any appearance it county seat scraps, hisoner the Supreme Court handed down a lengthy, and a carefully consid ered opinion, (opinion is his honor long suit), against Thief River Falls, on the county seat removal proposition. Now the only thing for Thief River Falls to do is to reverse the conditions, and hisoner will reverse his opinion, that's easy; and if you don't want to take our word for it, go and ask some lawyer to read you the decisions in the Columbia county seat case. It has been said that experience teaches a dear school attended by fools, and we are a graduate from that school, so far as County seat scraps goes, and we want to say to the people of Thief River Falls, (we mean the poor devil that goes down in his pocket to pay the expense) you must get a lawyer that has a stand in with hisoner the supreme court, if you expect to win

Philosophy of a Clown.

The late Charles Bliss, the famous star of the Dan Rice circus, was the original "human fly"—imputed his success to thoroughness. "Don't attempt a new trick," he said one day, "till you are thoroughly master of it. The only way to succeed is to be so thorough in everything you undertake that failure is altogether an impossibility. If you are going, for instance, to be a stump speaker, if you are going to address a lot of farmers, don't talk farm unless you have studied it up. Don't be like a stump speaker I know who yelled at a crossroads meeting:

"He who puts his hand to the plow must not turn back!"

"Wot's he to do, then, when he gets to the end o' the furrer?" shouted a hired man in blue overalls."—Denver News.

All Stopped but Him.

Mrs. Hastymatch—I had a dozen responsible letters yours, all from answering mine you too. Mr. Hastymatch—They must have been. How did you manage to crawl out of it?

Is There A Combine?

Will the present legislature pass a reapportionment bill that will equalize representation in the legislature over the state on a basis of the population of today in stead of th at twenty years ago?

There are persistent rumors that what is known as the "senate combine" has decreed that there shall be none, and that the present apportionment shall stand for an indefinite period.

Whether the combine has really made this decision cannot be established by proof. If you ask any member of the combine whether it is so or not, he will promptly reply that there is no combine, and that if there is any such institution he knows nothing whatever about it

But, rumor says' and say repeatedly, there is a combine and that it has determined to oppose reapportionment at this time That would mean that there can be none until the legislature of 1911, four years hence, when the same situation will be presented as now; a senate elected for four years, and determined not to legislate itself out of office by making a reapportionment effective within its term. If the legislature of 1911, therefore, should make a reapportionment, and there is no more reason to expect that this one will act, it will not be effective until 1915 and that is eight year away.

In the meantime there will be three sessions of the legislature under the present apportionment and by that time, if present tendencies continue, about one-fourth of the population will be governing the remaining nine-tenths.—Duluth Herald

METEORIC BODIES.

Mineral Masses That Are Whirling Through Space.

The realms of space contain probably innumerable masses of solid iron or other minerals which are whirling along at an incalculable rate. Occasionally these masses come within a comparatively few miles of the earth's atmosphere, and then instead of crashing to the ground, carrying devestation in their paths, they suddenly become terribly hot and melt away into an incandescent gas. This is what is going on when we see what is wrongly called a "shooting star." Stars do not shoot. The sudden flash we see is the result of the friction between the meteoric body and our air. The former travels at such a rate as to generate an enormous heat. Occasionally, however, solid masses do not become completely vaporized, but fall to the earth with a great force. A stone fell in 1835 on the coast opposite Zanzibar. It was picked up by some children herding cattle, and all the tribe gathered to anoint it with oil and ornament it with stuffs and pearls as a true divinity come from heaven. The missionary warnings were unheeded. One day the werlike Massai attacked the tribe and slaughtered them, whereupon the survivors lost faith in their fetich and sold it to the Munich museum.

At Wold Newton, in Yorkshire, England, a meteorite fell over a century ago. Scientists were only then seriously considering such falls. On a Sunday afternoon, Dec. 13, 1795, in misty weather during thunder and lightning, at a distance suddenly there come a noise like an explosion. A farm servant was so near that he was struck by stone of the earth thrown up by the stone as it plunged into the ground. It excavated a hole more than three feet in diameter and was found imbedded fast in the chalk rock.

This meteorite is about as big as a man's head and can be seen in the British museum. A swollen pear with enormous speed across the vault of the heavens. As the aerolite falls its speed is greatly reduced as it passes through the ever thickening atmospheric strata until finally it descends to the earth.

Not Too Cold For Him.

The unconscious humor of the English peasantry is shown in a story told by the London Tribune. A Lady Beautiful was calling on a devoted old couple with such creature comforts as the doctor said were suitable for the old man, who was dying and being tenderly nursed by his consort. Entering the cottage, she saw the old dame turning over the fire. "Ah, Susan," she said, "and how's John?"

"He be goan, mum; he be goan," muttered the old lady. "I doesn't reckon I can't say that for sartain sure, but he did seem a-gwine just now. But there, it's that mortal cold up there that I had to come down to warm my hands."

M. O. in Chicago as Dead as Caesar.

One of the most remarkable reversals of public opinion on record is that which has taken place in Chicago in the past year in the matter of municipal ownership and operation. The municipal ownership theory, which a little more than a year ago flourished here with so much vigor as to attract the attention of the entire civilized world, is now the deadest duck in the pond. Apparently nobody believes in it any longer. Certainly nobody ever talks any more about it.—Chicago Journal.

Various Ways How Are You?

"How are you?" in German is "Wie befinden sie sich?" (How do you find yourself?) It is also "Wie gehts?"

The Dutch say "Hoe vaart gij?" (How do you fare?) The Italians ask, "Come state?" (How do you stand?) The French, "Comment vous portez-vous?" (How do you carry yourself?)

The Greeks ask what you are doing, the Chinese want to know if you enjoy your rice, and the Russians inquire how you are living.

The Arabs, a devout people, say, "God grant his favors to you." The Turks, no less devout, say, "Be under God's care."

Persian Justice.

Professor Williams Jackson tells in his "Persia Past and Present" some stories illustrating character in the land of Omar Khayyam. One is of a man who, suffering from inflamed eyes, went to a horse doctor for treatment. The veterinary gave him some of the salve that he used on animals, and the man lost his eyesight. He then brought suit in court to recover damages. The judge, after weighing the evidence in the case, handed down his decision as follows: "There are no damages to be recovered. The man would never have gone to a veterinary if he had not been an ass!"

A Barrel Cello.

A new and unique musical instrument which gives forth melodious strains has been constructed by Frederick S. Hall of Malden, Mass. It is made out of a sugar barrel and is supposed to be a distant relative of the cello. One day Hall heard some small boys pounding on an empty hogshead and noted the hollow and musical sound that was made by the young sters. He procured a sugar barrel and cello strings and rigged the latter on the side of the barrel. He began experimeats and after several weeks perfected an instrument that gives forth a tone of surprising sweetness.

A Wedding Gift.

A wedding gift of a curious stone that is to be found in Finland. It is a natural barometer and actually foretells probable changes in the weather. It is called a semakpin, and its peculiarity is that it turns black before approaching rain, while in fine weather it is mottled with spots of white. Investigation has shown the stone to be a sort of fossil, mixed with clay, rock salt and niter. When the air is moist, the salt turns black; when the air is dry, the salt shows in white spots on the surface of the stone.

A Strong Face.

"Facial expression," said the thoughtful looking man, "is not confined to human beings by any means. For instance, some time ago I went to call on a friend of mine, who was lost at home. However, a dog of his was there. I looked at the dog a moment, and he returned my look. Then something in that dog's face seemed to take hold of me and simply root me to the spot. It was his teeth!"—Chicago News.

European Jiu Jitsu.

A French teacher of boxing points out that an art of self defense approximately equivalent to jiu jitsu was known in Europe in the seventeenth century. Its principles are expounded in a work by one Nicolas Peters, published at Amsterdam in 1674 and bearing the lengthy explanatory title: "The art of wrestling and how one can protect oneself in all kinds of quarrels but may occur; how one can with agility and rapidity repel all unfair attacks and meet one's adversary with science." The work is illustrated. The author apparently anticipated many of the characteristic grips of the Japanese exponents of today.

An Island City.

Greater New York consists of forty-five islands. It might be called the Island City. Read the names of some of the larger: Manhattan Island, Long Island, Staten Island, Hart's Island, City Island, Riker's Island, North Brother Island, South Island, Blackwell's Island, Randall's Island, Ward's Island Berrian's Island, Governors Island, Barren Island and Coney Island. Many small ones in Jamaica bay have large names. One island island, Marble Hill, near Kingsbridge, has been made by the government channel cut through on the Harlem river improvements.

Usually Effective.

"Sometimes," said the merchant, "I feel like the poet who wanted a lodging some vast wilderness. I yearn for solitude and silence."

"Well," replied his friend sympathetically, "it's an expensive taste to gratify, but you might start in by taking your advertisement out of the newspapers."—Washington Star.

Awful Thought.

Molly—Papa, I wish you'd close the door of your room when gentlemen are calling on me. Your snores are something fearful. Dad—Well, it won't last long. Mollycharps not, but the night think it's breathing.

Grandmother—Why, nurse, whatever are you thinking of to bring so young an infant into the open air on so cold and windy a day as this? Nurse—But you surely do not think that so small a child understands differences in temperature?—Il Mondo Umoristico.

White Labor Did Not Tell.

A home missionary who visited Sing Sing prison took occasion to have a heart to heart talk with one of the convicts.

"Don't you know, my friend," said he, "that crime never brings success? It is only achieved by hard labor."

"I did six months of it at a stretch once, and I didn't come out no richer than I went in."

Why the Devil Has Cloven Hoofs.

Legends of the devil are quite common in Ireland, but the one which is most interesting and least known perhaps is that which tells why the prince of the infernal regions has split hoofs, like those of a cow beast. Moore alludes to the legend in his story of St. Kevin and Kathleen at Glendalough. In that story Moore makes St. Kevin throw his former inclover over the cliff in order to rid of her importunities, but the peasants of the Glenda lough district give the story a more poetical touch. They insist that it was not Kathleen that was thrown over the cliff, but that it was Satan, who had assumed the form of the lady in order to tempt the saint. The moment the prince of evil toppled over the edge of the yawning abyss he spread his bitlike wings and sailed away in safety, much to the surprise of the holy saint. Later on the devil again attempted to lay a snare for St. Kevin, but the saint managed to get the arch fiend on holy ground, where, of course, he was helpless. While the devil was in this helpless condition Kevin sawed off his legs and attached cows' hoofs to the stumps. Since that day Satan has been cloven footed and will be until the end of time.

Echoes and Architects.

"It is possible to build echoes," said an architect. "It is, indeed, easier to make than to destroy them. In the days when built their great temples and cathedrals with no thought of acoustics; hence when the preacher preached echoes rolled freely and dismally under the roof, down the rows of sculptured columns and round and round the nave. With wires strung here and with tapestries spread there, many of the echoes of the old world buildings have been obliterated. There are even experts—builders acquainted with the science of acoustics whose specialty is echoes' destruction. Sometimes their tasks are hard. Today an architect takes thought of the echo. He builds is constructed so as to overhear the intruder. And, knowing how to elude it, he knows how to weave it, also. I have frequently in having work put up summer houses so arranged rocks so as to create an echo there."—Exchange.

Flogging.

[illegible] large flat sticks and the culprit was punished bich over the bare shoulders, by which means [illegible] scolds, with treacle on their consciences—but the whipping post belongs to the Tudor age. The Revolver.

The revolver is of dubious service in war. Its only function there is as a cavalry weapon. Indeed, it is an evolution of the mediæval purpose to provide horse soldiers with a firearm. In he cavalry the weapon is effective only up to fifty yards. It has no value for hunting. The average man can do more execution on birds and beasts with a shotgun. The only purpose which the revolver serves is to kill another man, and even for that purpose its usefulness is overestimated.—New York Mail.

The Plight of a Playwright

By Mrs. Coulson Kernahan

(Copyright, 1906, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

As Marcus Gilroy ran down the dark staircase he trod on a woman's gown. Obtaining no answer to his profuse expressions of apology he struck a match and found that he was alone.

He continued his course down the dirty, capricious stairs, past two desolate-looking landings, dimly lit by sickly wall-lamps, and passed out into the November fog.

He was glad it was foggy, for under its kindly shelter he could better dispose of a parcel unobserved. Its destination was the pawnshop. The pawnshop in question nestled offcloisterly up to a flaring saloon.

Gilroy untied his parcel and disclosed a dressing-case. The pawnbroker took out the articles one by one and examined the hall-marks.

"What do you want for it?" he inquired, with no show of interest.

"Twenty-five dollars," answered Gilroy promptly.

The pawnbroker burst into a harsh laugh. "I still give you ten dollors," he said.

Gilroy took the ten dollars.

A misty rain was falling when he found himself once more in the street. He turned up his coat-collar, buried his hands in his pockets, and strode angrily along the slippery pavement, past the flaring shops, past a third-rate music hall—then into a dismal street and through a covered passage into a still more dismal square which was the young man's present abode.

Gilroy mounted the endless stairs two at a time, not stopping till he gained his own door. Once inside, he lit his lamp and turned eyes of disgust on his wretched apartment. His bed, all unmade, stood in one corner under a window. An oil-stove standing in the fireplace was still ornamented with a frying-pan in which he had prepared his breakfast. The remains of a meal littered a table.

A church clock struck the hour of nine. Gilroy compared his watch, and then hurriedly cleared his table of crockery and eatables—then he opened a box of MMS and emptied it on to the table, got his ink, pens, and blotter from the dressing table, and sat down to write, mechanically filling a pipe as he did so. He had scarcely put pen to paper when a curious rasping sound fell on his ear. It seemed to come from the next room. It kept on so long that it irritated him, and he rose and opened his door and peeped out.

A stream of light shot across the passage, and on the opposite wall was the shadow of a slim girl doing something to a door. It suddenly struck him that it might be the girl on whose dress he had trodden, as he believed, torn it. He was impulsive by nature, so he stepped out into the passage and looked full at the shadow's substance. It was a red-haired girl in a grey, close-fitting gown, and she was trying to do something to the lock with a screwdriver. On another impulse he addressed her.

"Is you lock wrong?" he inquired. "Let me help you."

The girl darted a frightened glance at him; then, seeming satisfied—for Marcus Gilroy had a boyish, frank face—she said, "Thank you—there is something wrong—it won't catch!"

A moment more and the young man was kneeling at the door, examining the lock, while the girl held the candle.

"What a pleasant room you have!" Gilroy said, when he had fixed the lock.

"Yes," said the girl, "but its comfort sometimes makes me wretched. For, oh; there are some terribly poor people in this place. It turns me sick sometimes to look into the rooms opposite. Yet I look when I can't sleep . . . I see poor wretches creeping up the stairs, to huddle into horrible rooms o pass the night. They come at all hours of the night—little children, too—poor little children! There is a window at every landing, and as the weary wretches creep up, up, a meagre light shines a moment from these windows; and the rooms—there are no blinds—"

The girl ceased suddenly, a conscious blush overspreading her fair, oval face. She remembered that she was talking to a man—and a stranger.

Gilroy found no words—he looked at her pure young face with that impassioned light of sorrow and sympathy upon it and was as one dumb.

Another of his impulses came to him. "You have a typewriter!" he said tentatively.

"Yes, I earn my living by it."

"Will you type a play for me which have written?"

"Why certainly!"

He was once more at work on the desk.

"Thank you. I will bring it to-morrow. Poor play! I suppose it will be rejected, like all the rest."

"Do you depend on your pen?"

He looked up and laughed bitterly. "I have never earned a penny in my life as yet," he said.

"A few months ago I was rich; at a single blow I lost all but a hundred dollars. Then I came here and put up the Grand, and tried to sell some ays I had written. I used to write hys when I was at college. I could ink of nothing else."

"Now the money is gone, and no ay accepted. There! the lock is ght now, so good night."

She held out her hand to him. "Good ght, and thank you," she said, and ded, "Bring the play to-morrow."

Mr. Tom Wesgate, the actor, was at breakfast in dressing gown and slippers when his cousin Sophie Delano was announced.

"Well, Sophie, how goes the experiment? Hope you fumigated yourself before coming."

"Don't talk rubbish, Tom! I have got a find."

"A genius among the wolfs?" he inquired banteringly.

"No, but a genius all the same; quite a young fellow—a college man. His lost all his money at a stroke, except a hundred dollars, which he proceeded to dissipate at the Grand."

"Oh! dissipated, is he? true hallmark of genius."

"Nothing of the sort, Tom. He was brought up rich, and I suppose it never occurred to him that he shouldn't go to a expensive hotel. Now he has drifted into the Square; his room is next to mine. He gave me his play to type."

"Then I suppose you want me to look at it?"

Tom Wesgate smiled indulgently. "Well, tell him to send it along; I'll look at it, for the sake of my pretty, eccentric little cousin. What a brute I am! Do have some coffee. No? Well, don't carry your experiment to starvation point."

"I shan't do that, Tom, but my experiences in that awful place have taught me what I wanted to know. Do you know, Marcus Gilroy was in a pawnshop a few nights ago. I was there, as part of my experiment; yet, thinking no poor, he gave me the play to type and would pay in advance. Think of that!"

Marcus Gilroy was in his room. He was meditating whether he should call on the typewriter girl with the excuse of seeing if his play were ready—but only out of an overpowering desire to be in her sweet presence—when there came a knock at his door. He rose and glanced despairingly round his untidy apartment and opened the door. It was the typewriter girl.

"I have brought your play, Mr. Gilroy; and may I come in a moment—I have something I want to say to you?"

Marcus placed a chair for her and closed the door. How homelike the miserable room had become in a moment! The lamp-light made a glory out of the frizzy red hair that surrounded the pale, Madonna-like face.

"I hope you won't think it a liberty," began Sophie, with pretty hesitation, "but I know Tom Wesgate—the famous actor, you know. I type for him, and I think your play would suit him. Here is his address."

Gilroy's face lit up—up—not so much from the fact that there was a suggestion of a possible opening for his play, as because this girl had taken a kindly interest in him.

"It is very good of you, Miss——?"

"Delano," she put in, seeing him hesitating for the name.

"Miss Delano," he went on. "It is a new sensation to be so kindly considered."

The second act of "Captain Cane," was just over, and Marcus Gilroy went out to have a drink. He was faint with an unreasonable joy. Some critics were imbibing near him and conversing on his play.

"Best thing for years," said one. "Such dialogue—such situations—such realism! Marcus Gilroy has struck oil."

"How he has managed to employ successful melodrama without sacrificing the true—"

Gilroy fled and paced the oral corridor to calm himself. "She tol i me she would be here to-night," he said to himself. Then he made his way to Tom Wesgate's dressing-room.

"It's all right, old man—the play will do!" cried Wesgate, clapping him on the shoulders.

"Come along, I want to introduce you to my would-be-here in just time."

Mechanically, as in a dream, Gilroy followed him. Presently he found himself in a box, and before him was the typewriter girl.

She stretched out her hand. Her clear grey eyes had a glad look in them.

In his own were tears.

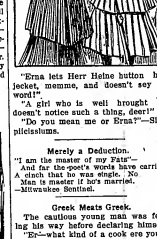
NOT NECESSARY.

By all means let us cling to the old spelling. If the present style was good enough for our parents why not good enough for us?

The "gnat," for instance. Instead of dropping the g why not, if it is a good thing, use it more freely?

Why not raise your ghat to a goat if she is grat?

And k—what harm in a little more of a sensible custom? If you have the knowledge why make a knoke. Knohody is knaughty. A knife is knevar knice unless knecessary. And why should not a knave knail knapkins to knarcotics? And are knapkins better than 'grapkins?'



Kno; decidedly knot!—Life.

The Low-Cality and High.

Mr. Baker, who had recently become blessed with an abundance of this world's goods, established his family in a home commensurate in beauty with his new fortune. Shortly after, an acquaintance met him, and, passing the time of day, asked how the various members of his family were.

"Fine!" was his reply. "You see, it was this way—the doctor says that where we lived the low-cality wasn't good for us, but now that we've moved into a high-cality, we're all right."—Judge.

BOY WAS SOMEWHAT MIXED.

Had Wrong Idea of the Sound to Be Removed.

Deacon Allen Sheldon, who recently passed away, was universally respected by all who knew him, and the stories were listened to with much delight, saye a writer in the Boston Herald. He used to tell the following with a great deal of interest:

When a very small boy he asked his father to let him go to the store in the town meeting. He went, with the promise that when he returned he would tell the folks what happened.

In those days the church was supported by a tax on every property holder. Whatever of interest came up for the church had to be voted on at the town meeting.

The pastor being feeble and his voice not strong, an article in the town warrant called for the removal of the sounding board from over the pastor's head, since it acted as an extinguisher, and not as originally planned. When Allen returned he told his mother about the sounding board, and said:

"Mr. Flagg got up and said, in his squeaky voice: 'Mr. Moderator, I make a motion that we remove the board from under the board.'"

AWFUL EFFECT OF ECZEMA.

Covered with Yellow Sores—Grew Worse—Doctors Discouraged—Cuticura Drove Sores Away.

"Our little girl, one year and a half old, was taken with eczema or that was what the doctor called it. We called in the family doctor, and he gave some tablets and said she would be all right in a few days. The eczema grew worse and we called in doctor No. 2. He said she was teething, as soon as the teeth were through she would be all right. But she still grew worse. Doctor No. 3 said it was eczema. By this time she was nothing but a yellow, greenish sore. Well, he said he could help her, so we let him try it awhile. One morning we discovered a little yellow pimple on one of her eyes. Of course we called in doctor No. 3. He came over and looked her over, and said that he could do no good for the sores on her, that we had better take her to some eye specialist, since it was an eye. So we went to Dr——, our doctor No. 4, and he said the eyesight was gone, but that he could help it. We thought we would try doctor No. 5. Well, that proved the same, only he charged $10 more than doctor No. 4. We were nearly discouraged. I saw one of the Cuticura advertisements in the paper and thought we would try the Cuticura Treatment, so I went and purchased a set of Cuticura Remedies, which cost me $1, and in three days our daughter, who had been sick about eight months, showed great improvement, and in one week all sores had disappeared. Of course it could not restore the eyesight, but if we had taken it in time I am confident that it would have saved the eye. We think there is no remedy so good for any skin trouble or impurity of the blood as Cuticura. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Abbott, R. F. D. No. 9, Fulton, Oswego Co., N. Y., August 17, 1906."

Rich Man Work for Pleasure.

Woodrow Gill, the world's greatest authority on fishes, works for the United States government, receiving one dollar a month for his services. He is a rich man on whom many universities have conferred titles and degrees, but he is a poor, another wealthy men, who knows more about mosquitoes than any other living person, devotes much of his time to government, receiving $25 a month. Gifford Pinchot, a millionaire, is head of the United States forestry service, but he is comparatively well paid, his salary being $45 per annum. Several other rich men are on the government pay roll at nominal figures, working for the pleasure of "doing things," as President Roosevelt puts it.

Thoroughly Reliable.

If ever there was a reliable and safe remedy it is that old and famous one for sick plaster—Allcock's. It has been in use for sixty years, and is as popular to-day as ever, and we doubt if there is a civilized community on the face of the globe where this wonderful pain reliever cannot be found. In the selection of its ingredients and in their manufacture the greatest care is taken by the proprietor to the highest standard of excellence, and so pure and simple are, the ingredients that even a child can use them.

Allcock's are the original and genuine porous plasters and are sold by Druggists all over the world.

Makes Plea for Dance.

It seems a very great pity that some determined effort cannot be made to make dancing more popular. Nowadays, when exercise is a kind of religion to men and women alike, it is odd that one recommended by all doctors and recognized all the world over and in all ages as an attractive pastime, into which the art of fascination, grace, esteem, should be added and more neglected among us.—Lady's Pictorial.

Then They Went Off.

"It strikes me that you are loaded," said the pistol to the double-barrel shotgun.

"Oh, not quite," rejoined the latter. "I'm only half-shot."

Whereupon they both exploded with laughter.—Chicago Daily News.

A poor man's chances for reaching the age of three-score and ten are far better than a rich man's, because the doctors waste less on him.

TERRIBLE TO RECALL.

Five Weeks in Bed With Intensely Painful Kidney Trouble.

Mrs. Mary Wagner, of 1307 Kosanth avenue, Bridgeport, Conn., says: "I was so weakened and generally run down with kidney disease that for a long time I could not do my work and was five weeks in bed. There was continual tossing down pain, terrible backaches, headaches and at times dizzy spells when everything was a blur before me. The passages of the kidney secretions were irregular and painful, and there was considerable sediment and odor. I don't know what I would have done but for Doan's Kidney Pills. I could see an improvement from the first box, and five boxes brought a final cure."

No Longer Novel.

When James P. Magenis was chief deputy in the internal revenue service he was stricken with a severe attack of typhoid fever, and it was some weeks before he was able to resume his duties.

Before his illness his hair was luxuriant, but after it a held spot began to show, which was noticed by a deputy, who spoke to him about it.

"Pardon me, Jim," he said, "but you are getting bald, and you know a head of hair like yours is quite a novelty these days."

"Yes," said Magenis, "I have been told my hair was quite a novelty, but do you know," he said, and a gleam of fun was in his eye, "I notice since my illness, that every time I run my hand over the top of my head the novelty is wearing off."

BRING GOOD HEALTH

Dr. William' Pink Pills, Used After the Grip, Arrest Fatal Decline and Rebuild the System.

Any bodily weakness caused by a deficiency in the blood can be cured by the use of Dr. William' Pink Pills because these pills actually make new blood. After attacks of the grip the blood is generally run down and the patient continues to decline.

"About three years ago," says Mrs. Jennie Cox of Main, Henry Street, West Bay City, Mich., "I caught a severe cold, which ran into the grip. I was confined to my bed for two weeks. At the end of that time I was able to be about, but was completely run down. I was so weak it could hardly stand, my cheeks had no color and I felt faint. My heart would flutter and it was difficult for me to breathe at times. Neuralgia settled in the back of my head and stomach and I suffered from rheumatism in my shoulders.

"I had the care of the best doctors in town but became no better until a friend told me one day how she had been cured by Dr. William' Pink Pills and I decided to try them. I soon felt better and continued using them until I was entirely cured. They built me up again to perfect health and I use them now whenever I feel at all sick and they always help me."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are invaluable in such cases, as well in blood diseases, because they not only destroy the germs of the disease but build up the system. The pills cure all forms of weakness, such as nervousness, rheumatism, neuralgia and other severe disorders.

Williams' Pink Pills are sold druggists, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents a box or $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

PLAN OF COW STALL.

One Which an Experienced Farmer Has Found Successful.

After much experience, the writer considers the plan for a cow stall, shown in the cut, as one of the best that can be used, says a correspondent of Farm Journal. The cow stands on planks that are notched and therefore water-tight. The back end projects two inches. The gutter is 18 inches wide and is formed by carrying a course of cement down from the platform, across the bottom of the gutter, and up at the back. If the gutter is very smooth, a shovel will slip over it better than over a board floor.

CARE IN MILKING.

Some Ways in Which Germs Get into Milk.

The milk within the cow's udder is practically, though not absolutely, free from bacteria. Milk drawn from a dirty cow, in a dirty, dusty stable, by a dirty man with dirty hands and clothes is sure to be unclean. From the cow hairs falls a shower of hairy epidermis scales and other dust, bits of chaff and straw, and particles, if not larger pieces of cow filth. The milker of uncleanly habits, may contribute a collectles of disease germs still more potent for evil. The filthy content of milk produced under such conditions may be imagined.

It has been found that on an average a loose hair, falling into the milk from the cleaner parts of the cow, carries with it from 600 to 700 bacteria. Particles of manure, or hair from patches of manurial richness, contribute a much more bountiful seeding of the milk; at the rate of several millions for each gram, or half teaspoonful of the dirt. Of such is the composition of the dark sediment found at the bottom of the glass of milk produced and delivered by careless dairymen.—Dr. A. G. Young, Sec. Me. Board of Health.

DAIRY NOTES.

Not all cow keepers deserve the title dairyman.

The milking shorthorn was not much in evidence at the large fairs this fall.

After the milk is once contaminated no amount of "doctoring" will restore it to its pristine purity.

In Cuba the cows are driven from house to house and the desired quantity of milk is drawn in the presence of the purchaser.

Pure, wholesome milk is a food relished alike by infants, invalids, and strong men. The impurity of the product is what men most object to.

Many farmers living close to cities, large or small, could develop a profitable business in supplying fresh milk to the townspeople. Try it and be convinced.

A co-operative creamery run on a large scale is a money maker for its patrons. Every person should pay more attention to the principles of co-operation. Co-operative creameries and cheese factories are excellent institutions of the superior intelligence of the communities in which they are found.

We are glad we do not live in a city and be compelled to take chalk and water as a substitute for real milk. On the farm we can have the real article in any desired degree of richness. One reason more milk is not consumed in large cities is because people cannot get the unadulterated article.

Mud Fever.

Mud fever in colts is caused from allowing them to run in lots not properly drained. The best means of preventing this, says Orange Judd Farmer, is to provide a dry lot, clip the hair from around the pastern, wash off the mud at least once a day and carefully dry the skin. The washing should be done with cold water and the animals should be kept in a warm shed until thoroughly dry. Rubbing occasionally with a liniment consisting of acetate of lead one ounce, olive oil one pint and water one pint, will do much to prevent cracking of the heel.

Prize Hereford Calf.

A Hereford calf steer exhibited by an Indiana man won the grand championship for fat cattle at the Chicago International. It is the first time in the history of the exposition that the grand championship has gone to a calf.

Silo for Corn Fodder.

The silo is undoubtedly the most economical way of handling corn fodder, storing much in a small space, and keeping it in the best condition to feed, thereby increasing dairy profit and correspondingly enriching the farm.

BALM OF SCRIPTURE

HEALING PROPERTIES OF PINE KNOWN TO ANCIENTS.

Oil of the White Pine Tree Used Successfully by Physicians in Treating Consumptive Patients.

The Oil of the Pine Tree is supposed to be the balm of Scripture. It contains great medicinal properties and was regarded with the utmost esteem by the ancients, and to the present day is peculiarly prized by the people of the East.

A noted authority on diseases of the throat and lungs, who established a camp for consumptives in the Pine Woods of Maine, says that his entire treatment consisted of fresh air, nourishing food and the Pure Virgin Oil of the White Pine Trees, mixed with Whisky and Glycerine in the following proportions:

Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure)..Mxv.
Glycerine	2 ″
Good Whisky	8 ″

Used in teaspoonful doses every four hours.

It is claimed the above mixture will heal and strengthen the lungs, break up a cold in twenty-four hours, and cure any cough that is curable.

The ingredients can be secured from any good prescription druggist at small cost, and can be easily mixed in your own home.

Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) is put up only in half-ounce vials for dispensing. Each vial is securely sealed in a round wooden case with engraved wrapper with the name—Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure), prepared only by Leach Chemical Co., Cincinnati, O.—plainly printed thereon. There are many rank imitations of Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure), which are put out under various names, such as Concentrated Oil of Pine, Pine Balsam, etc. Never accept these as a substitute for the Pure Virgin Oil of Pine, as they will invariably produce nausea and never effect the desired result.

SURELY WINS THE PALM.

One Mean Man Who Outdoes Some Others.

Many stories have been told of mean men, such as he who used a five-cent safety-button and he whose birthday gift to his son consisted in washing the windows so that the lad might watch the cars go by. This man, however, seems to have won the palm:

There was an extremely mean man in New Hampshire, who was the proprietor of a hotel. By his direction rules were posted in the hostelry forbidding almost every conceivable privileges to those not guests of the place. There was absolutely no chance for the casual loafer to get newspapers, pen, ink, stationery, etc. There were not even free seats in the office.

One day, relates the Success Magazine, he chanced to observe a chronic loafer gazing at the old clock that hung on the wall. The next day a notice was posted over the clock. It read: "This clock is for the use of the guests of the hotel only."

Berth Was Reserved.

Franklin K. Lane, interstate commerce commissioner, went west last week. He wanted to reserve a berth from Chicago to Minneapolis. He wired the request and this reply came back: "Can't do it. Interstate commerce commission will not allow it." He fired a wire back reading: "By what authority do you say interstate commerce commission will not allow you to reserve a berth in a sleeping car?" The Pullman agent answered: "By the authority of a recent ruling." Mr. Lane was interested by this time and he telegraphed: "I am a member of the interstate commerce commission and am not familiar with the ruling. Give me a reference." And a short time afterward he received this telegram: "Berth reserved."

WHITE BREAD

Makes Trouble for People with Weak Intestinal Digestion.

A lady in a Wis. town employed a physicians who instructed her not to eat white bread for two years. She tells the details of her sickness and she certainly was a sick woman.

"In the year 1887 I gave out from overwork, and until 1901 I remained an invalid in bed a great part of the time. Had different doctors but nothing seemed to help. I suffered from cerebro-spinal congestion, female trouble and serious stomach and bowel troubles. My husband called a new doctor and after having gone without any food for 10 days the doctor ordered Grape-Nuts for me. I could eat the new food from the very first mouthful. The doctor kept me on Grape-Nuts and the only medicine was a little glycerine to heal the alimentary canal:

"When I was up again doctor told me to eat Grape-Nuts twice a day and no white bread for two years. I got well in good time and have gained in strength so I can do my own work again.

"My brain has been helped so much and I know that the Grape-Nuts food did this, too. I found I had been made ill because I was not fed right, that is I did not properly digest white bread and some other food I tried to live on.

"I have never been without Grape-Nuts food since and eat it every day. You may publish this letter if you like, or it will help someone else." Name given by Postum Co. Battle Creek, Mich. Get the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Japanese Hot Baths.

In Japan hot baths are used at a temperature of 104 degrees Fahrenheit. Immediately they leave this hot bath they plunge into perfectly cold water. A European doctor who has spent many years in Tokio declares that, after a bath of this heat and the subsequent douche, he used to feel warm all day in the coldest winter weather, while in summer the bath had the exactly contrary effect, and was most cooling and refreshing.

A traveling salesman died suddenly in Pittsburg, Pa., and sons of his friends telegraphed the undertaker an order to make a large wreath. Investigation showed that the telegram ordering the wreath read as follows:

"Rest in peace, on both sides of the ribbon; if there should be room: We shall meet in heaven."

The undertaker was out of town, and the new assistant handled the job. It was a startling floral piece which turned up at the funeral. The ribbon was extra wide, and it bore the inscription:

"Rest in peace on both sides, and if there is room we shall meet in heaven."

Makes Plea for Dance.

It seems a very great pity that some determined effort cannot be made to make dancing more popular. Life of Horses and Dogs.

The statement has been made that horses average from 20 to 30 years of life, and dogs from 12 to 14 years. A French encyclopedist credits the horse with 30 to 40 years, the dog with 20 to 24. There is a sufficient range of uncertainty in these figures to cause doubt whether detailed study has been made of the subject.

Washington a Shingle State.

The state of Washington produced 10,500,000,000 shingles in 1906 fiscal year, or 6¼ per cent of the total output of the United States. Washington has 429 mills, with a daily output of 47,940,000, or 18 per cent more than in 1905. In no other state does the yearly output approximate 1,000,000,000.

Developing the Sudan.

There is talk in England of the proposed development of the natural resources of the Sudan through scientific exploration. Immense forests line the banks of the Blue Nile along its upper reaches, extending to the Abyssinian frontier. The ebony tree is met with along that river and also near the Sobat. Along the White Nile the india rubber creeper, a valuable source of rubber, abounds. There are large forests in the Bahr-el-Ghazal province and gold has been mined in some of the mountains. Search will be made for fuel.

Scrupulous Senator.

Senator Spooner of Wisconsin surprised some members of congress with whom he was chatting the other day by announcing that he has never taken part in a congressional junket of any kind. "I never shall undertake such a journey at government expense," he said. "There is something very objectionable to me in members of congress going on such expeditions." For the reason that made him sidestep a congressional junket Senator Spooner said he had never been shaved in the senate barber shop, which is maintained at Uncle Sam's expense.

Priscilla's Revenge.

It was in the days of old when knights were bold and armed in gleaming armor.

"George, dear," said Priscilla, over her daily task, "will thou not help me with my skeins?"

"By the tower of London—no!" roared George; and he sharpened his lance. "You haven't a spinning wheel for a husband."

Two hours later George returned from the fray with his armor battered and torn.

"Dearest Priscilla," he said, softly, "will thou not put a few patches on my dress suit?"

"No, George," replied Priscilla, sweetly, "You haven't a blacksmith for a wife."

And the bold knight was so humiliated he went over to Ye Frozen Heart tavern and stood the tavern-keeper off for a tankard.

MISS JULIE FLORENCE WALSH

WOMEN SUFFER

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing well that they ought to have immediate assistance.

How many women do you know who are perfectly well and strong?

The cause may be easily traced to some feminine derangement which manifests itself in depression of spirits, reluctance to go anywhere or do anything, backache, dragging sensations, flatulency, nervousness, and sleeplessness.

These symptoms are but warnings that there is danger ahead, and unless heeded, a life of suffering or a serious operation is the inevitable result. The best remedy for all these symptoms is made from native roots and herbs. No other medicine in the country has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine has such a record of cures of female ills.

Miss J. F. Walsh, of 328 W. 36th St., New York City, writes:—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been of inestimable value in restoring my health. I suffered from female illness which caused dreadful headaches, dizziness, and dull pains in my back, but your medicine soon brought about a change in my system, built me up and made me perfectly well."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cures Female Complaints, such as Backache, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation and Ulceration, and Organic diseases. It is invaluable in preparing for child-birth and during the Change of Life. It cures Nervous Prostration, Headache, General Debility, and invigorates the whole system.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free.

BOMB THROWER KILLS CASHIER AND HIMSELF IN PHILADELPHIA BANK

HAVOC BY EXPLOSION.

The Fourth National is the wealthiest national bank in Philadelphia.

President Rushton is the head of the Philadelphia Clearing House association.

Steele, the bombthrower, is known in Chicago as an anarchist.

When the demand for money was refused Steele dropped the bomb at the feet of himself and the cashier.

Both the cashier and the bomb-thrower were blown to pieces and scattered over the bank.

The interior of the bank was wrecked and money and blood blown even out the windows.

The police reserves and firemen were called to prevent looting.

Panic reigned throughout the eight-story structure and in the vicinity of the bank.

Philadelphia.—It was just 11:40 o'clock, 20 minutes before closing time at the Fourth National bank on the morning of January 5, when a tall, dark, unkempt stranger entered the bank corridor from the north corridor of the Bullitt building. Patrons of the bank—not many in number, fortunately—were passing in and out to make deposits or drafts before noon. The clerks and tellers were busy footing up their sheets for the day. The officers were hurrying to wind up their business. Scarcely anyone noticed the newcomer.

He had on a dark blue suit of clothing, those who saw him remember, ragged and shiny from age. He wore a black slouch hat. He peered around, hesitatingly, and then caught sight of President Rushton standing near one of the vaults, which were soon to be closed. He must have known Mr. Rushton, for he did not ask anyone for the president, but approached him and spoke to him immediately.

"My name is G. E. Williams," he said, "and I live in the suburbs of Philadelphia. I want to know if you can let me have a loan of $5,000."

Mr. Rushton saw that the man was some sort of a crank, and to get rid of him asked that he name his securities, which the president would consider before making the loan. At the same time, Mr. Rushton signalled to Crump, the watchman, a splendidly built big negro, who wore a gray uniform and to the bank's patrons, was one of the most familiar figures about the place.

As the watchman responded, Mr. Rushton whispered: "Get rid of this fellow, won't you, 'Bob,'" addressing the colored man by the nickname which the financial men of the district long ago applied to him. But the that are worth a lot of money, too."

And he drew from his pocket two photographs, dirty and torn. One was of a woman, the other a little girl. It is supposed that they were pictures of his wife and daughter. The banker would not take them in his hand and scarcely more than glanced at them. They could not be found later.

By now Mr. Rushton was sure that the man had no legitimate business with him, so he excused himself on a plea of considering the security offered, and went around a corner of the corridor, waving his hand in the direction of the cashier's office, to indicate that Crump should conduct the unwelcome visitor there.

The man was so big and strong that he would have been a match for the negro had it come to a physical encounter, and probably both Mr. Rushton and Crump unconsciously decided that the best thing to do was to let Mr. McLear attend to him. The watchman had already taken the visitor towards McLear's office before President Rushton's signal.

The cashier was sitting at his desk, which was behind a wire-cage counter and separated from the main corridor of the bank only by a low railing. William McLear was a big, hearty, jovial chap, who could handle any sort of a man without giving him offense, and could get rid of him without creating a scene.

He was a "good fellow" with everybody, a handsome, likable man. Every bank has a man of that type as a valuable business asset, a man who represented the institution at conventions, banquets and social affairs, who by his personality secures and holds the business of the smaller banks in country towns. That was McLear's place here. He had been with the bank nearly 20 years, had gained for it much business, and had been promoted upon his merits from one post to another until not long ago he became cashier when Vice President Shunbacker took his present place.

Just exactly what happened then may never be known. A business man who was not far away saw McLear rise to meet the stranger and a moment later heard the latter's voice, high-pitched and angry. Only the words "five thousand dollars" could be made out. The business man, not interested in the talk, turned away.

Crash Heard Blocks Away.

Than came the ripping, grinding detonating crash. The roar of it was heard six blocks away. A great puff of smoke swept upward with the debris and drifted as high as the eighth or top story of the Bullitt building. Every pane of glass about the bank was shattered in a twinkling, and every piece of brass grill work was bent and twisted and torn.

A score of desks within a radius of ten yards seemed to leap straight in the air, and then drop back and crash upon the marble floor. There appeared to be a sheet of flame in the immediate vicinity of the explosion, for some of the desks were blackened and some curtains and woodwork at the eastern end of the inclosure in which McLear had his desk took fire.

Every person within the radius of the nitroglycerin's force was hurled flat upon the floor, many beneath crashing, cutting showers of heavy glass from the skylight and partitions, some beneath the desks at which they had been sitting a second before.

Not only from the bank's quarters, but from all over the building came cries of terror and shouts of warning. Men and women raced out through both of the big doorways into Fourth street, some fleeing for blocks in their fright. Pedestrians stopped in amazement as they heard the great "boom" and saw fugitives with bloody faces and hands pouring from the building.

In the terrific explosion both McLear and the bomb-thrower were instantly killed. A negro messenger named William Crump, who was trying to eject the stranger, had both his eyes blown out and was fatally injured. A dozen or more employes and patrons were severely hurt and the entire first floor of the bank was wrecked.

The cashier's body was torn limb from limb. Both legs were blown off, one arm was blown from its shoulder; half the head was all that remained.

Of the bomb-thrower so little was left that a waste basket contained all that was later taken in the morgue. He was literally shattered to atoms.

The only thing that remained intact about his body or his clothing was a little brass name plate attached to a bunch of keys, which was found near a strip of blue cloth that had been part of his trousers. The words "R. Steele, Garner, Ia." were inscribed upon the plate. Through this clew it was discovered that the man was Robert Steele, who had left the town town six years ago for the east, and had presumably been living with a wife and three children somewhere in this city then. His identity would probably never have been known for the little brass plate.

President Rushton, from the stranger had left only half a minute before throwing the bomb, escaped serious injuries, but had several small cuts on his face and hands. First Vice President Edward F. Shonbocker, though only a few feet away, was unscathed. Second Vice President B. M. Faires, whose desk is a mere step from the cashier's, probably escaped death only through having been ill and having stayed at home.

The explosion's force swept through every department of the bank and wrought havoc as it went. In the collateral department, not far away from where the bomb was thrown, $100,000 worth of valuable securities were blown from the desks and trays and were scattered in a twisted, torn mass.

Just outside the waiting room, which is in the same section of the bank, a massive brick fireplace, surmounted by a large marble clock, was building a desk in an office directly over the bank was completely upset and the employes panic-stricken. A medley of bells sounded all through the building as telephone bells in each of the offices began to clamor under the vibration of the building and chimes sounded on every side. The news stand in front of the bank was mixed up as badly as though it had been turned upside down. Papers, books and magazines were scattered everywhere.

It was an hour before anything like order was restored. Some of the bank officials began to clerks actually did not know they were injured until friends or strangers pointed out their wounds. The bank's telephone system was thrown out of order by the explosion and the attaches ran all over the neighborhood, bloody and disarrayed, wrecking 'phones over which they could let their families know that they were safe.

Eugene McIlhone, secretary to the second vice president, who was caught almost in the center of the explosion's radius, recovered consciousness before the debris had ceased falling, and then walked about for five minutes, dazed and helpless, before he discovered that the injury deeper of his right hand had been blown completely off.

Crowds numbering thousands gathered in Fourth street, in front of the building; in Harmony street, to the south of it, and in Orianna street, upon which the rear windows face. Along both these latter streets ghastly relics abounded. In Orianna street were fragments of glass and wood to which particles of flesh adhered. Harmony street was littered from curb, to curb with glass and wood, with here and there a bit of brass from the grillwork. Some of the ultra-morbid took away in their pockets some bits of the debris as souvenirs.

All afternoon and evening the Bullitt building was visited by the crowds. At night the police were still in charge of the bank. The officials were there, too, going over accounts to see that the money and securities were intact. Outside of the two certificate checks reported missing, it was said, unofficially, that everything had been found.

Bomb Thrower an Iowa Man.

Robert Steele, who undoubtedly is the bomb thrower who wrecked the Fourth Street National bank in Philadelphia, left Garner, Ia., six years ago with his wife and two children, going to Chicago where he secured employment. From there ha went east and while he did not correspond with persons in Garner it was learned there that he had located in Philadelphia.

While in Garner he ran a harvesting machine agency in which he was not overly successful in securing work. He was of a morose, despondent, rattling disposition, mixing little with people and seeking few friends.

He believed the world owed him a living and in numerous letters written while he was in Garner, said that the United States owed him a livelihood and that he was going to collect it though he had to resort to dynamiting so. Because of this attitude he was considered by many in his neighborhood, though never looked upon as a dangerous or desperate man.

After giving up his machine shop he peddled patent medicines for a time. Steel was 32 years old. He has a brother, Charles Steele, living at Klemme, Ia.

Steele's widow and family live at 1770 North Ashland avenue, Chicago. His father, now dead, was an active Socialist.

BOY BATTLES WITH MAD DOG IN DARK.

FALLS UNCONSCIOUS CLUTCHING THROAT OF FRENZIED BEAST AFTER DESPERATE STRUGGLE.

CRIES OF YOUTH UNHEEDED

Parents Think He Is Joking Until His Limp Form Is Found—Unconscious Victor Is Carried Home.

Evanston, Ill.—Facing a huge fawn shot, maddened dog alone in the darkness, Johnnie Bruchos, 14 years old, fought the fight of a child gladiator the other night, and when his parents found him hours afterward he was lying torn and unconscious, upon the body of the animal, which he had strangled to death with his small hands.

The child won the death battle with the beast, but, it is feared, at the expense of his own life. The little fellow was rushed on a fast train to the Pasteur institute in Chicago. His wounds were cauterized and every effort known to medical science was exerted by the physicians to save him from hydrophobia. The result will not be known for several days.

The struggle of the boy and the mad dog lasted for many minutes. His screams were heard by those living in the neighborhood. But those who heard paid no attention. They thought the boy was joking.

It was a literal repetition of the old fable of the boy who cried "Wolf!" with a possible reversal of the sequel. Even the members of the Bruchos family heard the cries of their son, and members of the family started up. But one of them said, "Oh, no; Johnnie is only joking." So they sat down again, while the child carried on his grim death struggle in the darkness.

The mad dog was almost as big and heavy as the child. He is believed to have entered the yard where Johnnie was playing and to have sunk his teeth into the boy's left arm.

Then it was that Johnnie screamed for help. It was after six o'clock at night and darkness had fallen. Johnnie could only feel his antagonist. He fought with his freed small fist and kicked with his feet as he called: "Papa! Mamma! Come come, come!"

The beast loosened its grip on the child's wrist and buried its fangs in the forearm higher up, as the torn flesh shows. Then it was that the instinct of self-preservation led the lad to adopt the tactics so strikingly described in the stories of the old Roman Coliseum and the battles of man and beast in Nero's arena.

With his free right hand the boy felt in the darkness for the throat of the dog.

Foam flecks on his coat sleeve tell the mute story of how the lad carefully sought the animal's windpipe. Once found, Johnnie threw all the strength of his small physique into that throttling grasp.

The struggle that followed carried boy and beast over the ground in a wrestle of madness on one side, desperation on the other. How long it lasted is not known. But it did come to an end, as the grip of the child gradually gagged the beast. Locked in a death grip the two sank to the ground. The boy's limp form lay over the body of the animal.

In this position they were found. It was with difficulty that the muscle-gripped arm of the lad was pried from about the neck of the animal. Small Johnnie, unconscious victor, was carried into the house and a doctor hurriedly summoned. After a while the child was revived.

"He will recover if he does not suffer from the madness," the physician told the lad's parents, and then had him hurried to the Pasteur institute for treatment.

The boy regained consciousness for a few minutes after the arrival of the physician. He told about the attack as follows:

"After the dog had bitten me the first time I tried to choke him, but that only made it worse and he came after me again. I put my arm about his neck as tightly as I could and went to sleep."

The dog was a large black animal weighing more than 70 pounds.

MAN WALKS BAREFOOT IN SNOW TO WIN DRINK

Travels Barefooted and Shoeless for Half a Mile—Taken for a Lunatic.

Toledo, O.—Without any covering on his feet or head and clad only in a pair of overalls and a thin gauze shirt, W. F. Dowd walked half a mile through ice and snow to win a wager of a glass of wine.

During his tramp hundreds of people stopped to stare at him and shake by somebody, thinking him crazy, next

DIES IN ANOTHER'S COFFIN.

Strange Fate Befalls Man Who Goes to Get Casket for Dead Neighbor.

Charlon, O.—Arthur Carrier, who was on his way home from Hearl's Grove with a coffin which was to be used at the funeral of a neighbor, was found dead inside the coffin when his team drove into the yard of his home. Some think he was murdered, although no other evidences of his having been injured were found about his body.

Carrier started out the other night to get the coffin. It is only a ten-mile drive and he was expected back before midnight. When he did not return it was learned by telephone that he had started on the trip back and fearing he had met with some harm some of his neighbors started to search for him.

While the searching party was out early in the morning Carrier's team walked into the yard at his home and headed for the barn. Carrier was not on the seat. An examination of the rig disclosed Carrier's body lying in the coffin. He was cold in death.

It is thought while seated in the wagon he was seized with heart disease and tumbled back into the coffin. Some of his friends believe he was murdered and the authorities are investigating.

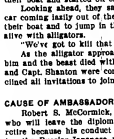
At the Nation's Capital

Interesting Bits of Gossip Gathered Here and There in Washington—Lodge and Taft Have the Laugh on Secretary Bacon—Mysterious Noise Disturbs Dignity of the Senate.

WASHINGTON.—President Roosevelt and a horseback ride the other Sunday resulted in Assistant Secretary of State Bacon being temporarily laid up for repairs. Mr. Bacon had a badly bruised leg as a result of being unable "to sit his horse," as the president explained. He was confined to his home for two days as a result of the ride.



Mr. Bacon, who frequently goes into Loudoun county, Va., to ride behind the hounds and who during his Harvard days was a crack polo player, was invited by the president to take a ride with him. Mr. Bacon was glad that the president suggested riding, as on a previous occasion the president took him out for a walk and after traveling over the country roads about 12 or 14 miles wound up the day by fording the Chesepeake canel without removing his clothing. Mr. Bacon to show his gameness followed the president and they both had to walk home in wet clothes.

Both had good mounts and after a dash over the beautiful roads of Rock Creek park the president and Mr. Bacon turned into open country. The president does not particularly like to stick too closely to the roads and it is his habit to turn into ravines and through woods, jumping his horse over fallen trees, rocks and occasionally a fence or two. They were cantering along when, in making a sharp turn, Mr. Bacon's horse became frightened at something. It bolted and Bacon was thrown to the ground.

The president chaffed Mr. Bacon considerably about his having forgotten how to ride and suggested buckboards, coupes and other things as perhaps more to Mr. Bacon's style of riding.

When Mr. Bacon reached home his injured leg was paining him so much that a physician was sent for. He could not leave his room for many hours and until he was driven to the White House. He limped as he left the carriage. The president was much concerned until he was assured that the injury was slight and that Mr. Bacon was suffering only from soreness.

CONGRESSMAN HAS UNPLEASANT ALLIGATOR HUNT.

A mammoth alligator nearly made a meal of Representative James McKinney of Illinois while he was on the isthmus of Panama with some of his colleagues of the house during the Christmas holidays making personal investigation of the canal zone.

After looking over the big ditch it was determined that the party should have an alligator hunt. The members started out in launches armed with magazine rifles. They sneaked up on a sandbar where a lot of alligators were sleeping and discberged a volley. The alligators which were not too badly hurt wriggled back into the water and disappeared. A count was made of the dead and 12 were found.

Representative McKinney and Capt. Shanton, who is connected with the canal work, entered their boat and started off on a hunt by themselves.

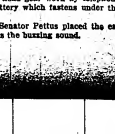
Looking ahead, they saw an alligator that seemed bigger than a freight car coming lazily out of the jungle toward them. They could not go back to their boat and to jump in the river would be suicide, as the water wes fairly alive with alligators.

"We've got to kill that alligator," said Capt. Shanton.

As the alligator approached both men emptied their rifle magazines into him and the beast died within a few feet of them. Representative McKinney and Capt. Shanton were congratulated on their escape, but Mr. McKinney declined all invitations to join in another hunt.

CAUSE OF AMBASSADOR M'CORMICK'S RETIREMENT.

Robert S. McCormick, ambassador at Paris, who will leave the diplomatic service soon, will retire because his conduct at St. Petersburg during the Russia-Japanese war met with the disapproval of President Roosevelt and not because of any activity on his part in marrying Miss Patterson, his niece, to a Polish nobleman.



Miss Patterson is the daughter of one of the owners of a Chicago newspaper and her marriage three years ago to Count Gyzitski was approved by her parents. This match had nothing to do with the retirement of Ambassador McCormick.

While stationed at St. Petersburg Ambassador McCormick espoused the cause of Russia in its war with Japan. During hostilities he was given a period of leave of absence and returned to the United States. Upon landing at New York he found the sympathy of the country was with Japan. This displeased the ambassador and in an interview he reprimanded the American people, who, he declared, were ungrateful in sympathizing with Japan, as Russia was the friend of the United States and had threatened to send a fleet of warships to the assistance of the United States during the civil war when Great Britain was preparing to assist the confederacy.

This interview was disapproved by President Roosevelt, who favored the instant dismissal of Ambassador McCormick. The president was induced, however, to allow Mr. McCormick to remain in the service, but he was transferred to Paris without being consulted. This action was taken after Secretary Hay had summoned Ambassador McCormick to the department here and administered a severe reprimand.

Secretary Hay allowed Ambassador McCormick to remain in the diplomatic service for one year. This was extended a year and now a successor has been chosen—Henry White, now ambassador at Rome, who will succeed Mr. McCormick at Paris in March.

STRANGE BUZZING SOUND HAS SENATORS GUESSING.

As an elephant is frightened by a mouse, so has the dignity and poise of the senate been disturbed by a "buzz-z-z-z-z-z" not unlike that of a humble bee in a clover patch.

All through the shower of White House messages the safety valve of the nation has continued to maintain its reputation for calmness and unruffled composure. Even when the president's epistles clattered like hail upon the clerk's desk, and there was no sign of a let up, the senate continued unruffled and seemingly unaffected.

But the other day the "buzz-z-z-z" proved too much for senatorial nerves. Several complained. They could not find it. It seemed to come from everywhere, and from no place in particular.

Every engineer in the capitol was called in, but in vain. Electricians and plumbers were dafled by the mysterious sound.

Next morning it continued. The mystery deepened. The annoyance of the senators became more evident. Then an astute page made the big discovery.

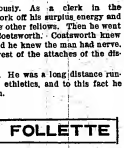
It came from the desk of Senator Pettus of Alabama. A search showed that a new device to enable the senator to hear proceedings of the senate was the cause.

The senator's ear equipment resembles the head gear worn by telephone girls, and is connected with a small storage battery which fastens under the coat.

In laying the apparatus away in his desk, Senator Pettus placed the ear piece and the battery in contact. The result was the buzzing sound.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

KIPLING OF AMERICAN NAVY



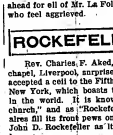
James R. Connolly is the latest friend of Theodore Roosevelt to get the president into trouble. Admiration for the brilliant young Boston writer, it is said, led the president to suggest to him that he become the "Kipling of the American Navy." Accordingly Mr. Connolly has enlisted as a "yeoman." He will be a yeoman and yet not a yeomen. In order that his impressions of the American navy may not be one-sided or prejudiced he will have full run of any battleship on which he may be. Every door from the officers' quarters to the stokehold will be open to him. He will have a nice little cabin all to himself in which to indite vivid and wonderful tales that shall make the American navy feared and admired to the farthest corners of the globe.

Out of regard for "Iese Roosevelte," (?) probably, officers of the navy have as yet made no protest against this "yeoman" invasion of the secred precincts of the quarterdeck. Outsiders, however, are severely criticising the president for this method of making Kiplings out of strplings. It is suggested that a better way would be to make young Connolly an admiral and retire him at once, on half-pay, so that he could devote his entire time to the glorification of our fighting marine. It is predicted that not only navy, but army, recruiting stations will soon be crowded with callow literary geniuses ready to sacrifice their lives to the pursuit of fame by writing up the prowess of American arms.

Mr. Connolly is a clean-cut young Bostonian. He studied law but soon abandoned Blackstone for the more lucrative and congenial occupation of writing stirring tales of the sea. His "The Deep Sea Toll" and "Out of Gloucester" are said to be masterpieces of life on the ocean wave.

WOULD OUST GOTHAM MAYOR

William Schuyler Jackson, the new Democratic etorney general of the Empire state, whose first move after taking office has been to institute suit to unseat Mayor McClellan of New York on the ground that William R. Heerst was counted out and is entitled to the office, was elected on Heerst's Independence league ticket in last fall's campaign.



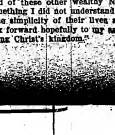
William S. Jackson is a Buffalo attorney 37 years of age who has won the reputation of being a relentless foe to graft.

"Bill" Jackson grew up in Erie county into his position. He is constitutionally and cheerfully belligerent. He is absolutely radical. No middle ground for "Bill." Everybody likes him. He will fight, and it is said that even his enemies have a sneaking feeling of friendship for the big, good-looking chap who'd rather "sic 'em" than curl up on a piece of carpet beside the stove.

Jackson's public career began inauspiciously. As a clerk in the county clerk's office he hadn't enough to do to work off his surplus energy and so-blew around town having a good time with the other fellows. Then he went in as second assistant district attorney under Coatsworth. Coatsworth knew his man. He knew Jackson lusted for combat and he knew the man had nerve. So he let fight. To his second assistant and the rest of the attaches of the district attorney's office hed peace.

In college he was considerable of an athlete. He was a long distance runner and a good oarsman. He still keeps up his athletics, and to this fact he attributes his rugged strength and perfect health.

OPPOSITION TO LA FOLLETTE



It is expected that before long some of the senators will attempt to do unto Senator La Follette as Senator La Follette did unto others.

When the Wisconsin senator last summer lectured in several states he was introduced to his audience on several occasions by men who are his colleagues in the senate. At one of La Follette took occasion at times to roast the political actions in Washington of the very men who introduced him and who were sitting on the stage beside him. This was held not only to be impolite but pretty near to a case of insult.

During the session Senator La Follette will attempt to get consideration for several bills the passage of which he has at heart, among the bills being the one which limits the hours of work of railroad employes. He has other railroad bills in mind, but he will find that opposition will come from quarters where last year he might have expected support.

Senator Hemenway came in for criticism last summer from Senator La Follette and so did Senator Spooner, and on several other occasions. They have not forgotten nor forgiven. Last year Senator Spooner, who, as everybody knows, doesn't like his Wisconsin brother senator a little bit, attempted to help him out from sheer kindness, when he thought that La Follette was not getting a fair show. It seems probable that Senator Spooner will not come to his rescue this year and it also seems likely that there is trouble ahead for all of Mr. La Follette's bills unless he makes his peace with the men who feel aggrieved.

ROCKEFELLER'S NEW PREACHER

Rev. Charles F. Aked, pastor of Pembroke chapel, Liverpool, surprised many people when he accepted a call to the Fifth Avenue Baptist church, New York, which boasts the richest congregation in the world. It is known as the "millionaire's church," and as "Rockefeller's church." Millionaires fill its front pews on Sunday, and on several occasions John D. Rockefeller as his most prominent member.

Even greater surprise was expressed that the Fifth Avenue church should extend a call to Dr. Aked. For he is noted for his freedom of speech and thought, and has earned a reputation as a spokesman for the newest forms of social democracy. He is acknowledged one of the foremost pulpit orators in England. He is 40 years old.

Dr. Aked preached a sermon in New York about a month ago. John D. Rockefeller went from his home in Pocantico Hills to hear him. After Dr. Aked's return to England the oil magnate called to him, urging him to come to America and promising him a "free hand" in his ministerial work.

Dr. Aked has given his estimate of New York millionaires as follows:

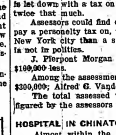
"The personal piety of Mr. Rockefeller and of these other wealthy New Yorkers have been a revelation to me and something I did not understand or appreciate before meeting them. I admire the simplicity of their lives and their desire to do good in the world, and I look forward hopefully to my association with such men as a means of advancing Christ's kingdom."

New York Town Talk

Jewels Worth $50,000,000 Worn by Gotham Society Queens at Opening of Opera Season—Women Unattended May Now Eat in Waldorf-Astor.a Restaurant—Other Interesting Notes.

NEW YORK.—The opera season is in full swing and so is the gorgeous display of jewels by New York's rich women in and out of the box. Every night at the Manhattan opera house, where Melba and the other stars are singing, millions of dollars of gems sparkle in the audience. On the first night of her appearance Mme. Melba wore $500,000 worth of jewelry and it is estimated that the women in the boxes carried $50,000,000 more.

New York has become the great diamond market of the world, and within the last five years the demand for the gems has increased so enormously as to call attention to the fact that several New York families own collections which rival the crown jewels of many reigning monarchs.



Mrs. Clarence Mackay has one sapphire which alone is valued at $150,000. It is four-tenths of an inch in diameter. She also has diamonds that cost over $1,000,000.

Mrs. George Gould has a collection of jewels which has been estimated at $480,000, of which $20,000 worth are rings. One solitary ruby is valued at $7,000. The most valuable piece is a diamond and ruby necklace worth $35,000.

The Vanderbilt family owns $4,000,000 worth of jewels. Mrs. Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt added $100,000 worth of diamonds to the family collection, including a necklace valued at $80,000.

Mrs. Bradley-Martin has jewels valued at over $500,000; some experts claiming that it is the finest collection owned by any American woman. The most notable piece is a diamond breastpiete which covers the front of a low-cut hodice, literally clothing the owner with jewels. It is valued at $10,000. A collection of tiers, necklaces, bracelets and gems of carefully matched stones is valued at $200,000.

TAX LIST OF GOTHAM MILLIONAIRES.

Tax books opened for public inspection the other day show that Andrew Carnegie again heads the list as the heaviest payer of personal property. He did not object to the assessment of his personal property at $5,000,000.

But John D. Rockefeller, Jr., submits to a taxation on only $50,000 worth of personality. Personality includes jewelry, furniture, paintings, stocks and bonds, and everything not taxed under the real estate law.

In this same list it will be observed that Alfred R. M. Gonlin, a fugitive from justice and high finance swindler, is assessed for $60,000 or $10,000 more than John D. Rockefeller, Jr. Hannah Elies, a negress who got $650,000 from John R. Pyne, is requested to pay a tax on $71,000 worth of personality.

The estate of Russell Sage is assessed at $2,000,000; quite an increase over last year, when Mr. Sage was alive.

All of the Vanderbilts total an assessment of $2,800,000. August Belmont is let down with a tax on $100,000. His brother, O. H. P. Belmont, is assessed twice that much.

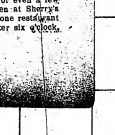
Assessors could find only $30,000 that Senator Chauncey M. Depew should pay a personality tax on, while John W. Gates, who has no more of a home in New York city than a suite at the Waldorf, is assessed at $250,000. Gates is not be pitties.

J. Pierpont Morgan is assessed at $400,000, and John Jacob Astor at $100,000 less.

Among the assessments are: William Rockefeller, $250,000; H. H. Rogers, $300,000; Alfred G. Vanderbilt, $250,000; Cornelius Vanderbilt, $70,000.

The total assessed value of real and personal property in the city as figured by the assessors this year will be about $8,805,219,570.

HOSPITAL IN CHINATOWN FOR ALMOND-EYED ORIENTALS.



Almost within the shadows of the vine-clad walls of the "Little Church Around the Corner" and near the western border of Gotham's Chinatown stands a modest little, old-fashioned, red brick building. Across the front of the structure stretches a sign in large gilt letters, such as are seen on packages of firecrackers. The characters read: "Sing Kung Hong Hospital," when translated, read: "Chung Wai Kong Sze E Sang Fong." The inscription is not the name of a new brand of tea, nor that of a Chinese consul. Translated into English the words are: "The Combined Chinese-Speaking Society's Hospital."

The infirmary is beyond the well-beaten path of Chinatown sightseers, although not far from the main joss house on Doyers street. Were the meaning of the sign generally known every visitor in the city would demand the guides to pilot them through the strange little institution that they might explore the place and try to solve its mysteries. And the hospital has some mysteries which, according to the old Chinese superstition, can only be solved by the great Joss. As the hospital many elant-eyed residents of the Bowery and other districts of New York are treated daily.

It is the only hospital in the country, with possibly the exception of a similar institution in San Francisco, in which patients are not permitted to die. They are hustled from the hospital before the Black Dragon enters the place and removed to the death room in Chinatown, where the sinking patient expires. When a sick Chinaman has become so low that it is an assured fact that he is soon to see the light of another world some peculiar rites are conducted around his bedside by his "cousins" and his friends.

WALDORF-ASTORIA BOWS TO LONE WOMAN.

Woman has conquered. The Waldorf-Astoria hotel has posted the following notice: "Ladies without escort will be served in the restaurants hereafter at any hour."

So the triumph of the modern, independent woman is written in black and white at the Waldorf-Astoria. No longer is mere man essential to her midnight supper.

"Yes, we will serve women," said the only Oscar the other day. "What else can you do in a hotel? For that matter, we have always served our guests. It must be done in a hotel. You cannot have a rigid rule that women unattended cannot be served in the dining-rooms after six o'clock. Of course, we shall continue to be careful. We must use some discretion. But any woman or women who come here at any time and have the appearance of being respectable will be welcome to dine in any of the restaurants."

"When did you make the new rule and why?" Oscar was asked.

"Ah," said the wise Oscar, "the women are being heard from nowadays. They are found in every business, and in some they lead the men. It is enough to say they have conquered; that they have shown that they do not need the attendance of men. It was not so a few years ago, or even a few months ago. Not so long ago the doors were closed to women at Sherry's and Delmonico's. But the bars are down now. There is only one restaurant in New York where women cannot dine without an escort after six o'clock. That is the Cafe Martin."

REPORT ON FUEL MONOPOLY IN EAST

COMMERCE BOARD TELLS HOW COAL OUTPUT IS CONTROLLED BY RAILROADS.

Combinations and Agreements Have Practically Ended Competition—Publicity and Ban on Ownership Given as Remedies.

Washington, Jan. 26.—The interstate commission Friday transmitted to congress its first report on its investigation on discrimination and monopolies under the joint resolution of congress of March 7 1906, known as the Tillman-Gillespie resolution. The report deals with bituminous coal carried east of the Ohio river and in territory bounded on the south by the Norfolk & Western railway, on the north by Canada, and on the south by the Atlantic seaboard.

The roads involved are the Norfolk & Western, Chesapeake & Ohio, Baltimore & Ohio, Pennsylvania, Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg; Beech Creek division of the New York Central & Hudson River; Pittsburg, Shawmut & Northern, Buffalo & Susquehanna and West Virginia Central & Pittsburg (now the Western Maryland railroad).

Own Large Interests in Coal Lands.

The report is only a partial one and will be followed by another, after further investigation. It is practically a summary of the information gleaned as a result of the investigation thus far made, together with the presentation of facts pertaining to the general inquiry. The report concludes with recommendations for legislative action, based on the developments thus far.

Publicity as a Remedy.

The recommendations are:

1. That every common carrier engaged in interstate transportation of coal be required to make public the system of car distribution in effect upon its railway and the several divisions thereof, showing how the equipment for coal service is divided between the several divisions of its road and how the some, in times when the supply of equipment does not equal the demand, is divided among the several mining operations along such road and that the carrier further be required to publish at stated periods and at each divisional headquarters upon its line of road the system of car distribution in effect and the actual distribution made to each in mining operation under such system.

2. That where the capacity of the mines is the basis for the distribution or equipment, a fair, just and equitable rating of the mines be required, and that provision be made for the representation of owners of the mines at the rating thereof.

3. That after reasonable time the carriers engaged in interstate commerce be prohibited from using "individual" or "private" cars for the handling of coal traffic.

Would Bar Ownership in Mines.

4. That carriers engaged in interstate commerce be forbidden after reasonable time to own or have interest, directly or indirectly, in any operated coal properties, except such as are exclusively for their own fuel supply, and that ownership, either directly or indirectly, by officers or employes of common carriers of any coal properties or any of the stock of coal companies along the line of the road by which they are employed be forbidden.

ROAD'S CHARTER ATTACKED.

Proceedings in Minnesota Against Great Northern's Parent.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 26.—Attorney Gen. Young began quo warranto proceedings in the supreme court Friday to compel the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railroad company to show cause why its charter should not be forfeited.

This company, formerly known in this state as the Minnesota & Pacific company, is really the lessee of the Great Northern Railway company, and the Great Northern is joined in this issue, as it is the owner of the Manitoba company's stock.

Attorney General Young's complaint covers 18 typewritten pages and goes into the transactions of the Great Northern Railroad company with its constituent companies forming the "merger" known as the Great Northern Railway company.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 24.—In the Ramsey county district court Wednesday Judge Oscar Hallam signed an order enjoining James J. Hill and other officials of the Great Northern Railway company from making the proposed increase of $50,000,000 worth of additional stock of that company or issuing the same or part thereof during the pending litigation without first making an application in writing therefor to the Minnesota railroad and warehouse commission and securing its approval thereof, as provided by section 2,873 of the revised laws of 1906 of Minnesota."

TOWNSHIP IS FLOODED

WABASH RIVER LEVEE AT MERROM, IND., HAS GIVEN WAY.

Missouri Farm Lands Under Water—Negroes Forced to Work on Shawneestown Levee.

Terre Haute, Ind., Jan. 25.—Telephone advices from Marom, south of this city, state that the Wabash river levee, protecting an entire township, broke late Thursday afternoon and the 300 people of the valley had to flee for their lives. The Illinois Central railroad tracks at Riverton are being washed out.

One farmer with 1,000 head of cattle and 500 head of hogs is trying to save his stock with a ferry boat. This loss to the township will aggregate thousands of dollars.

Cairo, Ill., Jan. 25.—The river is running over the levees at Bird's Point, Mo., and thousands of the best farming land in Missouri is under water. As the river rose gradually nearly every resident of the lowlands went to places of safety and most of the stock had been driven out. The damage at this overflowed section will be tremendous.

Evansville, Ind., Jan. 25.—A telephone message from Mayor Kratz at Shawneetown, Ill., at seven o'clock Thursday night stated that every able bodied man left in town was working on the levee. The levee is holding intact up to this time. The negroes of the town refused to work on the levee and a party of white men headed by Mayor Kratz, with barrel staves in their hands, forced the negroes to go to work.

Natchez, Miss., Jan. 25.—The Mississippi river at this place has passed the danger line, the gauge recording one-tenth of a foot above the line, 44 feet, at four o'clock Thursday afternoon. This stage puts a very heavy acreage of cultivated and timbered lands under water. People in the lowlands are moving all movable property to high ground.

Grand Rapids, Mich. Jan. 25.—The ice gorge which began forming here Wednesday in Grand river is now practically extends from a half mile north of this city nearly to Grand Haven, 40 miles away. While the water is slowly falling below this city, it is rising hourly above. An ice gorge is now forming above which threatens to flood nearly all the west side, the river streets being under water

METEOR CAUSED EXPLOSION.

Novel Explanation of the Terrible Disaster at Sandford, Ind.

Terre Haute, Ind., Jan. 26.—That a meteor set off the car of powder and caused the disaster to Big Four accommodation train No. 3 at Sandford, Ind., on last Saturday night, is the assertion of H. E. Brown, of Edgar county, Illinois. He stated Friday that on the night of the disaster a large meteor passed over his place. It appeared like a great ball of fire and made a noise like a strong wind.

This meteor, said Mr. Brown, was moving in the direction of Sandford, and left a trail of sparks. Almost immediately after the appearance the explosion of the car of powder occurred. Other people living in the vicinity of Vermilion, Ill., and Sandford, Ind., stated that they saw the meteor.

SENATOR ALGER DIES SUDDENLY

MICHIGAN STATESMAN PASSES AWAY AT HIS HOME IN WASHINGTON.

Funeral Will Be Held Saturday—Secretary Taft, in General Order to the Army, Pays a Tribute to His Predecessor.

Washington, Jan. 25.—United States Senator Russell A. Alger of Michigan died suddenly at his residence in this city at 8:45 o'clock Thursday morning, following an acute attack of oedema of the lungs, with which he was stricken shortly after eight o'clock. Although Senator Alger had not been in good health for some time, his death was most unexpected. The senator Wednesday night was apparently in his usual health. During the day he transacted considerable business and was at the war department up to a late hour Wednesday afternoon. At the bedside when he passed away were Mrs. Alger and their son, Capt. F. M. Alger, and wife.

Funeral on Saturday.

The funeral services will be held at two o'clock Saturday afternoon at the family residence in this city. The body will be taken to Detroit, Mich., for burial.

Gen. Alger had suffered for a good many years with chronic valvular diseases of the heart, but of late he seemed to be a good deal better.

When the president was informed of Senator Alger's death, he addressed a letter of condolence to Mrs. Alger, this accompanied it with a floral offering.

Secretary Taft's Tribute.

The formal announcement of Senator Alger's death was made to the army by Secretary Taft in the following order:

"The secretary of war announces with deep sorrow the death of Hon. Russell Alexander Alger, which occurred on the 24th instant at his residence in this city.

"Gen. Alger was secretary of war during the administration of President McKinley, from March 5, 1897, to August 1, 1899; a period during which the administration of the war department was brought into great prominence through its activity in connection with the war with Spain and the military operations in the Philippines that succeeded it.

"Gen. Alger was patriotic, earnest and most devoted to the interests of the army, and especially considerate of the welfare of enlisted men. He was a gentle, kindly man with great confidence in his friends and associates, and was much beloved by his subordinates. He was the subject of unjust criticism because of the country's lack of preparedness for war when war came although for this he was in no wise responsible. His record as a soldier in the civil war was long, useful and highly honorable.

"As a mark of respect to his memory it is ordered that the flags at all military posts be displayed at half-mast on the day of the funeral."

Sody to Lie in State.

Washington, Jan. 26.—Assistant Secretary of the Navy Newberry, who is arranging the details of the funeral of the late Senator Alger so far as that can be done from Washington, announced Friday that at the close of the funeral service., to be held here at two o'clock Saturday afternoon, the body will be removed to the Pennsylvania railroad station and placed on the four o'clock western train due to arrive in Detroit at 10:45 a. m. Sunday. There it will lie in state during the remainder of Sunday. Monday morning the casket will be taken to the Alger residence, where funeral services will be held at two o'clock.

The United States army will be represented by an escort of three or four companies of infantry now stationed at Fort Wayne and by a firing squad to give a military character to the services at the graveside.

HAMPERS RELIEF WORK

KINGSTON SEVERELY CONDEMNS SWETTENHAM'S CONDUCT.

Health Officer of Ruined City Warmly Thanks American Marines for Their Services.

Kingston, Jamaica, Jan. 26.—The lack of cooperation on the part of the central control here in greatly hampering the work of extending relief, providing shelter for the earthquake sufferers, pulling down the unsafe walls and repairing the damaged buildings, for which Gov. Swettenham is severely condemned. The Daily Telegraph in an editorial says:

"His excellency is still careering around the city, poking his nose into various corners and attending to petty details which his subordinates ought to attend to. The result is that when prominent officials and other gentlemen in charge of important work call at headquarters houses to consult him they cannot find the governor. There is a total absence of a deliberate, organized movement. This is a state of affairs on which the British and colonial governments cannot congratulate themselves."

An instance of the governor's untimely obstructive measures is the police enforcement of the regulation forbidding the erection of buildings, even wooden shacks, without the city surveyor's approval of the plans, which is causing great delay and dissatisfaction. The general opinion is that the governor has completely lost his head and is utterly unequal to the task of meeting the emergency.

Colonial Secretary Olivier caused the publication of a letter in reply to the letter of the American consul, Mr. Orrett, saying that his criticism of the visit of Rear Admiral Davis to headquarters, when the permission to land marines was given, does not agree with Mr. Orrett's version, but he does not explain the difference.

A report issued by Health Officer Ogilvie warmly thanks the crew of the American battleship Missouri for their assistance in burying the dead and commends the services of Surgeon Norton of the Missouri in establishing the American hospital at Hordern's racecourse. The report that the sailors were guilty of some looting is authoritatively denied.

Earth tremors continue, but at longer intervals and in decreased intensity.

Washington, Jan. 26.—A cablegram was received Friday night by the state department from John R. Carter, the American charge d'affaires at London, regarding the Swettenham-Davis episode, and announcing that he was forwarded to the president, formed a theme of discussion at a conference held at the White House between the president and Secretary of State Root. It was not made public.

Washington, Jan. 26.—The receipts in this city Thursday of this official full text of the correspondence between Governor Swettenham, of Jamaica, caused the naval officials again to study the situation to see if Admiral Davis had in any way transgressed the bounds or propriety on his visit to Kingston. Secretary Metcalf announced that they not only found a precedent for his landing men from his ships to preserve order, strangely enough in the case of another British island in the West Indies, Trinidad, but also saw nothing in the whole affair to warrant the letter addressed to him by Gov. Swettenham.

Raising Fund for Carroll College.

Waukesha, Wis., Jan. 25.—An effort is being made to increase the endowment of Carroll college to $200,000. Of this amount Andrew Carnegie has promised $25,000, and $75,000 more is available as soon as the first $100,000 is completed.

Iowa Doctor Kills Himself.

Bloomfield, Ia., Jan. 25.—Dr. W. W. Davis, one of the oldest physicians in Davis county, committed suicide Thursday by swallowing carbolic acid. Despondency following ill health is said to have been the cause.

SENATE IS AFTER NAVY OFFICERS

HALE PRESENTS RESOLUTION TO CHECK THEIR LOBBYING FOR PERSONNEL BILL.

Senator Simmons Introduces New Child Labor Measure Recognizing Laws of Its Several States—House Discusses Free Seed Distribution.

Washington, Jan. 26.—Resolutions to check naval officers from "fighting a fire under senators and members to compel the enactment of the naval personnel bill at this session," were presented in the senate Friday by Senator Hale, and after causing a snappy debate of short duration, went over for future consideration.

Senator Hale's resolutions cite the president's order forbidding government employes to "lobby," and direct an inquiry by the secretary of the navy to ascertain whether the order is being violated.

The urgent deficiency appropriation bill, carrying $370,000, as it came from the house and authorizing by a senate amendment a loan of $1,000,000 to the Jamestown Exposition company, was passed. The latter part of the day was devoted to the disposition of pension bills.

New Child Labor Bill.

Senator Simmons introduced a child labor bill which is designed to make it unlawful for an interstate carrier to transport from the state of production into another state products of a mine or factory in which children are employed or permitted to work in violation of the child labor laws of the state and seeks to make them effective. It is based upon the idea that nearly all the states have child labor laws and that they are largely ineffective and will remain so as long as they can only be enforced by local prosecution for their violation.

Pies for Free Seeds.

In connection with the discussion of agricultural appropriation bill in the house there was a general debate on the committee provision appropriating $238,000 for the purchase and testing of new rare and uncommon seeds bulbs, trees, shrubs and vines, and omitting the usual appropriation for the purchase of ordinary flower and garden seed for distribution.

Mr. Candler of Mississippi led the fight for free seeds, and in a long speech in favor of the provision in last year's appropriation bill he charged that the item in the present bill was the work of a lobby composed of seed men all the country, and of effective newspaper work. He said: "I could not go back and look his 'dear old farmer friends' in the face, after the increase of the salaries of congressmen, if free seeds were not to be had. It performs a substitute providing for free seeds as heretofore. He criticised the department of agriculture for its forestry in the matter and said the government was becoming a bureaucracy.

Abolishes Pension Agencies.

Washington, Jan. 25.—The house Thursday voted to abolish all the pension agencies throughout the country, 18 in number, and centralize the payment of pensions in the city of Washington. This action was taken on the pension appropriation bill after spirited opposition on the part of those having pensions agencies in their sixties.

By a vote of 85 to 114 an amendment offered by Mr. Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, requiring the number of agencies to 18 as at present, was defeated, and then an amendment offered by Mr. Gardner, of Michigan, consolidating all the agencies in one, was adopted without division.

Pension Bill Passed.

The pension appropriation bill carrying $138,000,000 in round numbers, was passed.

A message from the president was read relative to insurance and at 2:30, out of respect to the memory of the late Senator Alger, of Michigan, the house adjourned.

The house committee on military affairs decided Thursday to make a favorable report on a bill permitting the wives of enlisted men to be buried in the same graves with their husbands in national cemeteries. This measure was strongly urged for several years by Mrs. Tanner, wife of Corporal Tanner, Mrs. Tanner was killed in an automobile accident last summer. Since her death "Corporal" Tanner has worked for the measure and he is largely responsible for its progress.

To Elect Supreme Court.

Mr. Lamar, of Florida introduced in the house Friday a resolutions providing for the election of the judges of the United States supreme court by the people, the nine judges to be selected by the nine judges after their election. He would have the United States divided into nine districts for the purpose of holding the judicial elections. The bill also provides that postmasters shall be selected by popular vote.

Frankfort, Ky., Jan. 25.—The court of appeals Thursday upheld the constitutionality of the legislative act of 1904 making chicken stealing a felony.

MAYOR OF SUNBURY

Says Pe-ru-na Is a Good Medicine.

Hon. C. C. Brooks, Mayor of Sunbury, Ohio, also Attorney for Farmers' Bank and Sunbury Building and Loan Co., writes:

"I have the utmost confidence in the virtue of Peruna. It is a great medicine. I have used it and I have known many of my friends who have obtained beneficial results from its use. I cannot praise Peruna too highly."

HON. C. C. BROOKS.

THERE are a host of petty ailments which are the direct result of the weather.

This is more true of the excessive heat of summer and the intense cold of winter, but is partly true of all seasons of the year.

Whether it be a cold or a cough, catarrh of the head or bowel catarrh, whether the liver be affected or the kidneys, the cause is very liable to be the same.

The weather slightly deranges the mucous membranes of the organs and the result is some functional disease.

Peruna has become a standby in thousands of homes for minor ailments of this sort.

BROKE THE DEER'S BACK.

How Treed Hunter Escaped From Threatened Death.

Peter Rinderneckt, of Camp Bailey, Pa., is still table of his injuries to escape from an infuriated deer, which he finally killed in an unusual manner.

While the other members of the camp were away on a long drive, Pete, finding things slow in camp, decided to do a little hunting on his own hook.

Back of the Hinkis farm he jumped a large buck and fired a shot which made a flesh wound. The angry deer, throwing down its antlers, made for Pete, who dropped his rifle and climbed the nearest tree.

The deer pawed at the tree, snorting with rage, and Pete thought it a fine joke until night began to draw near and the buck still on guard.

He landed right on the buck's back, breaking its spinal column and completing it so that with the clubbing it with his hunting knife was easy.

Has Cinch on Position.

Various authorities have passed on a letter received at the post office department a short time ago and it has finally been sent to the postmaster general. The letter came from a west-ern postmaster of a small office and read: "In accordance with the rules of the department, I write you to inform you that on next Saturday I will close the post office for one day, as I am going on a hear hunt. I am not asking your permission to close up and you can discharge me if you want to. But I will advise you now that I am the only man in the county who can read and write." It is not likely that the postmaster will be discharged.

Long and Remarkable Life.

Sinfold tells us of a remarkable record of an old man of his acquaintance employed by Mr. William Sedge, of Gorleston-on-Sea. This old gentleman began his working life as a farm laborer 71 years ago, before Queen Victoria came to the throne, and at 81 he can still do a day's work as well as many men of half his years. Almost more remarkable is the fact that although he has spent practically all his long life within sight of the sea he has never been on it, nor has he ever been inside a train.—Tit-Bits.

The Well Knit College Chap.

Ethel's big sister has an ardent admirer who is a college athlete, a big, broad-shouldered chap. Ethel overheard that "she says you are beautifully knit. The next evening, when the young man called, Ethel went into the parlor to entertain him.

"Do you know what sister says about you?" demanded Ethel.

"No. Something nice, I hope," said the young man.

"Oh, yes, it's very nice," replied Ethel. "She says you are beautifully crocheted."

MINNESOTA NEWS

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

LARGE LAND BUSINESS.

St. Paul.—During the last ten years the land business of the State of Minnesota has more than trebled, and the total volume of the financial transactions of the state have nearly doubled.

This is demonstrated by startling statistics prepared by Samuel G. Iverson, state auditor, relative to the business of his office. For the two years ending July 31, 1898, the end of the fiscal year, the total accumulation from state lands and credited to the different trust funds, was $121,894.65; for the two years ending July 31, 1906, it was $2,239,305.89.

For the two years ending July 31, 1896, the total cash received was $10,-900,512.23 and the total amount disbursed during the period was $10,539,-757. For the two years ending July 31, 1906, the total amount received was $19,451,114.67, the total amount disbursed, was $18,657,132.62.

Since the formation of its state government, Minnesota has never gone through a year without having a balance to the state's credit at the end of the year. In 1860 this record came near being broken, as the balance at the end of the year was only $675.74. The year 1855 was the one when the state came out with the largest balance over shown by the auditor's ledger. Exclusive of money carried over from the previous year, it then totaled $2,607,-115 97

ATTEMPTED HOLDUP.

St. Paul.—A daring attempt to hold up a street car at Fillmore avenue and South Robert street was made by a lone highwayman.

The car had stopped to let off some passengers. Just as the conductor rang the "go ahead" bell a man stepped in front of the motorman's window and attracted his attention. Motorman Bernard S. Arndt, thinking that some trouble had happened, opened the door of his car to make inquiries. As he did so the man pointed a revolver at his head.

Mr. Arndt quickly closed the door of the vestibule and scrambled back into the car through the window. When the highwayman, the motorman and conductor got outside the car the man was gone. Three men, it is said, were running away on Fillmore avenue.

The police were notified and Sergeant Dennis McCarthy of the Dayton avenue police station sent out several officers. A man giving the name of William Whipple, twenty-eight years old, and a stranger in the city, was arrested in a saloon near the Robert street bridge.

EXPERT BEEF CUTTING.

Hamline.—John Gosling is from Missouri, and if there is any one of the government parts of a beef's carcass that he has not discovered, you will have to show him. He says what he calls a "beef demonstration" at the recent annual instructive session of the university, before about 200 of the short course students and a bunch of cattle buyers from South St. Paul.

There is no man in the United States who is better posted on the subject of beefsteak than Mr. Gosling. He was the buyer of export cattle for one of the biggest packing houses in the country for several years; at present he is engaged in the demonstrating business, giving his expert opinion on the choice cuts of beef.

There were three beef "critters" used in the classroom—one of the five steers that the school showed at the recent fat stock show in Chicago; a "fair to good" steer from the farm, and a poor skinny cow-creature whose carcass was carved before the farmer-students as a specific warning against killing the wrong sort of "critter" to make beef.

THE STATE WINS.

St. Paul.—Judge Oscar Hallam of the Ramsey district court has granted the request of the state of Minnesota and issued a temporary injunction against the Great Northern railway's proposed $1,000,000 increase of capital stock. The document was filed with the clerk of court at 5 p. m.

Judge Hallam's decision is a complete victory for the state in the action brought last month by Attorney General E. T. Young and his assistant, R. A. Jones, to compel the railroad to reconsolidate the state railroad and warehouse as provided in the laws of the state commission in fixing the value of stock, requiring railroads first to make application to the commission in order to secure its approval of the issue.

All points made by the state were sustained, while the contentions of the railroad company's attorneys, W. R. Bear, F. B. Kellogg, A. B. Lawrence and R. E. Olds, were contravened.

MINNESOTA LONG JUMP.

Duluth.—More than five thousand people, one of the largest crowds that ever witnessed a ski jumping contest in this country, saw the American record of the long distance jump broken by six feet on the hill at the Duluth Ski club. Ole Fleiring of Duluth was the successful contestant. His longest jump was 112 feet, but on each of his trials he broke the former world's record of 106 feet, making it in his preliminary attempt, 111 feet on his first regular jump and 110 feet on his second regular jump.

NEWS NOTES.

Northfield.—Carleton's orators chosen by competition to take part in the Ware oratorical contest on Feb. 15 are Edward W. Cross of St. Louis Park, and John Munroe of Dell Rapids, S. D.

Mankato.—District Judge Cray has filed a decision in which he upholds the legality of the assessment of the cost of paving Broad street upon the property owners. All but two of the owners have paid. The paving litigation has been in the courts for several years both in the state and federal courts.

High water in the Ohio river caused a Baltimore & Ohio freight train on the Marietta branch to plunge through a bridge and the engineer, fireman and two brakemen were killed.

A stick of dynamite weighing one and a half pounds and set with four caps, near Piedmont (Ore.) station, was found just beside a rail on the St. Johns division of the Portland Railway company.

There was a fierce collision at Vanues, France, between the populace and 600 troops over a seminary eviction. The Marquise de Caverville incited against the eyes of a police commissary with her umbrella.

Reduction in Rates Enjoined.

St. Paul.—Judge Lochren of the United States circuit court Thursday afternoon granted a temporary restraining order on behalf of the ten railroads doing business in the state of Minnesota, restraining the state railroad and warehouse commission from putting into effect the reduction in freight rates ordered by the commission December 24. The railroads allege that the order is confiscatory in its nature.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 29.—How Knute Nelson, the "little giant" of Alexandria was today formally named United States senator for a six years' term to succeed himself, by the Minnesota legislature. The house and senate met promptly at noon in the house chamber and was called to order by Speaker Johnson. The minutes of yesterday's sessions of both houses telling of the vote in each whereby Senator Nelson was elected were read and formally approved. Speaker Johnson then announced that Senator Nelson was re-elected and adjournment was at once taken by the house chamber and was called to order by Speaker Johnson. The minutes of yesterday's sessions of both houses telling of the vote in each whereby Senator Nelson was elected were read and formally approved. Speaker Johnson then announced that Senator Nelson was re-elected and adjournment was at once taken until eleven a. m. the following day. The house at its separate session today broke all records so far made as to the number of bills introduced in one day, fifty-three were today presented. The Anti-cigarette bill made its biennial appearance fathered by O. Moses. Walker, in favor of Carlton representing the Head of the Lake delegation introduced a bill for the submission of the following constitutional amendments, each county to pay its proportionate part of the expense. Mr. Spooner introduced a bill to authorize the board of control to sell binding twine outside the state. The message follows the recommendations of both the board and the governor and is aimed to give the state more freedom in competing with twine sold by the trust. W. C. Bicknell introduced the Stephens Senate bill for establishing of state agricultural high schools in different geographical districts of the state. Elias Rachie introduced in the house and Senator Witherstein in the senate a bill calling for the establishment of a state board of immigration consisting of the governor, auditor and secretary of state, these to select two other members and the entire board to elect an executive agent who will be the only salaried member of the immigration bureau. The bill carries an appropriation of $50,000.00.

S. A. Nelson in the senate and J. A. Johnson in the house presented a memorial to congress asking for abolishment of the tariff on lumber with the exception of all foreign lumber trust. The resolution was adopted by the senate without a discussion. It forbids lumbermen in the house on notice of debate. Senator Putnam introduced a bill in the state elevator bill, prohibiting dents suffered by railway employes. The measure demands that automatic brakes be placed on all freight trains operated in the state of Minnesota by Jan. 1, 1908. Senator Fosseen is the author of another of the insurance reform bills which put in an appropriation for temporary injunction against companies under heavy penalty from making political contributions in any way whatsoever.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 24—Gov. J. A. Johnson today replied to the Gates' resolution passed in the house and senate asking for the adoption of recommendation on the subject of primary option and liquor license. Reading between the lines in the governor's parliamentary language, the message intimates that the whole Gates' resolution was up to the lawmakers as a legislative proposition and not to the governor's executive powers. He says that the question was their trouble and not his, and he accordingly declined to recommend. The governor however quoted the section of his original message on the initiative and referendum amendment in which he says he would do well to apply it to this special subject. He held that county option is not yet ripe for submission to the state; it is purely a moral one and to be settled by the representatives of the people, namely, the principals of local self-government.

"That it would be manifestly improper" the governor concluded "to indicate for me to discuss this question in detail at this time, is evident from the fact that the senate has not yet concurred and was not joined in by the senate, and that the matter is now pending in that body a bill covering this very question, and for the further reason that I would be in error, it will become my duty to officially review it." The whole drift of the governor's message is "the ball is yon, not me," and was absolutely non-committal.

In the house today W. A. Nolan stirred up a hornet's nest by moving reconsideration of the senate resolution authorizing the appropriation of expenses of lawmakers on trips to state institutions. The motion was carried by a vote of 71 to 57. Nolan and others and was lost by a vote of 40 to 60. Nolan warned the members that the proposed appropriation is considered fair to be the most expensive in the history of the state. Ambrose Tighe endorsed this sentiment. J. C. Lennon condemned the resolution in that all members had already passed that their other expenses were borne by the board of control and reception committees at the institutions.

A flood of bills made their appearance in both houses today. In the house O. R. Sundale introduced a bill to prohibit issuance of any more state, school lands unsold, unless authorized by the legislature. C. B. Miller fathered a house-file duplicate of the Fitzpatrick senate bill for the "initiative and referendum." The "big stick" for giant fire crackers is enacted in a bill by Simon Johnson prohibit their sale. Representative Vollmer introduced a bill providing that a number, not to exceed 3 per cent of men in any line of work in the state can be used in the state prisons in like labor. C. M. Bentzen requires in a bill he presented that all agricultural products except such as are sold by the farmer on ranch, shall hereafter be sold by the averdupois pound weight.

Thirty bills put in an appearance in a senate session today lasting less than an hour. Senators Canstrop and Works introduced new inheritance tax bills. The Canestorp bill calls for a 3 per cent tax on inheritances of over $50,000; the Works bill for 5 per cent on all inheritances over $100,000. Senator Works also introduced a bill requiring the state railroad bill to establish a distance tariff.

The senate today appointed the rules to pass a finance committee bill appropriating $232,000 for state institutions to make good standing appropriations which had been unknowingly repealed by the passage of the soda fees years ago.

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 29.—Both senate and house today took action to endorse Edward T. Young, attorney general, in his legal battle against the railroads, both in the matter of that official's attack on the legality of the Manitoba deal now held by the Great Northern, and that of the injunction brought against the state by the ten railroads operating within it to prevent the putting into effect of the new lower rates ordered by the state railroad commission.

In the house L. C. Spooner, chairman of the railroad committee, today introduced a bill to grant the attorney general $25,000 a year for the employment of additional counsel and for entering into such expenses as are necessary in important litigations. Spooner gave notice that he would ask next Tuesday for passage of the bill under suspension of the rules and especially that it be made a law a number of weeks before it is passed after its introduction. Spooner believes that no red tape should hamper the state in legal defense of the rights of the people at this time.

In the senate, R. B. Sundberg introduced a lengthy resolution calling for the appointment of a committee of five senators to make a special investigation of railroads, freight tonnage, etc., in Minnesota, the committee to have power to call for reports on railroad matters. The author of the resolution said that at the present time the injunction proceedings against the railroads against the state railroad commission, in part ties the hands of the commissioners from immediate further action and investigation of railroad matters; that that the state senate is free to take up the fight for the people. The resolution was adopted by a vote of twenty-nine to nineteen according to another resolution by Senator Putnam which passed, the railroad commission was directed to report on what information about railroads it has on hand and what more they desire.

The session of the senate today was marked by the introduction of nine bills affecting the affairs of life insurance companies. The bills regulate the salaries of insurance company officials and employes, the investments of investments of companies, provisions relative to agents, prohibition of non-participating policies, prohibition of discriminations, and methods for election of company directors by policyholders. The bills were introduced by Senators Cashman (two), Whitcomb (two), Coller (two), Works and Farrington (two).

Senator J. F. Calhoun of Minneapolis today introduced a bill to appropriate $10,000 for a silver service to be presented by the state to the new battleship Minnesota, the governor to name a committee of three to purchase the service and present it to the secretary of the navy.

A new county option bill, to take the place of the one now pending, was introduced in the upper house today by Senator Thorpe of Olmsted, and in the lower house by Representative Bache of Madison. The new bill is endorsed by the prohibitionists, Anti-Saloon league, and several Scandinavian temperance organizations which are interested in the issue. The new bills call for a petition of 25 per cent of the voters to have the matter voted upon. The district court receives the petition, and is authorized to order a special election on the subject instead of having the issue met at the regular town election. The bill which will meet with approval in the cities of the state was introduced in the house by John Lennon of Minneapolis, and prohibits the posting of bills and signs on billboards, fences, walls, trees, etc. Both houses adjourned today until Tuesday.

Dr. E. S. Muir, popular physician, has filed for the democratic nomination for mayor.

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1905, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

REPRESENTATIVE Holton has introduced a bill changing the time of holding primary election from September to June. This is as it should be, but it will hardly prove a cure "all" for the lack of interest now manifest in the primaries.—McIntosh Times.

Norman County Index: A. G. Barnard has written to Congressman Ralph from Washington asking for complete drainage maps of this section of the country and they have been furnished him. He will turn them over to the drainage committee and it is hoped to secure an appropriation for this part of the country at this session of congress.

There is a prospect now that Thief River Falls will either abandon the County seat removal proposition, or elect a new lot of managers as it is very evident that the Red Lake Falls boys are to smooth for the managers of the Thief River Falls end of the deal. We only judge by the events of the past few months, but it has certainly taken a hard knock in the office as a printer and has set back blunder around until he "don't" one of the forms, we should conclude he did not understand all his business and would die like it soon.

The Breckenridge Telegram says: "Secretary of War Taft has been forced from office because of an opinion he rendered concerning a certain coal land matter in the new Panama canal which he recently visited. Hardly Stevenson will be forced out on the regard of the democratic members of the Ninth Congress district desiring regardless of Republican and its criticism. He seems to the wants of his constituents in that is of more importance than his opinion of any other foundation in Panama whether he be right or wrong in that opinion.—Plummer Pioneer.

Pass us this same Telegram. We intend to defeat Halvor the first time he ran for congress, under the primaries devoted a column or two of the paper to explaining how it happened that they got eliminated so bad. Oh yes we have heard them ducks squak before.

Eight years ago we were visiting at Medford Oklahoma, and at that time Medford, which was in the center of Grant County had gotten up a petition to remove the county seat from Pond Creek to that place. They have since had an election about it and Medford went out by a large majority, and then they commenced living, and they have been living about it ever since that time, but Pond Creek keeps the the county seat just the same, as the people that are expecting to see a county seat removal in this country in a hurry are liable to find a sour distaste out there as the opposition can lean on the supreme court, with the same confidence that a sleeping child lays on the breast of a wet nurse.

Chips Love.

Welcome to the pests the puny struggler, strong in his weakness, his little arms more irresistible than the soldier's, his lips touched with persuasion which Chatham and Pericles in manhood had not. His unaffected lamentations when he lifts up his voice on high, or, more beautiful, the sobbing child, the race all liquid grief, as he tries to swallow his vexation, softer all hearts to pity and to mirthful and glamorous compassion.—Emerson.

INVALID HEROES.

Great Men Who Did Great Things in Spite of Infirmity.

A record of the magnificent courage of the world's invalid heroes is Sophia P. Shaler's book, "The Makers of Fate." One of these heroes was Green, the English historian, who could sign himself, "Faithfully (feebly, weakly, dizzily, palpably, faintly, dreamily, dully), J. R. Green." Another was Robert Louis Stevenson, who wrote, "I am about knocked out of time now; a miserable, snuffling, shivering, fever stricken, nightmare ridden, knee tottering, hoast-hosst-hossting shadow and remains of a man." "But," continues Stevenson, "the medicine bottles on my chimney and the blood on my handkerchief are accidents. They do not color my view of life." It was an octogenarian United States senator who, when asked for rules for longevity, replied, "Acquire a chronic ailment in youth, and nurse yourself through life—and work." Kant furnishes a lesson of this kind. Although the great metaphysician was never entirely well, he performed a prodigious amount of intellectual work and lived to be eighty years of age. "He obtained such control over his discomfiture," writes Mrs. Shaler, "that when suffering from a pain in his head he could concentrate his mind so perfectly on a chosen subject that the pain was treated as if it did not exist. By sheer force of will he would also overcome sleeplessness, caused by rheumatic attacks. 'That these,' he says, 'were not imaginary pains was proved by the glowing redness which was seen the next morning on the toes of my left foot.'"

That pitiful account which Johnson gives of Pope's physical condition rests upon the authority of an old servant of Lord Oxford, who knew him after middle age. "He was then so weak as to stand in perpetual need of attendance. He was extremely sensitive to cold, so that he wore a kind of fur doublet under a shirt of cotton, warm linen, with fine sleeves. When he arose he was invested in bodies made of stiff canvas, being scarcely able to hold himself erect till they were laced, and then he put on a flannel waistcoat. One side of his body was contracted. His legs were so slender that he enlarged their bulk with two pairs of stockings."

Great soldiers have borne afflictions they could neither overcome nor avoid. "Some of the world's foremost commanders—Julius Cæsar, Napoleon, the Duke of Wellington and Archduke Charles of Austria—appear to have been epileptics. At the battle of Wagram the archduke, it is said, had a seizure which lasted about an hour. It was then that Napoleon gained the ascendency. At the critical moment the fate of Europe seemingly was in the hands of two epileptics. Cambyses, the conqueror of Egypt; Alfred the Great and two of the greatest poets of England—Dryden and Byron—were subject to this disease, as was also the prophet Mohammed."

Perplexed.

The London Telegraph tells of a small girl who entered a grocer's shop in Whitechapel and said:

"Please, sir, I wants 'arf a pound of butter and a penn'orth of cheese; and mither says she will send a shilling in when farver comes home."

"All right," replied the man.

"But," continued the child, "mither wants the change, cos she 'as got to put a penny in the gas meter."

Dick Kolstrand and ye editor from this township attended the Radney dance, and expected to be good and eat supper together, but when supper time came he hooked on to one of the fair damsels of Deer Park and started for supper, without so much as saying by your leave, which left us in the position to "hustle" or eat supper alone, and we didn't eat supper alone that night.

Two Deer Park young men at the masqurade Saturday night hurridly exchanged masqurade suits in a dark room, and when one of them went back to the ball room he did not understand what made the girls laugh so when they locked at him, until a young married friend whispered to him and said, "The girls are lauhing at you because you have your masqurade pants on wrong side out."

Notwithstanding the extream cold weather and the bad roads, there was a large attendance at the masqurade ball at Radney on last Saturday evening. There was many very pretty costums, and character representations, among the ladies in particular, and althou there was no prizes given for the best masquer, had we been judge we should have given first prize to the lady that represented a western cow hearder, and to the gentleman that represented the sailor. Music was furnished by the Lillo string band and was of such good quality that dancing was kept up until . . . in the morning.

We suppose there is no use to kick on the weather, but this winter takes the cake for kussedness, of any winter of the 2? that we have put in, in northern Minnesota. As soon as it begins to be morderate weather it starts snowing and keeps on snowing until it gets so cold it can't snow any more, then it will get as cold as it has a mind to, then starts to morderate a little and repeats with another snow storm.

Rare Ben Jonson.

The epitaph, "O Rare Ben Jonson," engraved on the tablet marking the burial place of the celebrated playwright in the "poets' corner," Westminster abbey, is said to have originated with Jack Young (afterward knighted), who, "walking there when the grave was covering, gave the fellow 18 pence to cut it." Dr. Brewer in his "Phrase and Fable" says Shakespeare called Jonson "Rare Ben," but does not say where. According to Chambers' "Book of Days," the phrase formed the concluding words of the verses written and displayed in the dinroom of Bene[illegible] at the famous Mermaid tavern. The epithet "Rare Ben Jonson" is said to have been first uttered after the appearance of his highly successful farce, "Bartholomew Fair." The epitaph has been copied once at least. When Sir William Davenant was interred in Westminster abbey the inscription on his covering stone was "O Rare Sir William Davenant."

Deception by Wild Birds.

Falcons—hawks, the largest species—can compress their features and look very thin if they think it necessary to do so. As to the owls, they can hump into any position they think most suitable. It is useless to look for these self preserving traits in any of this family kept in zoological collections; for the birds are so accustomed to see large numbers of people passing and repassing or standing in front of them that they treat the whole matter with perfect indifference. They know that at a certain time their food will be brought to them and that they are otherwise perfectly safe. The raptures in a wild state have a bloom on their plumage, like the bloom on a bunch of grapes, which is not so often seen when in captivity.

A Train For Tyler.

During Mr. Tyler's incumbency of the presidential office he arranged to make an excursion in some direction and sent his son Bob to arrange for a special train. It happened that the railroad superintendent was a strong Whig. As such he had no favors to bestow on the president and informed Bob that his road did not run any special trains for the president. "What!" said Bob. "Did you not furnish a special train for the funeral of President Harrison?" "Yes," said the superintendent, "and if you'll bring your father in that condition you shall have the best train on the road."

A Canton Clock.

The famous clepsydra or watch clock of Canton is housed in a temple on the city walls. Three big earthen jars on successive shelves and a fourth and lowest one with a wooden cover constitute the whole clepsydra. The water descends by slow drops from one jar to another, the brass scale on a float in the last jar telling the hours as it rises. Every afternoon at 5 o'clock since 1321 A. D. the lowest jar has been emptied, the upper one filled and the clock thus wound up for another day.

Why the Devil Has Cloven Hoofs.

Legends of the devil are quite common in Ireland, but the one which is most interesting and least known perhaps is that which tells why the prince of the infernal regions has split hoofs like those of a cow beast. Moore alludes to the legend in his story of St. Kevin and Kathleen at Glendalough. In that story Moore makes St. Kevin throw his former ladylove over the cliff in order to be rid of her importunities, but the peasants of the Glendalough district give the story a more poetical touch. They insist that it was not Kathleen that was thrown over the cliff, but that it was Satan, who had assumed the form of the lady in order to tempt the saint. The moment the prince of evil toppled over the edge of the yawning abyss he spread his batlike wings and sailed away in safety, much to the surprise of the holy saint. Later on the devil again attempted to lay a snare for St. Kevin, but the saint managed to get the arch fiend on holy ground, where, of course, he was helpless. While the devil was in this helpless condition Kevin sawed off his legs and attached cows' hoofs to the stumps. Since that day Satan has been cloven footed and will be until the end of time.

Echoes and Architects.

"It is possible to make echoes," said an architect. "It is, indeed, easier to make than to destroy them. In the past men built their great temples and cathedrals with no thought of acoustics; hence when the preacher preached echoes rolled freely amid the groinings of the roof, down the rows of sculptured columns and round and round the nave. With wires strung here and with tapestries spread there, many of the echoes of the old world buildings have been obliterated. There are echo experts—builders acquainted with the science of acoustics whose specialty is echoes' destruction. Sometimes their tasks are hard. Today an architect takes thought of the echo. His building is constructed so as to exclude this intruder. And, knowing how to exclude it, he knows how to welcome it also. I have frequently in landscape work put up summer houses and arranged rocks so as to create an echo there."—Exchange.

Flogging.

Flogging, in public and otherwise, is not of mediaeval origin. In the middle ages ridicule and not physical suffering was the means employed for the correction of wrongdoing; hence the pillory, the stocks and the thewe—a chair suspended high over the heads of the crowd, in which women, generally scolds, were brought to a sweet reasonableness—but the whipping post belongs to the Tudor age. The Elizabethan servant question was met by flogging girls for idleness on Sunday morning. But it was in the Hanoverian period that flogging was carried to excess. As late as 1804 six women were publicly flogged in Gloucester, England, because they had been found [illegible].

The Revolver.

The revolver is of dubious service in war. Its only function there is as a cavalry weapon. Indeed, it is an evolution of the mediaeval purpose to provide horse soldiers with a firearm. In the cavalry the weapon is effective only up to fifty yards. It has no value for hunting. The average man can do more execution on birds and beasts with a slingshot. The only purpose which the revolver serves is to kill another man, and even for that purpose its usefulness is overestimated.—New York Mail.

VALENTINE DAY IN THE WOOD

Carolyn S. Bailey

On Candlemas day in the chilly gray weather
The bear and the woodchuck crept slowly together,
With long backward looks over the snow covered ground,
To see if their shadows were lurking around.

But twisting and turning each sleepy old head
No shadows they spied, "We must go back to bed"
Cried Bruin; but, "no said the woodchuck, I pray,
Let's stay and get ready for Valentine day."

So off they went bustling through meadow and farm,
To tell the surprising woods spread no alarm,
They stole two goose feathers and what do you think?
They squeezed elder berries and made them some ink!

They stripped off the bark from a friendly birch tree,
An old inch worn cut it as square as could be:
The edges they bordered with dainty ground-pine,
And wrote for each creature a gay valentine.

Not one was forgotten, not even the snail:
The hare had a line from the least cotton-tail;
The owl had a heart from the coquettish bat;
The woodchucks tail served as a pasty brush for that.

The east-wind played postman as well as he could,
And scattered the valentines far through the wood;
But when they were finished, what do you suppose!
The bear wore a blot on the end of his nose

And wears it to day; and look you will see
The woodchucks tail inky as ink can be!
For Candlemas day in the chilly gray weather,
The bear and woodchuck wrote love notes together.

GEORGIE'S VALENTINE

LITTLE GEORGIE waoted to send some one a veleotine, and when his mother suggested that he might mail ooo to his father he met the suggestion with enthusiasm. She went with him to the store where they were sold and he finelly selected one—a hideous caricature of a man with a large bald head. It so happened that Georgie's papa was bald, and for that reason the little boy thought the one selected would be very appropriete. It was accordingly placed in an envelopo and addressed in large printed letters by Georgie himself to his parent. Of course, when the father came upon it in his mail he recognized the scrawl of the writer and chuckled at his small son's deep craft. That night when he arrived home the father had forgotten about the velentine. The little boy wondered why his father did not mention it. Finally, at the tea table, he asked:

"Popa, did you get a veleotine today?"

"Yes, I did," said the father, feigning to be angry, "and I'd like to know who sent me that horrid picture of a bald-headed man! If I find out, I tell you there will be trouble!"

Georgie took his father's simulated anger in real earnest and seemed greatly disturbed by the turn affairs had taken, but did not my any more about the valentine. After the meal he followed his mother into the kitchen and whispered to her:

"Mamma," he said, craftily, "I think we better not tell him about th' valentine until his hair grows out again!"

SOME VALENTINE SUGGESTIONS

LOTTERS make pretty valentines if artistically executed. A foundation cut a piece of blotting paper three inches by twelve. Make several sheets of the same size and cover the upper one with crepe paper of a good tint. Over the crepe paper lay a heavier paper of a contrasting tone from which bas been cut n scroll design, through the openings of which the crepe paper will show. Outline the edges and scrolls with gilt and tie all together with a small bow at one end. The heavier paper may cover only one end of the blotter leaving the crepe paper plain beyond, except for the design of gilt which follows the edge.

A small memorandum tablet may be made quite dainty enough for a valentine. Take a piece of heavy cardboard and paste a small block of leaves one side of the center. Punch holes near the top on each side through which to tie ribbon for banging, and decorate the cardboard in any desired manner. A pretty head of a child or one of the many types of the American girl makes a good decoration, or if you cannot paint these a small picture, such as has been suggested for calendars, could take its place, and the scroll and outline of gilt be used for farther decoration. The tablet should have a small engagement pencil attached to one side by a length of ribbon for convenience in writing. The tablets are most convenient articles to have in one's room or anywhere about the house, there are always so many lists to be made out of things with which it is quite useless to charge the mind.

Those who neither paint nor draw may still make acceptable valentines, by substituting the needle for the brush or pen. There are many small articles which may be embroidered, and these will prove of even more permanent value.

CELEBRATE LOVES DAY

YET IS the little things that add joy and lightness to daily living. Remembering birthdays and anniversaries and sending a valentine to a friend when the annual feast of the sweethearts old saint comes round in the calendar are little acts which help along happiness and keep alive the flame of affection. The husband of 20 years who mails a modest lace paper heart to his wife on his way home the night before, and then watches her fluttering delight as she opens her mail the next morning keeps alive a tender feeling of sentiment that smooths the rough places of daily living. The wife who sends a valentine to her husband is more than repaid for the recollection of tenderness.

Of course the young folk keep the festival in mind. But there is no reason why the little god of first love should monopolize all the joys of it. The valentine sent for friendship's sake oftimes contains a deeper feeling than that sent in the enthusiasm of young fancy. Sorry 'is the day when we feel too old to send a valentine or cease to get merriment out of the occasion. Don't forget the little folks. Does anyone recall the time when the day passed and the mail brought valentines for everyone but you? What a heartache followed on that bit of carelessness. So spend this evening cutting paper hearts and writing jingles and remembering all your friends.

TWO DISTINCTIVE COSTUMES

The woman in the chair wears a charming tea gown of gray cashmere, with collar and girdle of embroidered velvet. The collar, front is edged with gray silk and lace, with wide satin ribbon extending from the shoulder, down the front of the gown, tied in square knots, which are fastened fast to the girdle.

The gown on the standing figure is of lavender velliog with a girdle of silk and the velvet ribbon is arranged to simulate a square hotero.

Sheer Linen Bodices an Edict of Fashion

The finest white lingerie and cobweb waists here been worn oil through the autumn with eny style of cloth suit or separate skirt and by a number of women this style of bodice will not be laid aside throughout the winter, but will be worn over a thin silk or iaws slip. It is a question whether or not it is economical to wear these white waists so commonly. The principle is of course, that instead of having to be cleaned, the bodice can be laundered each week, hot, then, only the finer waists are permissible, and these wear out quickly under constant washing, and if worn continually beneath a heavy cloth coet. The silk waists do not seem to soil so readily, and are little, if any, more expensive than those of so-called wash materials

Even though the waists are so generally becoming, a bodice to match the skirt cannot fel to look more trim and smart, and in the long run a cloth or chiffon cloth waist, even though elaborately made, is the most economical style of bodice. White lace at the neck and wrist keep the gown becoming, as the dark shede allows the dress to be constantly worn without becoming shabby and out of order.

A chiffon or chiffon cloth waist the color of the costume, strapped with bands of the cloth, makes the most attractive gown, harring, of course, the cloth princess dresses that are so much in vogue, but for a severe tailor suit intended only for walking or for general wear in the morning one can probably find the exact shades among the ready-to-wear waists Many of these custom-made bodices have considerable style, and with the addition of lace or embroidered linen collar and cuffs these can be made quite becoming. Certainly it is far more convenient to wear a dark silk suit every day than to have the constant bother of keeping a white bodice always neat and trim. The lace at the throat and wrists can be changed as often as necessary, and if one happens to possess a nice lace collar this will trim the waist most attractively.

If necessary there should be worn under any style of shirt waist a boned silk lining, but as a rule if one has not a "shirt-waist figure" lined and fitted waists had best be worn altogether, and it doesn't pay to have these waists ready-made, for the cut is seldom satisfactory.

For a velvet gown the waist should be of the same material, but the yoke may be deeper than is the cloth and chiffon waist while the sleeves may be composed entirely of chiffon and lace. This year, however, a large majority of the velvet and chiffon velvet gowns are made either on the empire or princess designs, and these are all finished with deep lace yokes in both front and back.

Amusing the Baby.

One of the best ways of amusing a baby is to put it on the floor and let it amuse itself. Only the simplest kinds of toys should be about, a soft ball, a rattle, a woolly dog, or the like. Complicated or elaborate toys for little children are a mistake, and an infant does not get as much pleasure as from a primitive thing.

As baby will try to put everything into its mouth painted toys should not be encouraged, and woolly or soft ones must be strong enough not to tear easily, else the bits will be swallowed.

A baby put on the floor with a half dozen little things to play with will soon learn to amuse itself in the best possible way. It will not, however, if you play with it. A baby is tremendously bright and soon learns to know who will amuse it and who will not. And it will get all that is necessary without constantly helping it on.

Mary K. Hood.

Ornament and Comfort in the Sofa Cushion

The cushions that are being used this year are especially well adapted to both ornamental purposes and to comfort, for they are large and being oblong, are easier to arrange under the head when resting or to put at the back as a pad. They are particularly artistic, too, and unlike the varieties that have been favorites for so long, for instead of being made of conventionel or floral silk designs they are fashioned of velour—any shede desired—and trimmed with tapestry panels, a form of ornamentation that has not been used heretofore.

There is much character to the pillow covers that smart women are making this season, for many of them are using panels of heraldic devices, shields and coats-of-arms in one corner. If done in tapestry these panels are decidedly effective, and they are also pretty in colors on satin, though not so original if only done in colors on satin.

The fad of making pillows plain, with the exception of an oblong panel in one corner is a favorite method just now, and some stunning effects can be had by using with a dark green velour cover; a bright-colored bit of tapestry that is worked out in a design that shows a quaint old-world castle scene or the interior of a court room where the knights and ladies in gay costumes are dancing a stately minuet. These panels, whether in tapestry or embroidered satin or silk, should be of a color that contrasts sharply with the background, so that the decorative portion will show to advantage.

As effective way to decorate these oblong cushions, though not as unique as the single panel, is to use one large piece of tapestry over the center of the pillow, leaving enough of the velour showing to give the appearance of a border, or of a very large panel.

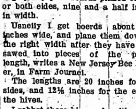
If desired, such a piece of tapestry may be divided into four panels by gimp, in either a bright or dull gilt, and if each of these has a different design showing some pretty sketch in a garden, or a pastoral scene, the cover will be ornamental and most effective

For the Afternoon.

Afternoon dress of lilac chiffon cloth, trimmed with silk of same color. Bodice made with folds of cloth, and rest of silk; sleeves and V of fine Valenciennes, cream color. Girdle cut plain with silk down front panel and forming a deep band round the bem of skirt. Waistband with long ends, vest, collar, and cuffs of deep mauve velvet. Embroidery of gold, green and mauve. Bow of mauve velvet to confine neck.

POULTRY AND BEES

THE BEES.



How the Eight-Frame Hives Can Be Made at Home.

If it is the intention to make hives of the capacity of the eight-frame dovetail frame hive, get some thoroughly dry pine boards planed on one or both edges, nine and a half inches in width.

Exactly I get boards about ten inches wide, and plane them down to the right width after they have been sawed into pieces of the proper length, writes a New Jersey Bee Keeper, in Farm Journal.

The lengths are 20 inches for the sides, and 12½ inches for the end of the hives.

I rabbet these hive ends without the use of any machinery or power except a common hand saw. Having the rabbet sawed out, the work of making a hive body is almost done.

The nailing should be started upon a perfectly flat surface.

It is best to have a kind of platform a little larger than the hive (with a cleat strongly nailed at one edge) for a bumper to nail against, and another cleat strongly nailed at one edge) for angles to the first one.

The nailing can be finished by turning the hive on its side, and the hive corners can be kept at right angles by using a square. When the hive is nailed together, then put in the tin rabbets.

You need not gouge out any head holes by which to lift the hives. It is easier to make cleats six or eight inches long, planed on their upper edges, and slanting outward and downward, with the ends whittled round so that they will shed water. One of these nailed on each end of the hive will make lifting the hive easy.

For cover and bottom board I get lumber 14 inches in width, using the best for covers and the poorest for bottom boards. Sometimes I make the bottom of two pieces.

All of the covers and bottom are planed exactly two feet long, and have cleats two inches square nelled under each end. The cleat at the back end of the bottom board is nailed about one-half inch from the end for convenience in lifting, and the cleat in the front is nailed flush with the end for the convenience of the bees. The cleats for the cover should be nailed on so as to give a play of about one eighth inch.

Lath can generally be found of the right thickness to make the three eighth inch bee space for the bottom board. If too thick it is not much work to reduce them with a plane.

I have never adopted the cheaper way of making a hive cap of the same size as the body.

Our caps are all made larger than the bodies, and telescope on them in the usual way. The hive is a little more expensive, but we have a better fit, and a much better protection against robbers, moths, cold, etc.

An open joint will do in the summer, but in other seasons, especially in spring, we want a well-closed cover.

A slight variation in the width and depth of the hives is immaterial, provided all of the frames do not come too close to the bottom of the hive. The important point is the inside length from the front to the back. This must be accurate or the frames will not fit. The two end pieces should come between the sides, and, if necessary, be placed a little in or out to secure exact length. The supers are constructed in a similar way.

The number for the hive frames should be bought in long strips, simply ripped out of some boards. This is much cheaper and is just as useful.

Provide a saw bench. It is at the end of a bench and adjust a stop-block at the proper distance, take a few strips at a time, put them in the mitre-box, then push them until they reach the stop, and saw off. Keep on repeating until you have enough frames cut.

Cut the top and bottom pieces square, and these should come between the end pieces. It is necessary to make the frames of an exact size, so that they will be uniformly alike, and can be changed from one hive to another.

Prevent Roup.

Roup should be prevented, for it is exceedingly difficult to cure. Moreover, many of the birds that are treated for roup never amount to anything afterwards, even if they are cured. To prevent roup keep the poultry house dry and segregate every bird that seems to be ailing from any cause. If a pane of glass is broken, see that it is mended at once, as otherwise it may be the means of starting roup in the flock. The farmer should be careful about introducing new blood in the flock, as this is often a means of bringing in the disease.

LINCOLN

We mark the lowly place where he was born,
We try to dream the dreams that starred his nights
When the rude path that ran beside the corn
Grew to a fair broad way which found the heights;
We try to sense the lonely days he knew,
The silences that wrapped about his soul
When there came whispers tremulous and true
Which urged him up and onward to his goal.

His was the dream-filled world of kindly trees;
And marvel-reaches of the prairie lands;
The brotherhood of fields, and birds, and bees,
Which magnifies the soul that understands;
His was the school of unremitting toil
Whose lessons leave an impress strong and deep;
His were the thoughts of one close to the soil,
The knowledge of the ones who sow and reap.

And of all this, and from all this, he rose
Full panoplied, when came his country's call,
Strong-hearted and strong-framed to bear the woes
Which fell on him the bitterest of all.
And well he wrought, and wisely well he knew
The strain and stress that should be his alone;
He did the task long set for him to do—
This man who came unfavored and unknown.

We look to-day, not through Grief's mist of tears,
Not through glamour of nearness to the great,
But down the long, long corridor of years
Where stand the sentinels of Fame and Fate,
And now we see him, whom men called uncouth,
Grown wondrous fair beneath the hand of Time,
And know the love of liberty and truth
Brings immortality; and makes sublime.

But, O, this rugged face with kindly eyes
Wherein a haunting sorrow ever stays!
Somehow it seems that through the sorrow rise
The echoed visions of his other days,
That still we may in subtle fancy trace
The light that led him with prophetic gleams—
That hero we gaze upon the pictured face
Of one who was a boy that lived his dreams!

Heard Lincoln's First Inaugural Address

Newspaper Correspondent Recalls Momentous Event Which Ushered In a New Historic Era in America—A Memorable Message.

It was a little after one o'clock when the outgoing and incoming presidents, arm in arm, entered the capitol, proceeding immediately to the president's room, whence they emerged in a few minutes preceded by the marshal of the district, judges of the supreme court, and sergeant-at-arms, and followed by the senators, diplomatic corps, heads of departments, governors of states and others, and made their way to a small wooden pavilion, under which Mr. Lincoln stood while he delivered his memorable message. Chief Justice Taney, old, shriveled to the bone, with a face like parchment, muffled in his silken robes, sat in front of the array of judges. Close by stood Douglas, so near in fact that Mr. Lincoln, finding no place on or under the small reading-table provided for him on which to deposit his hat, handed it over to his mighty rival, who held it carefully till the address was finished.

Mr. Lincoln's voice was clear and penetrating, and was distinctly heard far and near among the assembled multitudes, which preserved unbroken silence from the beginning to the end.

Lincoln spent the early morning hours in his rooms at Willard's, and I remember that among his callers were David Davis, Thurlow Weed, Leonard Swett, Ward Lamon, with many others not now clear in memory.

The procession began to move about 11 o'clock, but it was an hour and a half before Buchanan appeared, having been delayed at the capitol in signing bills, some of which, it is said, got his signature after his term of office had actually expired.

When all was ready Senators Baker and Pierce took seats in the carriage fronting the two presidents, Buchanan looking old, gray and haggard; Lincoln dark and firm, and wearing a mournful and anxious expression of countenance. Thus accompanied they set forth on their historic ride to the capitol. Around the carriage were mounted guards and a flying squadron of newspaper correspondents, the latter keeping as near to it as possible, one of the artists of an illustrated paper making a sketch of the scene as he went along. There was a desert cloud of dust along the avenue riding the blustering March winds, and it sometimes seemed to hide the entire procession from view.

After Sketches from Harper's Weekly—March, 1861.

Then a great cheer arose and ran like a wave along the avenue, carrying testimony which was likewise flying over the wires in every direction that the inauguration had been successfully accomplished, and that in spite of all perils, visionary and real, Abraham Lincoln was president of the United States, and a new historic era had been ushered in.

I stood within a few yards of President Lincoln when he delivered his first inaugural address from the east portico of the capitol in Washington, writes a veteran newspaper man. I was a newspaper correspondent and had come with him from his home in Springfield to recount for my paper the incidents of his journey. Washington looked on the day as a momentous one, and was not free from a sense of peril. No previous inauguration day had been so ushered in.

The senate sat all the night previous, not adjourning till after daylight, Crittenden, Douglas, Trumbull, Wigfall and Wade thundering against each other in their final debate, which, after all, was not loud enough to keep all their colleagues awake, as many of them lay stretched out on the senatorial sofas, snoring a drowsy accompaniment. The town was astir by sunrise, with crowds gathering at all points from the White House to the Capitol.

Lincoln and the Bible.

Mr. Lincoln, as I saw him every morning, in the carpet slippers he wore in the house and the black clothes no tailor could make really fit his gaunt bony frame, was a homely enough figure. The routine of his life was simple, too; it would have seemed a tread-mill to most of us. He was an early riser; when I came on duty, at eight in the morning, he was often already dressed and reading in the library. And the book? We have all heard of the president's fondness for Shakespeare, how he infuriated Secretary Stanton by reading Hamlet while they were waiting for returns from Gettysburg; we know, too, how he kept cabinet meetings waiting while he read them the latest of Petroleum V. Nasby's witticisms. It was the Bible which I saw him reading while most of the household still slept.—William H. Crook, in Harper's Magazine.

EFFECTIVE REMEDY

SIMPLE FORMULA WILL BREAK A COLD OVER NIGHT.

Prescribed by Well-Known Specialist in the Cure of Consumption—Can Be Prepared by Anyone.

Here is a simple and effective remedy for coughs and colds: Mix a half ounce of the Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) with two ounces of glycerine and a half pint of good whisky. Shake well and take in teaspoon doses every four hours.

This formula is said to be very effective, being the prescription of an eminent authority. It will break up a cold in 24 hours, and cure any cough that is curable.

The ingredients for this prescription can be found at any good drug store, but care should be taken that only the pure Virgin Oil of Pine should be used. This is put up only in half-ounce vials for dispensing, securely sealed in a round wooden case with engraved wrapper, having the name—Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure), prepared only by Leach Chemical Co., Cincinnati, O.—plainly printed thereon.

The cheaper oils and those sold in bulk only create nausea and have no effect whatever upon the bronchial tubes.

WHERE APPLES ARE GROWN.

North America the Great Producing Region of the World.

The area of the world devoted to apple raising in the northern hemisphere extends from Scandinavia on the north to the mountain regions of North Carolina and Tennessee on the south. In the southern hemisphere apples are raised in New Zealand and Tasmania, but little success has been obtained in Australia, Africa or South America. North America is the great apple-producing region of the world and New York leads all the other states in the quantity grown, although there are many choice varieties produced in other states, particularly Missouri, Oregon and Washington. The soil and climate conditions must combine to produce the finest fruit. The annual aggregate product of the world is estimated at 100,000,000 barrels, but not all of this is gathered, for in seasons when the production is plentiful large quantities are fed to cattle or allowed to rot on the ground, and every season millions of bushels of the less choice varieties and the poorer fruit from the best trees are turned into cider, which is used as a beverage and for making vinegar and apple brandy.

TWO SISTERS HAD ECZEMA.

Cuticura Cured Scalp Troubles of Two Illinois Girls—Another Sister Took Cuticura Pills.

"I must give much praise to all the Cuticura Remedies. I used but one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment, as that was all that was required to cure my disease. I was very much troubled with eczema of the head, and a friend of mine told me to use the Cuticura Remedies, which I did, and am glad to say that they cured my eczema entirely. Since then we have always kept the soap on hand at all times. My sister was also cured of eczema of the head by using the Cuticura Remedies. Another sister has used Cuticura Resolvent and Pills and thinks they are a splendid tonic. I cannot say exactly how long I suffered, but I think about six months. Miss Edith Hammer, R. F. D. No. 6, Morrison, Ill., Oct. 3, 1906."

Expert Ocean Mail Sorters.

One of the most interesting performances of modern times is the handling of the mails in great ocean steamships. Some of the men become so expert at sorting that they work almost automatically, many of them being able to put their finger on any particular town marked on the rack blindfolded. On an ordinary western trip they carry on an average about 250,000 letters and some 10,000 registered packets. The latter have all to be written up in detail in their books during the voyage, and this takes more time than the actual sorting. The officials do not always manage to finish the work by the time they reach port, and when such is the case they accompany what is left to the general post office and complete the job there.

Revolt Against Trading Stamps.

"No more trading stamps," is the slogan of a campaign which English grocerymen are carrying on. One of them, whose shop is in East London, says: "There is not a small grocer in England who earns 15 per cent on his capital. Ten per cent is average profit and the cost of trading stamps leaves him only about 5¼ per cent.

AWFUL ATTACKS OF PAIN.

A Most Dreadful Case of Kidney Trouble and How It Was Cured.

Thomas N. McCullough, 321 South Waber St., Colorado Springs, Colo., says: "For twelve or fifteen years I was suffering frequent attacks of pain in the back and kidneys that lasted for three weeks at a time. I would be unable to turn in bed. The urine was in a terrible condition, at times a complete stoppage occurring. I began with Doan's Kidney Pills, and soon felt better. Keeping on, I found complete freedom from kidney trouble. The cure has been permanent. I owe my good health to Doan's Kidney Pills."

PETS FOR LITTLE PARISIANS.

All Kinds of Animals as Playmates for the Children.

Children play a great role in French society, as all those who have read Gyp's inimitable "P'tit Bob" will readily admit, and now the small Parisienne insists on receiving on her fete day and at the New Year a live pet, instead of a costly doll or a mechanical toy. The demand has been creating a supply, and a lively trade is being done, not only in puppies and kittens, in tiny monkeys and in lambs, but also in tigers and leopards. Up to a certain age, these small felines are quite harmless, and, of course, as soon as they begin, so to speak, to show their teeth and sharpen their claws, they are sent off to one of the two magnificent "Zoos" with which the Gay City is provided.

Invigorate the Digestion.

To invigorate the digestion and stimulate the torpid liver and bowels there is nothing so good as that old family remedy, Brandreth Pills, which has been in use for over a century. They cleanse the blood and impart new vigor to the body. One or two every night for a week will usually be all that is required. For Constipation or Dyspepsia, one or two taken every night will afford great relief.

Brandreth's Pills are the same fine laxative tonic pill your grandparents used and being purely vegetable are adapted to every system.

Sold in every drug and medicine store, either plain or sugar-coated.

Pigeons Aid Physicians.

Carrier pigeons as aids to a physician are reported from the north of Scotland. The doctor has a scattered practice, and when on long rounds he takes several pigeons with him. If one of his patients needs medicine immediately he writes out a prescription, and by means of the bird forwards it to his surgery. Here an assistant gets the message, prepares the prescription and dispatches the medicine. If after visiting a patient the doctor thinks he will be required later in the day, he simply leaves a pigeon, with which he can be called, if necessary.

Sweep's Curious Find.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

HEALTH AND SPIRITS

Are Restored by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in Cases of Debility and Despondency.

General debility is caused by mental or physical overwork with imperfect assimilation of nourishment, or by some acute disease from which the vital forces have been prostrated and the entire organism weakened so as not to easily rally. To restore health it is necessary that the blood should be purified and made new.

The case of Mrs. E. M. Spears, of 92 Mt. Pleasant street, Athol, Mass., is a common one and is given here in order that others may be benefited by her experience. She says: "I had been sick for a year from indigestion and general debility brought on by overwork and worry. I had tried many remedies, but found no relief. I suffered from swelling of the limbs, loss of appetite and dizzy spells, which became so severe towards night, that I sometimes fainted away. I was bilious and my hands and arms would go to sleep for an hour or two at a time. I was so sleepy all the time that I could hardly keep awake. I had frequent cramps in my limbs and severe pains at the base of my head and in my back. My blood was impoverished. I was afraid to give up and go to bed fearing that I would never get well.

"About this time Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were recommended to me by a friend in South Vernon, Vt. I felt better soon after beginning the treatment and continued until I was entirely cured. I consider Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a grand medicine for weak women."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price 50 cents per box, six boxes $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

DON'T act in the matter of selecting house paints until you are satisfied that you know the paints possessing those indispensable qualities of preservation and durability which make the ideal house paints. ON SECRET SERVICE

True Stories of Experiences in the State, War, Treasury and Postoffice Departments.

By COL. JASPER EWING BRADY

(Late Censor of Telegraphs and Chief Signal Officer, U. S. A., Santiago de Cuba.)

"WANTED: A NAME"

The importunities for Cheney to do special work for large firme and private individuals became very insistent, and finally ho decided to relinquish his government position and start out for himself. Fully did he realize that the smallest emolument of government work was pay. He wea not penurious—far from it; yet he knew that n timo waa coming when he would not be ablo to work aseidnously all tho time, and ho must needs lay by a penny for ths rainy day, inovitablo alweys, whether from old nge, sickness or adversity.

Therefore, ho resigned his poeition in tho secret service and etarted the "Cheney Detectivo Servico compnny," with hadquertors in Chicago, and in due time he had branch officea in ail the lergo citiee from one end of ths country to tho other. Hs sven had correspondente in ths principal capitals of Europe, and mnny a case took him and his operatives far beyond the confines of tho United States. With Cheney camo Ed Lonsrgan, Sid Guthrie and several others who had worked with and under him during hie governmental sorvice. Other hrilliant men wero attracted to tho work and it was not long before Col. Jnck Cheney had tho very cream of detective work in hie hends. At this time he was 35 yesre old, and in every way nature favored him. Though he hsd left the servico of ths United Statee, he was still called upon to coneult or work out many difficult cascs for the state, war, navy and post office departments. Money camo to him plentifully. It was judiclouely invested and Cheney achieved independence in a very few years. Succeee did not swell his head in nny degree. He wss always the eame quiot, forceful, virile, taciturn man. Whetever ho did, or was done by his oporatives, waa done well. Ho insisted on the most exncting rules of conduct from his men, nnd at tho samo time slwsye eet the proper example. Ho practiced whet he preached. Ho wna tbo general who said: "Como on, boya," rather then "Go in there." Tbero were, of course, some failurea, but his messure of success was uniformly great. Choney often said: "Ths detective who never felled wes found only in etory books." Infallibility was not claimed as a virtue. Of courso his work of directing the silent but sure workings of his groat bureau precluded hie giving much porsonnl attention to any particular case. Whsn hs did nnd brought the work to n succesaful conclusion his fee wss nlwsya commensurate with his client'a financial ability to pay. Many n poor dsvil had come to Col. Cheney and ho hed assisted him by his brains, intellect and money, too; and when tho reckoning day csme his bill had been paid by a fervent "Thank you" or "God bless you" for what he hsd done. On the other hand, more than one client of mesns hsd fairly gasped when Chsney's bill had heen rendered. Hs helieved that "Unto him that hsth shall be given," and he psrsphrased tho eentence to read "him that hath shall givs."

Whilo he msintained his main headquarters in Chicago, and had beautifully furnished offices, hs was equally woll known in New York, St. Louis, 'Frisco and othsr pointa. Every one of Chenoy's operatives waa aupposed to bo always on ths alsrt, and ths colonol had a habit of dropping in on his eubordinatsa at ths most unsxpected times. Ths business grew rapidly and Guthrls and Lonergan wers given chargo of sntire diatricta over which they presided. But the ons masterful directing mind was that of Col. John V. Cheney. Hs waa as patriotic as ever, a momber of ths Loyal Legion, Grand Army of the Republic and a Mason of high degree.

Thus we find him ons morning in tho '80'a, sitting in his private office dictating to his secretary, and this secretnry, by the wsy, was the same Miss Wood who had served him earlier in a similar capacity in St. Lonie. Joff, hie faithful colored attendant, camo in and presented the colonel with an engraved card reading: "Charles B. Fsrwell, Duluth, Minnesota."

"Who is be, Jeff?" Col. Cheney had great faith in Jeff as a character reader, and alwnys had him find out what ho could abont each client before ho got into tho inner sanctuary of the privato office.

"Young man, sab," replied Jeff, "'bout 30, good lookin', well dressed, appearance of havin' money, sah. 'Spect it's woman trouble, kunnel."

"Why 'woman trouble,' Jeff?" smilingly asked Cheney.

"Well, you see, sah, he's mighty uneasy an' powerful anxions to see you. Wouldn't see any one else. Then he's got hrack eyes an' alwaya rolls 'em from side ter side. Ah've noticed men wif hrack eyes that rolls 'em from side to side is mos' gen'ly in truble over women. Dat's all, kunnel."

Jeff was greatly impressed with his ability as a sleuth. His one absorbing passion was his admiration for Col. Cheney, and if "the kunnel" had told Jeff that Christopher Columbus was an African he would have believed it, and woe betide anyone who tried to shake that belief.

"Well, you just hnve Mr. Farwell weit in the outer office for a few minutes nnd I'll ring when I want you to bring him in."

"Yee, seh," ssid the deferential Jeff, retiring.

Col. Cheney finished hie mail, dismissed Miee Wood end then, etepping over to one eide of the room, preesed nn uneeen epring, end a small panel noiseleeely opened. By a clever arrangement of mirrors the entire outside weiting room could be eeen. Chenoy called it his "tell-tale," and alweye used it when e etranger wantsd to see him. Jeff'e enalyeis of Mr. Farwell wae quite eccurate. He was good looking, hie eyee were black and he hsd the appearance of money. Like a caged lion Mr. Farwell paced up and down the room, hia syea glancing uneaeily from side to side, and every once in awhile he looked nt his watch.

"It's 'woman' all right," eaid Cheney to himeslf, "and if I don't get him in here pretty quick I'll have e crazy man on my hande." The eecret panel was closed snd Col. Cheney touched e button on hia deak. A moment later ths door was opened and Jeff ennounced: "Mr. Farwell," end the visitor entered.

"Col. Cheney, I believe?"

"Yes, sir," sald Cheney, extending his hsnd. "Won't you sit down?"

"Thank you," eaid Farwell, vigorously aheking the proferred hand and nervously sinking into a convenient chnir.

"Col. Cheney," he continued, "I am in serioue trouhle, very eerious, end I want your help." He pnused for a moment and Chensy merely said "yes." He always allowed his client to do the talking, that in until something tangible was shown. Farwell hummed end hawed and seemed at loss for words with which to express himself. Cheney snw he wanted a quieting influence.

"Now, Mr. Fsrwell, just pull yoursеlf together. You're nervoue and overwrought, but if you went my help you muet give me all the fects in the case. Come, now, what is it? What help do you want?"

This seemed to have the desired effect and Farwell looked Cheney equare in the eyes and sald:

"Col. Cheney, I want you to find me a nsme. I have everything else in this world, money, poeition, friends, the love of a good woman, but I haven't a name."

"You—haven't—a—name!" gasped Cheney, for a minute dumfounded. "What is thie one?" he said, reading "Charles B. Farwell" neatly engraved on tho card.

"That's the one I've hnd so far in life, but it'e not mine. That's just it, I don't know what mine ie. I don't know that I am entitled to one. I want you to find out for me. Wait, please, until I have finished. I am in businsss in Duluth, and am comfortably fixed so far as thie world's goods go, but my birth ie clonded in mystery. An near as I can maks out I am about 29 years old. In my childhood days I was known as 'Baskst Charley,' because I was found on a doorstep of a man'n house near Exmoor, Ontario, in a hasket. His name waa Farwell and he gave me the name Charley and bronght me up. Ths 'B.' in my name I put in for form's sake. The old man Farwell was poor and had hard work providing for his own family and me, bnt he was generous to a fault and did ths best he oonld. When I was about ten years old hs died and since then I've ehifted for myaelf. Pinned to my clothing when I was found was thia note." Here Farwell stopped and handed Cheney a alip of paper. It was old and yellow, but the words thsreon written in a delicate feminine hand read as followa:

"Mr. Farwell: This baby boy comes of respectable perenta who are too poor to bring him up. We are leaving for the weet to try and make our fortunes. When we do we shall eend ıor him. Here is two dollars and a half and n similnr emount will be sent every week. Be good to him and God'e choicest blessinge rest on your head." Signed "A henrt-broken mother." Cheney rend it carefully, laid it on hie desk nnd said: "Well, go on pleeee, Mr. Farwell."

Mr. Farwell moistened hia lips from a glasn of water near by and continued: "After Mr. Farwell found me but one more remittence was received. Some three weeks after came an envelope poatmarked 'Detroit' and directed in the same handwriting. In it was the promised amount, $2.50. After that there was nothing but silence. Subsequent to Mr. Farwell'a death I did various joba on farms around Exmoor. I lived like a beggar, but getting at odd times what schooling I could. The boys and girla of my age knew my history and derisively called me 'Basket Charley.' It became unbearable and I atruck out for myself. The only link I had between myself and my birth was that nota on your table." Again Farwell paused. Cheney was all attention.

"I first went to Detroit, sold papers, blacked boots, worked in hotels, anything to make a living, and a short time later I landed in Chicago. I worked in a real estate office, then the post office and finally became a railway mail servico man. I studied during my spare moments and thus ecquired a fair education. I saved my monsy, invested it carefully, and gradually it grew until I had a competence. Then I moved to Duluth, engaged in real estate operations, was more than fortunate, and to-day I am worth the greater pnrt of three quarters of a million dollars. I am e member of eeveral clnbe end societies and am well thought of generally." All this time was told with e eincerity and earnestness which forbede any idea of vanity. Col. Cheney waited for the crux of the story. He knew it was yet to come. Ferwell again continued:

All these years I hnve had e deeire to know who and whet I em; who and where my perents are, end their reaeons for deeerting me and leaving me to the tender mercies of etrangers. But now that desire hae become the peramount object of my entire life. I heve placed my bueinee effairs in euch ehape thet, if neceeeary, I can devote all my time nnd income to the solution of this problem." Still the climax hed not come; Farwell wae holding something back. Cheney looked at him keenly, end eaid:

"Mr. Farwell, why is this desire so peramount now; whet ie the real reaeon?"

Farwell hesitated, coughed alightly, colored up end fidgeted in his chair. "Well—you eee, colonel, I—er—damn it, colonel, I want to get married." This declarstion eeemed to relieve him greatly. "Some time ago I met Miee Blanche Davie, daughter of e very prominent man of Duluth. I love her; ehe lovee me; we are engaged. But this frightful myetery of my birth so hnunts me I cannot allow her to link herself to me until that is cleared up. The postmaster here in Chicago is e warm friend of mine. I heve eucesefully invested money for him, and I came here to sse him. Last night I told him my story, and he urged me to see you, end said if you would personally take the case, he thought the solution could be mnde. That'a the reason of my visit, end you won't refuee it, will you, colonel?" There was a world of wietfulnees, of pleading, of entreety in ths young man's voice.

"My God!" he went on. "Think what it meene to me, and to Blanche." As he repeated the womsn'e name hie voice sank to e tender whisper.

"Does the young lsdy know, Mr. Farwell?"

"Yes, she knows, end—God bless her—seye ehe will mnrry me, name or no nsme. But her father is ee proud ee Lucifer, end I haven't told him yet, nor do I want to, unless you find I em—namelese. Thet would be the end, I em afraid. I love Mise Davis, too honeetly even to allow the finger of scorn to be pointed et her because eome carping woman found ont hsr husband was nameless."

"I know that's e way the dear women have eometimee," drawled Cheney.

"But will you take the case, colonel? Monsy is no object at all; I'll give you hnlf my fortune. Yee, I'll give yon all of it and begin over again if yon will only find me a name. I want e name!"

Cheney studied for a moment, mentally going over hie calendar and engagsments. Just now things were in pretty good shaps. Sid Gnthrie could come in end look after the details of the office.

"Very well, Mr. Farwell, I'll take the case. Yon must not expect results immediately. I have very little to go on, but I hope in the end to present you with a name, as you deeire. You will return to Duluth and pursue the even tenor of your way. Attend etrictly to yonr busineae, and do not be alarmed if you do not hear from me every day. I'll oommunicate whenever I find out anything of importance."

Farwell's eyes glistened as Col. Cheney epoke. He aprang to his feet, grasped the colonel'e hand and shook it heartily.

"Thank you, Colonel, thenk you. I feel better nlready. I know you'll succeed."

"Well, I'll try, Mr. Farwell; I'll do my best. We don't always succeed, you know. Good morning."

"Miss Wood," said Cheney, when that yonng lady rsported in response to his ring, "eend a telegram to Guthrie to report to me here to-morrow morning. He'a in St. Louls to-day, and ought to reach Chicago in plenty of time."

Thet day Cheney arranged all hia effairs so he could leave. He made it a rule never to tell eny one ebont hie personal work, where he was going, or what he was going to do. Guthrie, of course, would know where mail or telegrams would reach him, bnt that was nll. Col. Cheney also went over every detail of Farwell'n etory. He never made notes, save mental ones, or carried any writing. The memory of his experience in the "paymaster case" was nufficient to cause him to leave all intelligible writing out of the question. His only clew was to go to Exmoor and try to pick up a trail from there.

Gnthrie reported the next morning, and briefly Cheney told him to keep things going and report anything important to him at the Russell house, Detroit. A suit case was all the baggage he carried, and at 11 that night he was in Detroit. The next day he took a train to London, Ont., and from there another train carried him np a hranch road to Exmoor. It was a straggling little Canadian village in the midst of a rather rich farming country, and did not look very prepossessing. Cheney quietly set to work, and before night located Mrs. Farwell, wife of the man that had raised "Basket Charley." She was quite old and feeble, but kindly smiled when Cheney mentioned "Basket Charley." "Oh, yes, I remember him," ehe said, in a qnerulous voice. "He was e bright little fellow, and we all liked him. We had hard pickin' to get along, but pa," her voice wne remulscently eweet es she pronounced the affectionate name hy which her husband was known, "Pa had e big family to support, and did the best he could.

"I've been comfortable since Charley grew up, thongh, because he takes care of me eince he's been able to."

Farwell hed not mentioned thie fact to Cheney, end it increaeed hie reepeot for the young man.

"Mrs. Ferwell," he replied, "did you or your husband ever heve any idea as to who were the parenta of 'Basket Cherley?'"

"No, eir, I can't say that we had. There wee e note pinned to his clothing—"

"Yee, I know thet," interrupted Cheney. "I have it here."

"There wae e femily living neer at the time, Reyburn by name. There were two girls, one of them, Meggie, disspeesed e year before 'Charley' was left with us. Sometimea I've thought meyhe they knew something abont the case. Once I asked the other sister, Jane, where Maggie wae, end ehe froze up end said ehe didn't know. That wee ell. Jane Reyburn ie married and livee in Chatham now."

"What is her name?" aeked Cheney, intereeted.

"Rogers, I believe. Her huebend ie a lawyer chap."

It was only e elight clew, but it was worth following up, so Cheney bade Mrs. Farwell good-by and left. First he inveetigated as far as poesible the Reyburn family. There had been the fnther and two deughtere, end they had lived on e small farm neer Exmoor. When they first came there everything was pleasant, but they kept pretty mnch to themselvee. One hoy ebout 14 years of ege did chores about the place and helped Mr. Reyburn. This boy'e name was Roy Belcher. Of the two girle Maggie was the beet looking. As one old settier put it: "She was quite comely, and ected as if ehe wee hetter than other girla. She received letters from afer" (evsryone in the emall community knew every one'e business, especlally the gerrulous postmaster) "end every once in ewhile she went to Detroit to visit friends." Thie old settier wae prolific of information.

"Did you ever hear of 'Basket Charley?'" eeked Cheney.

"Whet, Farwell's foundling? Oh, yes, I remember him well."

"Ever heve eny idee how he became Farwell'e fonndling?"

"No; but I've euspicioned severel timee that the Reyburne knew eomething about it. You eee, a yeer before Cherley wae found Mnggie Reyburn left home for good. Old man Reyburn failed end died. Jane tried to run the place, bnt didn't succeed. She wasn't very sociable, and no one ever went there. She end the boy were all there were ebout the place. They left one night, just the day before Cherley wes found; the place was sold and now Jane lives in Chetham. Maggie, I reckon, is dead."

"Yes, but this boy—Belcher, I believe his name is—where did he come from, and what became of him?"

"God knows stranger. I've heard he was an illegitimate child, came from Montreal. Lately I've heard he was e Seventh Day Adventist preacher in Illinois. Palvo, I think, is the place."

The story of the Reyburns interested Cheney; the two girle, one comely, her receiving letters, visiting Detroit at times, then disappeering e year before "Basket Cherley" was fonnd; then the breaking up of the Reyburn family, all pointed circumstantially strong to thsir knowing something about the boy. Cheney went to Montreal, found ont that Belcher really was an illegitimete child, as the "old settier" had said. En route back, he stopped at Chetham and interviewed Mrs. Rogers; bnt as soon as he eaid "Basket Cherley" ehe cloeed up like e clnm and terminated the interview. The trail was warm. Belcher, the boy, ought to know something. He would look him np. Cheney edvieed Farwell that progress was being made, and that he would report more fully later.

A day or so efter this Cheney was nt Palvo, Ill. Belcher was there, and, among hia sect, was e reepectable member of society. He was merried and had quite a family. It was Friday when Cheney reached Palvo, and thet day and Saturday he apent quietly investigating Belcher. He saw him on the street and in the poet office, e tall, apare-limbed man, with raven black hair and eyes, lerge handa and feet, a thin-lipped, etraight month, and amooth face. It was almoet a crnel fnce. Cheney went to chnrch end heard him ewey hia nmall congregetion by hia rongh eloqnence. After church Cheney went to Rev. Belcher'e house. The preacher received him with severe cordiality, thinking perhaps, thnt he was a new convert to hia beliefs. Cheney let him think so, even saying he had admired hia sermon. In dealing with men, Cheney was very direct.

"Mr. Belcher," he said, "I've just returned from a trip through Canada, and met some friends of yonrs."

"Indeed," replied Belcher, wondering what all this meant.

"Yes. I was at Exmoor investigating the birth and parentage of a boy formerly known as 'Basket Cherley.' I became possessed of the idea that perhaps yon might know something of him." Cheney was watching him closely. At the mention of "Basket Charley," Rev. Belcher sat bolt upright in his chair, his lips compressed and eyes dilated.

"You say you were in Montreal; what—er—whom did you investigate there?" he gasped.

"Oh," eaid Cheney, smiling, "I investigated the birth of one Roy Belcher."

"And you found out ell ebout him?"

"Yes, and thet'a why I'm here. You know the etory of 'Basket Charley.' Whet is it?"

"No," gaeped the preecher, "I don't. I've just heard of him, that's ell."

The man'e menner convinced Cheney he wee lying. He did know; he must be made to tell.

"Would your flock care to know ebout your birth?"

"No," thundered Belcher. "No, I don't went thet, not now."

"Then tell me whet you know of 'Basket Cherley,'" said Cheney. "Yon do know eomething, don't you?"

"Yes, I know, end if you'll promiee not to reveal my identity I'll tell."

"You heve my eacred promiee," replied Cheney. "Candidly, Mr. Belcher, all I want to do is to establish the birth of Mr. Farwell. It ie simply an nct of justice, and you ee e men of God ehould not heeitate to do that. You preach justice end mercy to your congregation every Sunday. Exemplify those teechings now by cleering thie myetery. Practice what you preach."

"All right, eir, I will. I don't know you, but you look like e men of your word." Mr. Belcher eettled himself beck end cloeed hie eyes ae if thinking, end continued:

"I need not speak of my origin, you know thet. When I was 14 I went to Exmoor and epprenticed with old man Reyburn. The two girls wore totally unlike. Jane wae eustere end elmoet puritanical in her ideas. Maggie was the opposite end thought life was nenght but pleaeure. Poor girl, it was her undoing. She vieited Detroit once and while there met e man nemed James Eastman. He wes of the world and she of the country. He wrote her frequently end she wae very much in love with him. Mr. Reyburn end Jane did not approve and eeid so, but Maggie wae eet in her weye, couldn't have been moved in any menner. During one visit to Detroit e marriage took place. Oh, it wee a legel merriage, ell right."

"Thank God for thet!" murmured Cheney under hie breath.

"Yes," continued Mr. Belcher, "there'e no douht of the merrisge. I've eeen the certificate. But efter the marriage Eastman soon tired of his country wife. It was the old, old story of neglect end ebuse, and finally desertion. After he left her Maggie tried to get work but couldn't work very hard. Things went ell wrong at the farm; Mr. Reyburn died; Jene couldn't run it, neither could I, and it wes eold. It didn't bring much money because e mortgege hed to he paid off. The night we were to leave Meggie came home end brought with her e baby scercely three weeks old. Jene wes inceneed, and etormed furioueiy, upbraiding Maggie for her acts. She finally refneed to have enything to do with the child. Oh, it was ewful, that ecene!" Mr. Belcher ehuddered at the memory end resumed.

"Maggie waa very ill and the actions of her sister made her worse. She was desperete, indeed. I wesn't muoh myssif, but I wan sorry for her. She came out to the barn where I was end made me promise before God thet I would try and place her child with eome good family. Then she would get well and go to work eome place. Her spare earnings would go to the child and later ehe would come end claim him. I promissd and then we cast our minds about for the proper persone with whom to leeve the beby." Cheney wae intensely interested. Belcher's manner was very eerneet end truth was stamped on every word he uttered.

"Old man Farwell was one of thoee dear fine men liked by everybody. He was poor as e chnrch mouee hut elways willing to shere his crust with one more unfortunete. He would look efter the boy. Meggie wrepped the beby up in some warm clothing, wrote a note—my God, you have it there!" interjected the minieter noticing the old faded letter Cheney held towarde him. "Yes, thet's it. She pinned it to the beby'e outer garment, ineerted two dollars and a half, end that night I left the baby on Mr. Farwell'e dooretep. She went withont seeing her sieter again; left thet night. Two weeks later ahe died. That'a all, sir, every word I know."

"Yes," eeid Cheney, "hut the man, where ie he? Wae he never heard of afterwarde?"

"Heard of? Demn him—damn him!" eaid Belcher, justifiahly forgetting he wea e preacher. "Yes, he was heard from. Meggie hadn't been dead n week before he ceme to Detroit and acted ee if nothing hed happened. Leter he went weet, I believe, married egain end ie now e respected member of society."

"Where in the weet; do you know?" asked Cheney.

"Cellfornia. Why, he'a rich, and hie wife Maggie liee in en unknown grave and his boy is e namelese man."

"Why in God's name didn't you speak out if you knew all this?" thundered Cheney.

"Because I was weak—weak. Jene Reyburn was very bitter. She made me promise never to say a word to a living soul, and I promised. You have wrung it from me, but I em glad. My conscience is easier than it has been in many a day." That was all.

The next day Cheney was beck in Chicago, and 24 hours later Farwell came in response to a telegram from Cheney.

"You have succeeded?" he sald efter Cheney's greeting.

"Yes."

"And have I the right to hold my head np among decent people? Have I a name, or—am I a—"

"You have the right, Mr. Farwell, all the right the law and God can give yon," and Cheney told him the pitiful story.

Farwell eet with bowed heed, end the tears elowly trickled through hie fingere. "Poor mother, poor littlo mother," he eeid. "And thet hrute, thet brute—God! whet puniehment he'll get eome dey." Suddenly he looked up and said: "Col. Cheney, we're not through yet. I went to eee my—no, I can't cell him by that secred name—I went to see Eastmen; can you locate him?"

"I've elready done so. Yesterday I wired my Californie officee and this morning the enswer is here seying he livee on a ranch not far from Loe Angeles. You heve a cleim on him, Mr. Ferwell—if you went to exercise it."

"Cleim on him, bah! My dollars ere all clean and honeetly earned. I wouldn't conteminete them with e cent of hia money; hut I want to see him, I want to tell him whet I think of him. I'm going out there end I want you to go elong. To-dey we can start."

"Steady, Mr. Farwell, steady. We won't heve to go out there. My mesesge eeys Mr. Eaetman is in Chicago now. He'e here on businees. Thirty minutee ego I located him in the Blenk hotel."

"Come on then," shouted Ferwell, beeide himself. "Come on right now."

Again Cheney cautioned the excited man. "Steady, Mr. Farwell. I'll go with you ell right enough, but before we leeve I went thet gun in your pocket. Hend it over." Farwell did eo and Cheney continned: "I'm not going to heve you commit a crime. There ie no lew cen reach the man. The Almighty will deal with him, end besidee, he'e your father, end—you want Miss Devis, do you not?"

"Blanche! Yes, you're right, colonel. I'll do ae you sey."

Arriving at the hotel they were fortunete to find Mr. Esetmen in hie room. Cheney'e card elone wee taken up. "Mr. Eaetmen will see you in hie room," eaid the bell boy.

Cheney end Farwell walked in the room, end there etood Eeetmsn. Large, rotund, well groomed, two eyes glencing from out of puffy lide, e seneual mouth end e leering emile.

"Well, Col. Cheney," he eaid, glencing from the card to the two men, "to whet am I indebted for the honor of this visit?"

Cheney bowed nnd emiled showing hie even white teeth. "I merely celled to introduce you to your eon, Mr. Eastmen."

"My eon!" seid Eaetmen, felling back, his eyes elmoet etarting from their eockets. "My eon! Men, I heven't eny son."

"Oh, yee you heve, Mr. Eeetmnn. Maggie Reyburn's child. You remember her, don't you?" drawled Cheney.

"Msggie Reyburn's eon? Why, ehe'e dead, yeere ego."

"Yes, I know that, end eo do you. Your abuse, neglect and deeertion killed her, but ehe left n boy; you know thet too. She was your wife. Here's a record of the merriage. You cen't deny thet, can you?" Eestmen couldn't, he didn't ettempt it, but sank, a quivering mase of flesh, in a cheir and hid his fece. Farwell etrode forwerd end by one eweep of his hand raised the men'e head. Contempt was written in Ferwell's very move. He looked at Eastman end then for five minutee poured forth a torrent of invective which seemed to wither the elder men'e very soul. "Let him go, Ferwell," eeid Cheney, laying his hend on the young man'e erm. "Let him go."

"Yes, I'm going to, colonel. I'm going to let him go end rot in hie own debasement end conceit. As you said the Almighty will deal with him end his eoul will euffer the tortures of hell. I wented e name, but I don't went his. I'll keep the one I have; the man who had it wae poor but, thenk God, he wes honeet," and like e cyclone Ferwell flung himeelf out the door.

Cheney ettended hie wedding later, but the lew had given him the right to call himself "Charles B. Ferwell."

"Place."

"Place," ae used in onr etreet nomencletnre, ie the word thst Dr. Murray is et present engeged in tracking down for the pnrpoees of hie monnmental dictionary, eaye the London Chronicle. He wants the earliest referencee to Ely plece, Portlnnd plece, Langham place, etc. The word, ns we now have it in London, haa lost to some extent its originel meaning. At first it evidently corresponded to the Spanieh "plaza" and Italian "piazza"—a equare, public reeort or marketplace. Dr. Murrey thinks that after its introduction here "it rapidly degenerated into a denominetive for any area, group or row of houses not a street." The bookmekers might heve some information to give!

House Springs Neat Little Coup by Raising Salaries of Members Without Going on Record—Mr. Roosevelt Cuts Loose When He Attends Parties—Other Washington Gossip.

WASHINGTON.—Though refusing to go on record by a yea and nay vote members of the house of representatives the other day by 133 yeas to 92 nays increased their salaries, so far as they are able, from $5,000 to $7,500 a year. They also gave the senators an opportunity to do as much for themselves, for they included them as beneficiaries.

The salary increase went through the house so easily that every one wondered why the raise had not been made before. It was put up to Representative Littauer to do the trick. Littauer, of his own volition, will retire from congress next March, and, accordingly, he won't be affected one way or the other. Besides he is a multi-millionaire, and $2,500 a year isn't anything to him. So it was put up to Littauer, and the manner in which he got through the increase won for him the undying admiration of the 385 other members of the house, to say nothing of the delegates and resident commissioner from Porto Rico.

Representative Littauer had everything fixed when he called up the legislative appropriation bill, which had come back from the senate with amendments. He asked that all the amendments he disagreed with and the bill sent to conference, with the exception of the amendment to increase the salaries of the vice president, the speaker of the house, and cabinet officers to $12,000 a year. To this he asked there be added an amendment increasing the salaries of senators and representatives and the delegates and resident commissioner from Porto Rico from $5,000 to $7,500 a year, and the salaries of cabinet officers from $8,000 to $12,000 a year.

After some discussion the question was put on a rising vote and carried, 133 to 92. Instantly came a demand for a record vote from the grand stand performers who want their salaries increased but don't want any one to think they do. The speaker put the demand, and when 50 or more arose the speaker could count only 31, "not a sufficient number." No one thought (out loud) to demand "the other side."

The increase will become effective March 4 next. All the senators whose terms will begin then and all the representatives elected for the Sixtieth congress will get the benefit of it.

PRESIDENT HAS A GOOD TIME AT RECEPTION.

When President Roosevelt goes to a reception outside of the White House he has a good time. He must be bored to the limit by being forced to stand at his own receptions, while the people file by him each individual's name being bawled out by a leather-lunged army officer aid who stands at the president's left. The whole performance is stilted and unnatural, but it must be gone through with every so often.

Vice President Fairbanks gave a reception the other night and suddenly without any "Star Spangled Banner" from the band or any minuet aids, the president appeared. He shook hands with Mr. Fairbanks and with his daughter, Mrs. Timmons, and with Miss Cannon, who were at Mr. Fairbanks' left, and then his fatherly dug into the big crowd of people, hailing everybody whom he knew—that is the men—after the manner of a boy enjoying a holiday. He joked with Democratic senators and representatives and received thrusts and gave thrusts, sharp but jovially good natured.

The president's visit to the Fairbanks' was not a perfunctory one, by any means. He had such a good time wandering about where he chose and talking at length to whom he listed, that he stayed until it was just about time to put out the lights. Then he went downstairs, stood in line with a check for his hat and coat in his hand, refused to take precedence of any of the waiters in line, and then he disappeared into the darkness without.

SOCIETY GIRLS ARE GOOD EQUESTRIENNES.

There are 300,000 people in Washington, and nearly half of them ride horseback. The capital is a horse center, and here one sees every known quality of horsemanship and horse womenship. On the roads leading out of the city given over to the riders it is possible to see the Cossack seat, the Arab seat, the continental seat, the English seat and the American army and the American plantation seats, though the two latter are practically one and the same thing—the easiest and the most graceful riding seat in the whole wide world.

The women ride constantly in Washington. It is a good thing for the Washington-born girl whose parents are in civil life that there always is a large contingent of Uncle Sam's army officers stationed in the capital. If this were not true she would ride as do the foreign women, in a manner to their own discomfort and to the discomfort of their mounts, to say nothing of the loss of grace in the saddle.

Miss Helen Hatfield, daughter of Col. Charles A. P. Hatfield, Thirteenth United States cavalry, now stationed at Fort Myer, just across the Potomac from Washington, is one of the best women riders in the United States. She is a debutante of this winter, and is an extremely popular and also strikingly good-looking girl. It has been said of her that she is the best trooper in her father's regiment. She has the seat of a regular, and the horse doesn't live of which she is afraid. The other Washington girls strive to ride like Miss Hatfield.

FINE EXAMPLE OF ORIENTAL ART OF JOLLYING.

The sultan of Morocco may be the head of a backward nation and the source of anxiety to the world's powers, but he is an expert at fine writing and the donation of literary bouquets. This is proved by a personal letter recently received by President Roosevelt from the sultan. It was forwarded in a red plush and beautifully decorated case by Minister Gummere at Tangier, who has recently returned from a caravan journey to Fez. The letter itself is in Arabic and the translation is as follows:

"Written in our Holy Court at Fez, 7th, Shoual, 1324. (November 24, 1906.)

"In the name of God the Clement, the merciful. There is neither power nor might but in God the exalted, the Almighty.

"To the beloved, the most cherished, the exalted, the most gracious friend, most honored and excellent president of the United States of America, who is the pillar of its great influence and the director of its most important affairs, the most celebrated preserver of the ties of true friendship, to the faithful friend, Theodore Roosevelt.

"After offering praise to God, the Almighty and powerful, the King of Kings, the helpful Lord, we have received your kind letter expressing your good will and the purest love which dwells in the secret recesses of the heart and appointing the Wise Samuel R. Gummere as Minister Plenipotentiary.

"As you request we receive the Minister with great satisfaction and welcome, and accordingly bestow upon him our complete confidence in everything he may present to us on behalf of Your High Excellency and on behalf of your nation, at the same time highly appreciating your prayers on our behalf.

TACTLESS BRITISH OFFICIAL

Sir James Alexander Swettenham, K. C., M. G., captain general and governor-in-chief of Jamaica, who became famous in a day through his order to Admiral Davis requesting him to withdraw his forces and warships from Kingston, is 61 years old. He is a son of J. C. Swettenham of Belper lodge, Derby. He has been in the British colonial service 40 years.

After being graduated at Cambridge in 1868, he entered the "civil service." He became secretary, governor and commander-in-chief of Ceylon, Singapore, Straits Settlemen, British Guiana, and other far away dependencies. In 1904 he was knighted for faithful service and sent to Jamaica.

Here are some of the things he has done:

Disappointed Kingston citizens when he was married two years ago by having band stands and crowded streets and riding around the outskirts to the church. Allowed only six persons to witness the wedding.

Went to a county fair and ate luncheon under a tree from a basket, while the committee begged in vain for him to attend the official reception and banquet.

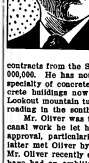
At an official function insisted on paying his bill after joining in a toast to the king.

At annual cherity ball two months after his arrival on island, disappointed elite who came to see him by sending an orchestra to represent him.

Came in conflict with United States officials last October when he refused to permit laborers to leave Jamaica to work on the Panama canal unless certain demands made by him were conceded.

Refused to permit the recruiting of laborers unless five shillings per head was paid to the island government for laborers and $2,500 for agents' licenses. After considerable discussion the demand was granted. The governor then insisted that the United States guarantee to compensate the laborers for any damage or injury they might sustain. This demand was positively refused.

LEADS CAUSE OF TEACHERS



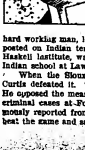
Margaret Haley, school-teacher, who waged a five-year fight in the courts against single-handed with 23 powerful corporations of Chicago and has wrung from them $500,000 yearly in taxes, has become the most influential politician in the second city of America. Five years ago the wages of Chicago school-teachers were reduced. The city had not money with which to pay them.

Margaret Haley resolved that salaries should be raised. The city treasury was empty because certain great corporations were dodging taxes. These corporations had their own officers on the school board. They kept them there to look in the assessors' office. They had "influence" in city hall and courts.

Margaret Haley had nothing but indomitable courage and the right. She fought the school-teachers themselves until she organized them into a labor union. Her next battle was won when the teachers' union became part of the Federation of Labor. Backed by this powerful voting force Margaret Haley won Mayor Dunne. He fired an entire school board for her and appointed a new one, consisting of Jane Addams and other reformers and friends of the "union." And now she has won her suits to piece property on the tax list that will swell the city's income $600,000 annually.

Seven years ago Margaret Haley was a grade teacher in a public school near the stock yards. For 16 annual terms she had taught there. For three years previous to that she had charge of a country school just outside of Joliet, where she was born. Her father was a contractor, a Democrat and a politician.

MAY DIG PANAMA CANAL

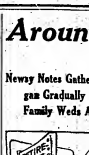


William J. Oliver, the railroad contractor who has been given the contract to dig the Panama canal as the result of his being the lowest bidder for the job, is a Hoosier by birth. He is a native of Mishawaka and spent the early years of his life there and at South Bend.

He is a nephew of the Oliver, of the Oliver Chilled Plow company, of South Bend. Twenty years ago he removed to the south, making his headquarters at Langley, S. C. He started as a smell contractor, and his close application to business and aggressive policies soon brought him success, and he began work on a broader scale and soon became known as a railroad contractor. Four years ago he removed to Knoxville, Tenn., where he owne one of the largest general machine shops in the country. He secured several big contracts from the Southern railway, and now he contracts against $30,000,000. He has not confined himself to one class of work but has made a specialty of concrete work and has several contracts for construction of concrete buildings now on hand in Louisville. He also has the Lookout mountain tunnel work now going on, one of the biggest feats in railroading in the south.

Mr. Oliver was the first man of prominence to suggest that the Panama canal work be let by private contract, the suggestion at once meeting with approval, particularly from President Roosevelt and Secretary Taft. The latter met Oliver by chance on a train and become much interested in him. Mr. Oliver recently said: "Even since the Panama canal was a sure thing, I have had an ambition to dig it. It has interested me but little whether it be a lock or a sea-level canal or whether one route or another be selected. I wanted it to go down in history that W. J. Oliver dug the canal.

NEW KANSAS SENATOR



The selection of Charles Curtis to fill the highest place within the gift of the state of Kansas marks the culminating point in a remarkable story of a life battle against tremendous odds. Curtis, when a mere boy, became a jockey, and later earned a living as a hack driver, at the same time studying law at nights. He was admitted to the bar in 1881, and at once began to take an active part in politics. In 1884 he was elected county attorney of Shawnee county, Kan., and surprised his political allies by enforcing the laws so strictly against saloon keepers that the prohibition statute was obeyed. In 1892 he was elected to congress, and has been a member ever since, in spite of the fact that a populist legislature once gerrymandered his district.

Curtis' career in congress has been that of a hard working man, loyal to his state and his district. He is particularly well posted on Indian territory matters. It was on his motion that the name, Haskell institute, was conferred on what had been previously known as the Indian school at Lawrence.

When the Sioux Indian pony steal was up to the Fifty-third congress Curtis defeated it. The measure would have cost the government $150,000. He opposed the measure to continue the United States courts for the trial of criminal cases at Fort Smith, Ark., and Paris, Tex., which had been unanimously reported from the judiciary committee. Single handed and alone he beat the game and saved the government $200,000 a year.

Around About New York

Newsy Notes Gathered Here and There in Gotham—J. Pierpont Morgan Gradually Retiring from Business World—Scion of Vanderbilt Family Weds Again in London.

NEW YORK.—J. P. Morgan has not been at his office since the holidays. This fact has led to repeated rumors that he has been seriously ill, and it is frequently used by speculators interested in breaking prices to spread the story throughout this country and Europe that he was at the point of death.

While Mr. Morgan's ohituary will not be written for years, Wall street will see little of him in future, except when financial matters of great importance require his attention. Mr. Morgan practically has retired from business.

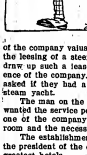
The financier has placed his affairs in such shape that it will not be necessary for him to give personal attention to the business of his banking house. It will hereafter be in the hands of J. P. Morgan, Jr., his son, who since January 1 has been the practical head of both the New York and London houses. Mr. Morgan remains the senior partner, but he will be a consulting rather than an active member of the firm.

With the retirement of Mr. Morgan the world of finance loses one of its most remarkable figures. Probably no man in the world has ever exercised so broad an influence in railroad and industrial affairs as he has. Many of the great railroad systems of the country have felt his iron hand in past years.

SECOND MATRIMONIAL VENTURE OF MRS. WILMERDING.

Advices from London state that Mrs. Jack Wilmerding, a great-granddaughter of Commodore Vanderbilt, has been married there to James Coates. The second matrimonial venture of Mrs. Wilmerding is an incident in a stormy career that has embraced life in the best New York society, the two sanitariums, and on the stage. She is a beautiful women and when last seen in New York, two months ago, showed no traces of the tempestuous life she has led.

Her father was Col. Vanderbilt Allen, a graduate of West Point, who made a fine record in the civil war. She was born in this city and in 1892 at Grace church married Jack Wilmerding, whose father was a millionaire dry goods merchant. They lived on Staten island, and were leaders in the hunting, outdoor set of society.



The Wilmerdings were too much alike in disposition to live happily together. They had frequent quarrels in public and in private, the most exciting one night in Dhimonico's, when Mr. Wilmerding tossed a plate of ice cream in the face of his spouse. She left him and went to Italy to live with her father.

They had a castle in Capri and lived alone. Testimony at subsequent trials concerning the sanity of the young woman revealed that her manners in Italy was unconventional in the extreme. She smoked cigarettes, partook freely of strong liquors, and created considerable gossip by her indiscriminate charity and disregard for propriety. Her father died in 1897, and she returned to New York, the possessor of a large estate.

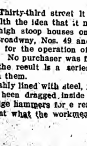
Her relatives here became alarmed about her. She made bad investments, fell into the hands of money lenders, and was rapidly dissipating her property when two of her uncles, Franklin Allen and John Wallace, brought proceedings and had her committed to Bloomingdale asylum. She was afterward released.

None of her relatives in this city were informed of her intention to marry, they say. They profess slight interest in her whereabouts and doings.

ALL-NIGHT LAWYERS FOR SUDDEN CALLS.

A company has been formed to supply legal services which may be needed at any hour of the day or night. The Night and Day bank came into less than a year ago and the demand for all-night service in other lines has made itself felt, for New York is a town in which business may be transacted during each of the 24 hours.

The hotels and their patrons are largely responsible for this continuous feature in business lines. At the large hotels business men, meet after the conventional hours to discuss business enterprises. They find themselves frequently in need of the services of a lawyer or an expert accountant, and to meet this demand the new company was recently organized.



A man who got married under romantic circumstances a few weeks ago found the services of the company valuable in carrying out his plans. His arrangements required the leasing of a steem yacht, and he sought in vain for a lawyer qualified to draw up such a lease until at least 11:30 p. m., when he heard of the existence of the company. He telephoned to the uptown office of the company and asked if they had a lawyer there who was qualified to draw a lease for a steem yacht.

The man on the telephone at the company's office replied asking when he wanted the services performed. The applicant replied, "Instantly." By 11:45 one of the company's lawyers, accompanied by a stenographer, was in his room and the necessary document was being dictated.

The establishment of the 24-hour service is the result of a suggestion of the president of the company from the manager of one of Greater New York's greatest hotels.

The services of the company frequently have been engaged in divorce matters, but the main demand has come from persons desiring to have contracts, deeds, mortgages and wills drawn.

BUILDS HOUSE TO REPEL ALL INTRUDERS.

Peculiar alterations are being made on the premises at 61 West Thirty-third street, the property of the Pennsylvania-Railroad company, and the neighbors are convinced the new tenants are constructing fortifications with the idea of being able to withstand a siege long enough to give everybody inside ample time to escape.

David Johnson, who has been interested in several of the most famous gamhling-houses in the United States, has shown special interest in the work, and those who know him have been led to infer that he was about to assume the management of a new establishment in the heart of the tenderloin and just off Herald square.

As agents of the Pennsylvania railroad the property has been in the hands of the Douglas Robinson and Charles S. Brown company.

Before the railroad started its tunnel under Thirty-third street it purchased various pieces of property along the line, with the idea that it might require them for air and light. It acquired two high stoop houses on the north side of the way, between Astor court and Broadway, Nos. 49 and 51. Finding that neither of these pieces was required for the operation of the road both have recently been placed on the market. No purchaser was found for No. 51, but a desirable tenant appeared, and the result is a series of changes calculated to surprise those who have seen them.

The front door is now of a heavy wood, presumably lined with steel, lading from its apparent weight. Other doors have been dragged inside that seem calculated to withstand battering rams or sledge hammers for a reasonable period. The windows are now so covered that what the workmen are doing inside is invisible from without.

JURY TO TRY THAW NOW COMPLETED

STATE TO PRESENT ITS EVIDENCE AGAINST WHITE'S SLAYER MONDAY MORNING.

May Be All in by Noon—Main Reliance of the Defendant, It is Generally Conceded, Will Be a Plea of Emotional Insanity.

New York, Feb. 2.—The Thaw jury as completed into Friday follows:

Deming B. Smith, 65, retired manufacturer, married, foreman; George F. Platt, 54, hardware, married; Charles H. Focke, 45, shipping agent, married; Oscar A. Fink, 46, salesman, married; Henry C. Harney, 50, piano, married; Harry C. Brealey, 35, advertising agent, married; Malcolm S. Fraser, 40, salesman, married; Charles D. Newton, 65, retired railway official, married; Wilbur S. Steele, 60, manufacturer, married; John S. Deance, 35, railway freight agent, unmarried; Joseph B. Bolton, 57, clerk, married; Bernard Gerstman, 36, manufacturers' agent, married.

The selection of the twelfth juror came as a complete surprise at the end of a long and tedious day—the eighth of the trial—and immediately after this last member of the trial panel had been sworn in Justice Fitzgerald ordered an adjournment of court until 10:30 o'clock Monday morning.

To Take Testimony Monday.

District Attorney Jerome, who has been coatending since Thursday afternoon for the removal of one of the men now in the jury box but who has failed to gain the consent of the defendant's counsel to a change, was still reluctant as court adjourned to begin the actual proceedings without a preliminary opening to the case of Thaw's attorney. At his request, therefore, Justice Fitzgerald ordered all talesmen who have not yet been examined to be in court Monday morning ready for jury service in case any are needed. Mr. Jerome then announced that if there should be no change in the situation in the meantime the state would proceed to place all its direct testimony beforo the jury at the Monday morning session. The defense was notified to be in readiness to proceed by Monday afternoon.

"We are entirely satisfied with the jury," said Clifford W. Hartridge, Thaw's leading counsel, and he added the intimation that he would not consent to any further alterations of the personnel.

"The defense will be ready to proceed the minute the prosecution has finished its case," declared John B. Deane, another of Thaw's attorneys.

Garvan to Open for State.

Assistant District Attorney Garvan will make the opening address for the prosecution. His remarks will be very brief, occupying perhaps not more than 20 minutes. The state then will introduce only such witnesses as are necessary to prove Stanford White was shot and killed by Harry K. Thaw on the Madison Square roof garden the night of June 25 last. In announcing that the introduction will not require more than one session of the court Mr. Jerome is evidently of the opinion that the cross-examination of the state's witnesses to the actual events associated with the tragedy may not be very extensive.

From the questions which have so persistently been put to the talesmen by Thaw's attorneys as to one's prejudice against a defense of insanity, it is at last generally conceded that a plea of emotional insanity will be the main reliance of the young defendant. This probably will lead to a cross-questioning of the state's witnesses as to any peculiarity they may have noticed in Thaw's conduct the night of the tragedy, in which event the conclusion of the state's direct testimony may take longer than is now anticipated.

MAIL ORDER HOUSE LOSES.

Injunction to Stop Alleged South Dakota Boycott is Lost.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Feb. 2.—Judge Garland of the United States court Friday denied the application for a temporary injunction of Montgomery Ward & Co., of Chicago, against the officers and directors of the South Dakota Retail Merchants' and Hardware Dealers' association, and E. J. Mannix, editor of the Commercial News of Sioux Falls. The Chicago concern alleged that it was unable to purchase goods from jobbers and wholesalers, because of a boycott maintained by the association and Editor Mannix, and sought the injunction to restrain the defendants from continuing this alleged boycott.

EDWARD P. HIPPLE A SUICIDE.

Philadelphian Kills Himself as Did His Brother Frank.

Philadelphia, Feb. 2.—Edward P. Hipple, a brother of the late Frank A. Hipple, who ended his life last summer after the wreck of the Real Estate Trust company of this city, of which he was president, committed suicide at his home here Friday with a revolver.

Mr. Hipple was about 70 years of age and had been in the real estate business. The police say they believe he brooded over the tragic ending of his brother's life.

CANAL CONTRACT NOT LET

NEITHER OLIVER'S BID NOR ANY OTHER MAY BE ACCEPTED.

Secretary Loeb Says Work May Yet Be Done by Government, Using Contractors as Agents.

Washington, Jan. 31.—The following statement was made public at the White House Wednesday night by Secretary Loeb:

"Reports in the papers seem to indicate a belief that the canal contract has been conditionally awarded to Mr. Oliver. This is not so. No decision has been made even that the contract will be awarded to any of the bidders. Mr. Oliver's bid was so hopelessly defective that it could not be even considered, and time was given him to complete it in shape that will enable it to receive consideration. If it is put into such shape it will be considered, together with the bid already made by the Gillespie-McArthur combination, which may itself be altered; and then whichever bid, after the most careful examination, seems most advantageous may be taken, or both bids rejected and the canal be constructed under the direct supervision of the government. In such case the government would, wherever it chose, use contractors simply as agents.

"The real object in contracting the work is to have assembled a large number of the best specialists in each class of work, and the prime consideration will be the ability and fitness shown in a variety of directions by the men making the bid. The president and the commission would not even consider a bid of merely one or two men. The work is already going well. Over half a million cubic yards were taken out of the Culebra cut in January, and the amount being taken out is steadily increasing."

Mr. Oliver authorizes the statement that he has already entered into partnership with Frederick C. Stevens, president of the Commercial National bank of this city, who was recently appointed superintendent of public works of the state of New York.

SCORES PERISH IN A MINE.

Terrible Disaster in the Stuart Shaft, West Virginia.

Charleston, W. Va., Feb. 2.—Sixty-four bodies have been removed from the Stuart mine, and at least 18 more are known to be in there yet.

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 30.—With a detonation heard for miles around and debris hurled hundreds of feet in the air, dust in the Stuart mine, near Fayetteville, exploded at 12:55 Tuesday afternoon, bringing a terrible death to 80 or more men who were at work more than 500 feet below the surface. How probably is no chance that any of the men will be taken out alive for it is thought that the terrific force of the explosion snuffed out their lives instantly. It will not be possible for the rescuers to reach the bottom of the shaft within 6 hours.

The disaster is perhaps the worst, in the number of lives lost, in the history of this state. Most of the men were Americans and many of them were married and have families. There were a dozen or more colored men and 15 or more aliens.

POET PLEADS FOR HIS SON.

W. H. Thompson Makes Pathetic Address in Murder Trial.

Tacoma, Wash., Feb. 1.—Attorney Will H. Thompson, the poet, brother of Maurice Thompson, the novelist, on Thursday last Friday on bonds to the jury in behalf of his son, Chester, who for seven weeks has been on trial charged with the murder of Judge Emery at Seattle. His address was an oratorical effort of great strength, and brought tears to the eyes of the judge and jury. Even the attorneys for the state were overcome.

The aged attorney recited from his own poem, "The High Tide at Gettysburg," and commented on the fact that he had been a confederate soldier. He declared that he loved his boy and that he loved the law alike and that he would not make an appeal for the son that was not within the law.

SOLDIERS THREATEN MUTINY.

Catholics in Columbus Barracks Object to Church Order.

Columbus, O., Feb. 1.—Announcement was made Thursday that 25 Catholic soldiers at the barracks here have appealed to the war department against Lieut. Col. Guard's order directing them to attend church services on Sundays. There is considerable excitement at the barracks regarding the order and the men who object to it declare that they will mutiny before they will obey it.

Frisco School Board Going East.

San Francisco, Feb. 2.—After a conference at the home of Mayor Schmitz Friday the members of the board of education decided that the entire board, with Superintendent Roncovieri and Assistant City Attorney Williams, will go to Washington to confer with the federal officials on the Japanese question. Mayor Schmitz will also be one of the party.

Russian Loan to Relieve Famine.

St. Petersburg, Feb. 2.—The imperial finance commission has sanctioned the issuance of a new internal loan of $25,000,000, to be devoted to the relief of the famine sufferers. This loan will not be opened to public subscription but will be absorbed by the state savings banks.

ADMIRAL DAVIS IS WARMLY PRAISED

HIS CONDUCT AT KINGSTON APPROVED BY PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

Evans Submits Report—Commending Admiral and Secretary Metcalf Add Their Commendation of the Naval Officer's Course.

Washington, Feb. 2.—In unequivocal terms President Roosevelt Friday approved Admiral Davis' entire action in connection with his visit to Kingston, Jamaica, to render aid to the stricken city, and in addition requested the secretary of the navy to express to Admiral Davis his heartiest commendation on all that he did.

The long expected report of Admiral Davis of the circumstances leading up to the withdrawal of the fleet from Kingston reached the navy department Friday and was at once laid before the president. Inasmuch as he already had announced that the diplomatic phase is a closed incident, the report itself will not be made public, but late in the day Secretary Metcalf gave out the letter of Admiral Evans, commander-in-chief of the Atlantic fleet, warmly commending Admiral Davis for his conduct of a situation "which was, to say the least, somewhat embarrassing." The admiral remarks farther that it was particularly fortunate that there was at hand an officer such as Admiral Davis to deal with the problem which arose.

The correspondence is supplemented by a strong letter of commendation of Admiral Davis by the president and by Secretary Metcalf, who adds his approval and commendation of Admiral Davis' "distinguished service to humanity."

Jones Denies Inhumanity.

London, Feb. 2.—Sir Alfred Jones, president of the Liverpool chamber of commerce; John Hennlker Heaton, M. P., and other prominent men arrived at Bristol Friday on board the steamer Port Kingston, from Kingston, Jamaica, by way of Barbados. They gave vivid details of the earthquake and protested against the charges widely circulated that Sir Alfred's party inhumanly treated Americans at Kingston.

Ship Crowded With Dead and Dying.

In an interview Sir Alfred said it was a "monstrous" statement, adding:

"The ship was crowded from end to end with dead and dying. In order to provide for those we had to keep all our own passengers ashore at a hotel for two days. Several Americans who were among the hurt were treated on board the Port Kingston, and we provided for other Americans who sought shelter under the shed of our wharf with mattresses and supplies from the ship and an armed guard to insure their security. Several Americans came and asked us what they had to pay, but we told them they were welcome to everything we could do."

Stands by Swettenham.

Sir Alfred said he considered that Gov. Swettenham did everything possible under the extraordinary conditions incident to the earthquake, and added:

"I do not think the correspondence with Admiral Davis or the note the governor thought would ever be made public by the American admiral, who, of course, was anxious to help and did his duty in offering aid, and, when it was not wanted, went away."

MRS. SAGE GIVES A MILLION.

Handsome Present to Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute Announced.

New York, Feb. 2.—At the annual meeting of the alumni association of the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, held at the St. Regis hotel Friday night, announcement was made of the gift by Mrs. Russell Sage of $1,000,000 to that institution.

It is understood that the funds will be applied to the establishment of a new department to be called the "Russell Sage school of mechanical and electrical engineering."

QUAKE FELT IN ILLINOIS

EVERY BUILDING IN VANDALIA TREMBLES.

Vibrations Also Experienced at Highland and Greenville—Severe Shocks in Indiana.

Vandalia, Ill., Feb. 1.—Every building in Vandalia was shaken by an earthquake. Many persons were aroused from deep sleep. The shock was accompanied by a loud rumbling.

St. Louis, Feb. 1.—Specials from Highland and Greenville, Ill., report severe earthquake shocks Wednesday night. The vibrations seemed to be from east to west and continued about five seconds. In many homes dishes were shaken from shelves.

Indianapolis, Ind., Feb. 1.—Reports from various sections of the state bring news of severe earthquake shocks Wednesday evening, the tremore varying from four to five seconds to one minute. Spencer, Owen county, and Danville, Hendricks county, were more sensibly affected than other places.

At Danville people rushed from their homes into the streets and were panic-stricken. At the home of James Moore several pictures were shaken from the walls and the glass and china were rattled. Just across the street, in the home of Riley D. Snyder, the shock was equally perceptible.

Kingston, Jamaica, Feb. 1.—Prof. Brown, of Brown university, is here studying the earthquake. He states that the intensity of the earthquake here was slightly less than at San Francisco. The area of shock covered Jamaica and Cuba, but the area of intensity was confined to Jamaica. He says the earthquake was probably due to a readjustment of the earth's crust in the region around Kingston. Slight recurring shocks show that the readjustment is not yet complete. Five shocks were felt here Tuesday night and Wednesday morning.

Portland, Jan. 30.—It is learned that the late national phase of the Kingston incident has been finally closed by Gov. Swettenham formally withdrawing his letter to Rear Admiral Davis and expressing his regret for having written it.

WORST BLIZZARD OF WINTER.

Terrific Windstorm With Snow Rages in North Dakota.

Minot, N. D., Feb. 1.—North Dakota is again in the grasp of a fierce blizzard. A terrific windstorm which commenced Thursday afternoon, accompanied by a light fall of snow, bids fair to undo the work that the snow plow road companies have spent days in trying to overcome. The blizzard is the worst which has struck the state this winter, and the result to the food supply will be disastrous beyond measure.

Over half the force in the local freight office of the Great Northern railway has been laid off until the tracks were cleared up. Little freight is arriving and no dead cars are being sent out. All efforts are centered on bringing through the food supply and fuel. Freight cars are being abandoned by passenger trains in many cases on both roads. The Mohall branch running out of this city has been blocked since Monday and will not resume operations for several days. The majority of traveling men are laying off in the larger towns.

Fifth Attempt to Wreck Train.

Springfield, Mo., Jan. 31.—A fifth attempt to wreck trains on the Kansas City, Clinton & Springfield railway was made one mile south of Osceola Tuesday night. A section foreman found eight railroad spikes between rails.

DEEP WATERWAY TO GULF URGED

WESTERN CONGRESSMEN ARGUE FOR THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER PROJECT.

Pleads for Tomlghbs—Representative Candler Reads Song About That Stream—Senators Eulogize the Late Arthur Pus Gorman.

Washington, Feb. 2.—Appropriations for rivers and harbors continued to occupy the attention of the house Friday. In the main the speeches dealt with the proposed canal from Chicago to St. Louis and the deepening of the Mississippi river from St. Louis to the gulf to 14 feet.

Mr. Clark, of Missouri, delivered a characteristic speech in behalf of the Mississippi river project.

Attack Cape May Project.

Messrs. Crumpacker, of Indiana, and Madden, of Illinois, called attention to the Cold Spring inlet, better known as the Cape May project, in connection with which $11,000 is appropriated in the bill for deepening the channel to a depth of 15 feet, and both members insisted that this discrimination against the Mississippi river was outrageous.

Mr. Sheckleford, of Missouri, said he would not criticise the river and harbors committee if the Missouri river did not receive any larger sum than that appropriated, but would support any effort to increase the sum.

Candler Reads a Song.

Mr. Candler, of Mississippi, made an impassioned plea for the extensive improvement of the Tombigbee river. He read a song dedicated to the river, after apologizing to the house for his inability to sing the selection.

Mr. Garrett of Tennessee, urged the extension of the levee system along the Mississippi. After his remarks the committee rose.

Bills were passed fixing the boundaries of lands adjoining the Coeur d'Alene Indian reservation in Idaho; permitting persons owning lands in the Kiowa, Comanche and Apache Indian reservation in Oklahoma to commute them for townsite purposes, and creating two additional land districts in Alaska located at Nome and Fairbanks.

Eulogies of A. P. Gorman.

Senators paid tribute Friday to the memory of the late Senator Arthur Pue Gorman, of Maryland. All business for the day was suspended at 2:30 o'clock according to a special order, and eulogies were delivered expressing the profound sorrow and regret of the senate at the death of the Maryland senator.

Previous to this order many bills of minor importance were passed, including one for the asylum for feeble minded children, making the first year's salary $600 with an annual increase of $100 until a maximum of $1,200 has been reached. Another bill passed increases the pension of all Indian war survivors from eight dollars to ten dollars per month.

Calls President Usurper.

Washington, Feb. 1.—Disclaiming any intention of "assailing President Roosevelt and professing for him profound personal esteem, Senator Rayner, of Maryland, Thursday addressed the senate at considerable length in critical review of what he termed the president's usurpation of governmental functions not conferred upon him by the constitution. He first alluded to the last public speech of Secretary Root in which was described the gradual enlargement of the federal power at the expense of the states.

"I regard this doctrine," said Senator Rayner, "thus announced, adhered to and emphasized, as a most dangerous and insidious attack on the institutions of the country."

Senator Rayner turned his attention to the judiciary, announcing his belief that this branch of the government ought to be entirely free from executive interference. "It is therefore extraordinary," he added, "that the criticism by the president of Judge Humphrey with reference to his decision in the case known as the steel-packers' case in the Illinois courts, was uncalled for and an invasion of judicial prerogatives."

"We cannot tolerate such intrusion on the rights of the courts," continued Senator Rayner. "The courts are not responsible to any president. A judge would have been perfectly justified if he had stood upon his ermine and refused to rebuke of the executive. He could well, with dignified and calm defiance, have proclaimed to the world that he was a sovereign here; yon have no greater right to interfere with me than I have heretofore held to denounce an act of yours as usurpation."

Messiah of Strange Hallucination.

The recall of the president's construction of his prerogatives, Senator Rayner said, had raised a new school of scribes who had commenced to edit a revised edition of the constitution called "the unwritten constitution." The president is the prophet of this new creed, the messiah of this strange hallucination. "But," he added, "one thing he has still to do, and that is to rise the vast public patronage at his disposal to compel obedience to his views."

Senator Alger's Will.

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 1.—The will of the late Senator R. A. Alger, filed Thursday afternoon in the probate court leaves all of his estate excepting $20,000 to his widow and five children.

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

State Fair.

Secretary E. W. Randall of the Minnesota State Fair has been officially informed that the board of directors of the American Shorthorn Breeders' Association, at their annual meeting, formally voted an appropriation of $2,500 for premiums for a special shorthorn show at the Minnesota state fair. The appropriation is made with the provision that the Minnesota State Agricultural Society shall set aside a like amount and thus make the entire premium offerings for shorthorn cattle the full sum of $5,000.

Immediately upon receipt of this notification the managers acquiesced in the provision and have appropriated $2,500 and have thus secured the holding of a great Shorthorn exhibition at the next fair. But in addition they have promoted an enormous livestock show all along the line, as the action in regard to shorthorns will stimulate other breeders' associations and there are good chances of liberal appropriations from several of these organizations. Secretary Randall is in correspondence with the American Hereford Breeders' Association, the American Aberdeen-Angus Association and others, and expects favorable action in the near future.

The future of the Shorthorn show will be of great interest to Minnesota livestock breeders. Of the total of $5,000, $1,000 will be set aside exclusively for Minnesota Shorthorns. This will give the breeders of the state a chance to show their cattle without competition with fancy stock from other parts of the country, privileges which they will not be slow to take advantage of. At the same time if they wish to compete in the open classes for a share of the $4,000 offered without limitation. Counties that do not conform in the regulations will not get anything.

The highway commission met with the road and bridge committees of both houses. A resubmission of the road and bridge amendment, defeated last fall, with the contention that the amendments to the law that will make it easier for counties to raise their share of funds for state work.

Several minor matters are slated for discussion also, among them the installation of a printing plant for the use of the university and the various university publications.

Captain McGrew was born near Dayton, Ohio, 1833 and came to Minnesota territory in 1854, locating in Fillmore county, where he taught school.

At the outbreak of the civil war he enlisted in Company B of the Fifth Minnesota infantry. He was elected sergeant, but he rose to the rank of captain, and at the close of the war was on the staff of General L. F. Hubbard. Though a true soldier and a hard fighter, participating in many engagements, notably the assault on Vicksburg and at Nashville, he was never wounded.

Histories of the Indian massacres, when the Sioux broke loose in 1862, give Captain McGrew credit for the saving of Fort Ridgely. His bravery and skill as an officer and artillerist saved the position and the settlers gathered in it for protection.

Divide Road Funds.

St. Paul.—The first distribution of state road and bridge funds by the state highway commission is about to be made. During the year it is expected that about $50,000 will be available, most of it coming in on the regular tax settlements, as a result of the one-twentieth of a mill road and bridge tax. Under the law no county may receive more, than a per cent of the fund or less than one-half of 1 per cent but the state is only to pay one third of the cost of state highways or roads, built under supervision of the state commissioner. Counties that do not conform in the regulations will not get anything.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 30—Senator Albert Schaller of Hastings, democrat, today introduced a bill in the senate which it is passing, will permit the state to give the laugh to the railroads which have secured a temporary injunction against the putting in effect of the new low tariff on general commodity freights, as established by the railroad and warehouse commission. The bill reads that the tariffs for carrying general commodity freight in the state of Minnesota shall be—and then follows in detail a table of rates promulgated by the state commission. If this became a law, the rates would of course be in effect and in the meantime it will be impossible for the railroads to bring an injunction suit against the legislature to stop the passage of the bill.

Another important measure which put in an appearance today was an innocent looking bill by Senator W. B. Seward of Marshall, proposing the substitution of the words "every person" for the word "male," in article 7, article 7 of the constitution. The effect of this change would be to permit free and equal suffrage of women with men at any and all elections.

The senate held a long debate this morning on the Bonnes resolution ordering the senate railroad committee to report on the 2-cent fare as soon as possible, and would have in the event that Feb. 6. The resolution suffered several amendments, finally being lost by a vote of 29 to 24. Senator Peterson, the author of one of the 2-cent fare bills, led the attack on the resolution on the ground that the railroad committee had not had an opportunity to meet and consider its bills because several of its members had been busy serving on the election committee on the Butler-Hackney contest; and that the committeemen should not therefore, be made to suffer the odium which would attach on the passage of a criticising resolution.

The house adjourned at 11 a. m., after passage of resolutions to the memory of the late Dr. L. W. Babcock of Wadena, a former member of the house. Some business was transacted, however, S. O. Morse, on his own request, had his resolution appropriating $250 legislative expenses to each member, referred back to himself, a gentle parliamentary method of giving a resolution or bill its funeral. His action was the result of a story, the truth of which is not doubted, that the attorney general was preparing a report for the house relative to the resolution which dealt with the proposition with ungentle hand, and Morse desired to avoid the coming trouble.

The house voted to adopt the report of the committee on express and telegraph lines, which recommended the adoption of Donald Robertson's resolution calling for investigation of express rates. J. N. Castlen then offered a measure prohibiting the sale of liquor or cigarettes within one mile of the state agricultural college. The measure, however, makes no reference to the "makings," and the student who formerly rolled his own cigarette may continue to do so even if the legislature passes the bill. C. F. Hugo of Duluth offered a bill to stimulate the building of rural street railway lines. It provides that counties and highways may be condemned for tracks on consent of county commissioners.

St. Paul, Jan. 31, 1907—J. M. Hackney of Hamline, was late last night recorded the right to retain his seat in the senate as representing the 37th senatorial district, and which the vote was the climax of a series of arguments of attorneys who were given open hearings by the senate and occupied three hours. E. P. Sanborn spoke first, representing Butler. He cited the testimony of many students in the state agricultural school, showing that in practice they had no right to vote because they were only legal residents of the places where they went to school. He was followed by Harris Richardson, for Hackney, who cited that if these county young men, many of whom will of whom is working his way through school, are not allowed to vote where they are now living, they would be disfranchised as they cannot afford to make long trips just to vote. He cited many court decisions of the old Cloud, but today attorney for the democratic contestant, asked the senate to permit the whole thing to be referred to the judiciary committee as it was impossible to get down to be settled. It was a suggestion to put off the inevitable, but it did not work in delaying matters for the moment. Samuel G. Lord of Kasson, attorney who closed the argument for Hackney, explained that the election committee of 8 members, of which 2 were lawyers, had voted in favor of Hackney, 7 to 2; and that the report of members of the judiciary sub-committee on constitutional law, to which the contest would go if it should be referred to the judiciary committee, five are on the election committee and voted in favor of Senator Bedford. It prohibits "tipping" in any and all forms, and is also aimed against grafting and accepting of bribes by the agent of any principal. Senator Alderman introduced a bill which bobbed up two years ago but died before it became a law. The measure calls for a third state fish hatchery to be established at Spring Grove. Wing county, and appropriates $25,000.

S. D. Peterson of New Ulm managed to get the home today of an appropriation endorsing the "stand pat" attitude of former Congressman McCleary regarding the Philippines. The vote was a close one when ayes and nays were called, but the chair declared the resolution passed.

Representative Wold fathered a bill prohibiting discrimination in any form by sellers of coal at wholesale, the bill being aimed at the combine which only sells coal to members. Representative Phillips, in a bill introduced, would have all hangings take place at the state prison. Representative Knox presented a measure to establish another normal school, located at Cass Lake.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 1—The legislature held a rather uneventful session today although more than the usual amount of time was consumed by both house and senate. The senate devoted the hours till noon in discussing the 2-cent railroad bill and on the subject of ship subsidy, then awaited to the fact that it had been wasting time and that the house, which it had not the least control and control in session without a break for luncheon till after two o'clock. The ship subsidy proposition was brought up by a resolution of Senator Ole O. Sageng, urging, commending the great amounts of money congress contemplates voting as subsidies for the Pacific coastwise lines of Hill steamers, Harriman and Hill. He made a lengthy speech against the congressional measure and asking the passage of a memorial to congress to take no action whatever. Minnesota felt on the matter. Senator Laybourne was the first to oppose the measure. He suggested that the senate pay attention to the 225 pending bills that had been introduced and let the subsidy question alone, as congress intend to the needs of Minnesotans at Washington. Senator Geo. P. Wilson of Hennepin, general, said he would have to refuse to vote for a board resolution that denied the prosperity of any ship-building. He was not necessary to a fair limit to establish our merchants marine which now amounts to nothing when compared to other nations which have granted subsidies. On a vote the senate spent nearly another hour when in committee of the whole, debating the Collen bill for increases in the salaries of the penitentiary. The bill was finally recommended for passage with the salaries of supreme court justices fixed at $7,000; district judges nominally at $5,000, and in Hennepin and Ramsey counties, $1,000 for each district judge to be contributed by the respective counties.

Bills introduced in the senate today included an appropriation by Senator Hinton to prevent political candidates from making any pledges not made public to voters; by Wilson and C. L. Hanson establishing normal schools at Thief River Falls and Bemidji; by Wilson, prohibiting the employing of all deaf children at the state school for deaf, instead of leaving it optional as at present; by Wilson, to prohibit sale of goods by wholesalers with a requirement that only the line sold is handled by the retail dealer.

The house spent most of its time today introducing bills. Seventeen measures in all were put in appearance, one after another. The bills presented by Peterson, Allen, Brady, Zelch, Saari, Adams, W. I. Nolan, Nimrocks, H. M. Hansen and Timberlake, all of whom except Peterson and T. D. O'Brien, and were referred to the insurance committee. Representative Case introduced a bill to prohibit the killing of elk, caribou and moose for five years. Representative Carl presented a bill prescribing uniform methods for handling grain, prohibiting irregularities, and providing penalties. A resolution of the senate woman suffrage bill was introduced by Representative Higgins.

Stuck by the Way

Minneapolis, Minn.—There are hundreds of cars loaded with coal from Duluth side tracked all over the Northwest, and they will not reach here before mid-winter.

This statement was made by a prominent official of the Pittsburg Coal company to The Tribune, in discussing the coal supply of Northern Minnesota and North Dakota.

"It is hard to help it," added the official, "it is simply a problem of the snows and storms. A train of coal leaves Duluth and is blocked by snow.

Will Suffer

St. Cloud, Minn.—Theodore H. Beaudien of the White Earth Indian agency says there will be intense suffering in northern Minnesota before spring comes, unless help is forthcoming particularly to the White Earth reservation, where, he says, conditions are much different from formly years.

Since the land has been allotted Indians and others are not permitted to help themselves by timber, even for fuel, and they now have to buy their wood. The winter has been exceptionally severe, he says.

NEW GUINEA HOUSES

HOMES OF HALF-CIVILIZED NATIVES BUILT IN TREES.

Placed Higher In Earlier Days to Prevent Surprise by Enemy—Life In Far-Off Country Ideal for Savages.

Boston.—Of all the habitations of man none is more strange to the eyes of a civilized person than the houses in New Guinea, the largest island in the world.

Lying north of the continent of Australia, and south of the Philippines, New Guinea is peopled by semi-savage tribes, to whom the ways of white men are as yet so new that many of their ancient customs survive.

Among these is the building of houses in trees, or on piles over the land or the water. In some parts of the island are whole villages built half a mile from shore. Everywhere in the interior of the island the houses are built several feet above the ground, and in certain communities the tree house, a survival of the days when the tribes were usually at war with one another, may still be seen.

The primary purpose of the tree house is to protect its owner against surprise from an enemy. At one time his takes his family, arms and provisions, climbs to his house and draws the ladder up after him.

But why cannot his enemy cut down the tree, may be asked. Such a thing would be simple if the tree cutter would wear a suit of armor and have an ax that would resist the dulling effects of wood as hard as lignum vitae. The tribes of New Guinea have no means of protecting themselves against the poisoned arrows of an enemy except their shields, and a shield would he rather awkward to manage when cutting down a tree having a trunk five feet in the top covered with stones, hot water and poisoned darts and arrows. Besides, the savages had only stone axes in the days when the tree houses were used as fortresses.

In these days the tree houses of New Guinea serve the same purpose as all the other elevated dwellings on the island—they keep their occupants safe above the fever-soaked ground, with its deadly night mists, and they also keep off deadly beasts.

Tree House In New Guinea.

Life in New Guinea, for a savage, is ideal, since it is not necessary to work for a living, and the wearing of clothes is not considered necessary.

The forest supplies food in abundance, in the way of bananas, yams and sago, while logs flourish in the wild growth, and form the staple raw stuff of the people.

Cocoanuts, which grow abundantly all over the island, are much used for food, and the milk of the young nut is a common drink. The meat of the nuts, when dried, is a staple article of barter with traders.

In the homes of New Guinea housekeeping is reduced to its simplest elements. The cooking utensils are earthen pots. The stove is a little clay platform in the middle of the house floor, surrounded by a fender of saplings, woven and smeared with clay.

For beds hammocks made of vegetable fiber are generally used, and are best suited to the climate. Bedding is not necessary.

Where nobody wears clothing, the housewife need neither sew, darn nor mend. As a cook her accomplishments need not extend beyond the preparation of sago porridge and the roasting of a pig.

The houses are made of palm leaves woven into a thatch for the roof, and sides of bamboo. The floors are split bamboo, laid flat side upward.

(As She Appears in Penitentiary Garb and Convict's Number.)

Mrs. Cassie L. Chadwick, formerly of Cleveland, one of the most notorious women swindlers in the criminal annals of the world, from an aristocratic "lady," plumed with all the gorgeous finery that thousands of dollars could buy, into a wan, prison-garbed woman, broken in spirit and body.

By orders from the government Mrs. Chadwick is to be transferred from the Ohio penitentiary to the government prison at Moundsville, W. Va., where she will spend the next ten-year sentence for the ruin brought about by her astounding financial transactions.

For the first time since the second imprisonment of Mrs. Chadwick a photograph of the so-called witch of finance has escaped beyond the officials of the penitentiary, where the prison records are kept. It was taken in anticipation of the transfer of the woman to the new prison and shows the famous female swindler as she actually appears adorned with a convict's number and dressed in prison clothes.

Less than three years ago Mrs. Chadwick was living in a palatial home. She was driving about the streets of this city in an automobile and borrowing immense sums of money as though it were water. She would hardly be recognized now by those with whom she mingled in big transactions in the days of her regal splendor.

JAMES STILLMAN.
(American Banker Member of French Legion of Honor.)

Honor by the French government, is president of the National City bank of New York, said to be the greatest bank in America. He has offices in 41 organizations, including banks, trust companies, real estate, railroad, gas, timber, copper, warehouse and life insurance companies. Two years ago the French consul at instruction voted to engrave Mr. Stillman's name on the walls of the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris, Mr. Stillman sailed for Europe several days ago and denied that he was going was not known until after he was on the way. It was announced that Mr. Stillman went on account of his health, but it is more than hinted that he hurried away to escape a summons to testify before the interstate commerce commission of the investigation of the Harriman roads.

Bird Notes Set to Music.

Henry Oldys, assistant biologist in the department of agriculture, has 1,000 copies of music written in popular form so that it is possible for the human voice exactly to imitate the songsters of the field and forest. He has recorded, says the Washington Herald, the actual tones, setting them in the proper musical key, and their reproduction is easy for anybody who can read musical symbols. Mr. Oldys has been gathering bird language for 13 years and during most of that time has been devoting his expert knowledge of the subject to official reports which find their way in the government archives.

Signs On Windows Barred.

There is one Boardway office building that attracts attention by the lack of signs on the windows. It is a tremendously big building, with scores of windows, not one of which bears the name of a firm, except several on the ground floor which are decorated with the name of a banking concern. The owners of the building object on artistic grounds, to utilizing the windows for advertising purposes, and as the tenants evidently are of the same mind window signs are done away with.

THE SUNBEAM.

Subscription price $1.00 per year in advance. If not paid in advance $1.50

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The Red Lake Falls Gazette is advertising for court commissioner Johnson. He may be keeping out of the way for fear Red Lake Falls may want an injunction to prevent the commissioners from acting or the county seat removed petition, as he is "appi injunction on Johnson"

The lawyers promised to pay the cost if Thief River Falls was defeated in the Supreme Court, on the County seat case which amounts to about $500. Judgement has been entered against the County for the little bill and if Thief River Falls people pay the cost it will be the first time we ever heard of individuals paying a bill that they could put on the County. "For whether it be great, or of other it is small, the farmer pays it all."

We think the suggestion made by the Duluth Evening Herald, that in these times of our prosperity the people had ought to lay by something for a lean day is a good suggestion. Now the Herald, is a good democratic paper and believes that party is coming into power again and advises the people to save up enough during the republican prosperous times to last them through the administration of the Democratic party. Good idea, but the trouble with them to it, so the only time we do will be to [illegible] the free soup houses and feed them soup, like the Democrats have one administration

There is a certain gang of city schemers, that make a practice of working the country newspapers for free advertising, and the county editor, in his zeal to do as much business as possible, often revives an "Ezy Mark" for them. They easily contain office emoloy a tryie writer, and send out their advertising with instructionto to send your bill at the end of two months, and when you send in your bill you get it returned from the post office with a hand in red ink, pointing to the fact, that this company do not take mail at this number any more, not occupied by party addressed, and return your letter bill and all. We have had experience so we don't bite very often, but was landed a couple of times the past year. Once by a mail order garment company, of Minneapolis, and once by a Chicago Company that advertises to pay a big salery to anyone that will address Jos A. Alexander, with [illegible] Look out for Alexander—I—s the hook well busited, but [illegible] covers a needle pointed.

George Eliot's Savonarola.

Savonarola is one of the most striking characters in George Eliot's great historical novel "Romola," the scene of which is in Florence and the period that of Savonarola's career. The idea of writing the book occurred to the novelist while on a visit to Florence, and on a second visit to the city, in 1861, she began to carry out her project. The subject and design were foreign to the author's genius, but she spared no pains in making a thorough study of the locality, the people and the literature of the Italian renaissance for the purpose of her story. In her own words, the work "plowed into her" more than any of her books. She began it, she says, a young woman and finished it as an old woman. For picture of Florence and Savonarola in Romola's environment, and some critic deems "Romola" to be George Eliot's masterpiece, and the character of Savonarola one of the most [illegible] in literature.

The Spectre Of The Swamp.

A man returning from the lumber woods last week, by way of Red Lake Agency says, the story of the "Spectre of the swamp" is being revived among the Indians I visited near the outlet of Red Lake. The story as told by them is as follows: Along in the early 80-s lumberman hired a crew of men to bring down a big drive of logs from the lake to Thief River Falls. Among the crew was a swede, a new comer that hired out to get a job that knew nothing about driving logs, but as he was a man of good revenge and powerful frame the foreman readily accepted him as one of the crew, without asking him if he had ever done this kind of work.

On the upper Red Lake river there is miles of water where the the log driver must decend on his ability to stay on the logs, or he will be in the river, as the banks are nothing but a quagmire, and as the newcomer was not used to this work he would fall in so often that it took up a goodeal of the older drivers time pulling him out, which made the foreman so disgusted that he gave the new comer his time and told to get out of the crew. He started for Thief River Falls the next morning and that was the last that was ever seen or heard of him, as his time check was not presented for payment, and it is believed that he was devoured by wolves, or sank to a watery grave in some of the big swamps, near the head waters of the Red Lake River Now the Indians claim that after a long cold spell of weather in winter, or a bad rainy spell in summer they hear those terrible unearthly cries, coming from the depths of the swamp and then they make the rounds, for the next scared hostile foe. Others say they have seen his shadow crossing the swamps at terrible speed, and putting out one of those blood curdling yells at every jump, and was about ten feet tall, and they had measured some of his tracks and found that he had taken strides from 30 to 35 feet in length

We understand that the Indians are trying to capture the shadow and any further developments in the strange story will be published.

Iron in Them.

It is often said that there is iron enough in the system of an ordinary man to make a plowshare. The statement is exceedingly wide of the truth. The amount of iron contained in the normal tissues of a man weighing 150 pounds is about 100 grains, or a quarter of an ounce. Yet so important is even this small amount to the system that a difference of a few grains more or less may produce serious constitutional disturbance.

A Dilemma.

"Then, Maurice, tomorrow I will come with my wife to see you both."

"Delighted! But look here. Tell your wife not to wear her new diamond earrings or my wife will at once want a pair."

"Oh, the mischief! And my wife was only coming for the purpose of showing them off."—Il Diavolo Rosa.

M. O. in Chicago as Quad as Caesar.

One of the most remarkable reversals of public opinion on record is that which has taken place in Chicago in the past year in the matter of municipal ownership and operation. The municipal ownership theory, which a little more than a year ago flourished here with so much vigor as to attract the attention of the entire civilized world, is now the decdent duck in the pond. Apparently nobody believes in it any longer. Certainly nobody ever talks any more about it.—Chicago Journal

Persian Justice.

Professor Williams Jackson tells in his "Persia Past and Present" some stories illustrating character in the land of Omar Khayyam. One is of a man who, suffering from inflamed eyes, went to a horse doctor for treatment. The veterinary gave him some of the salve that he used on animals, and the man lost his eyesight. He then brought suit in court to recover damages. The judge, after weighing the evidence in the case, handed down his decision as follows: "There are no damages to be recovered. The man would never have gone to a veterinary if he had not been an ass!"

Safest Place in Trains.

"If you are on rule for the family when they travel," said the conductor of the suburban train, "and that is for them never to ride in the rear coach or the first one end, preferably, not in the coach next to the locomotive. The reason for it is so obvious that I should think the foremost and last cars of a train would have scant patronage from anybody who reads of railroad accidents. If there is a smashup, those are the coaches that suffer. It seems strange that some kind of a buffer is not put behind the locomotive tender and at the rear of the train. How many lives would be saved by a device of the kind one has only to study the statistics of railroad accidents to figure out for himself."—New York Press

Red Lake Falls Gazette: Coun ty Attorney Germo was called to Thief River Falls yesterday, as he presumed on a criminal case, but when he got there he found there was nothing to it. It appears that a party at Thief River owed a liverymant some money for livery hire, and was unable to pay. The liverymait had him arrested and attemted to make the county attorney's office a collection agency by charging the debor with fraud.

The fellow expressed a willingness to pay, but couldn't do it just now, so there was no grounds for holding him in a criminal action and the case was dismissed.

Was A Family Row.

Particulars have just been learned here of a family row a short distance east of High Landing, on Monday morning last, which might have terminated fataly for one of the precipitants. It appears that a quarrel was being had between the man and his wife, as to which one should milk the cows during the cold weather, and while the poor woman was grinding the coffee for breakfast she grabbed the ax, which he had been warming by the kitchen fire,—and going out to the wood pile he chopped enough wood to last all day, before he eat his breakfast.

There will be a boat meeting at the High Landing school house tomorrow afternoon at 1 o'clock.

Remember the ball at the Radney hall tomorrow night.

A Lesson Instead.

"Do you know," a pretty bride of three months said to a friend the other day, "I think all these jokes about young wives having so much trouble with butchers and grocers and being cheated and all that is just too foolish."

"Then I presume you are getting on all right with yours, dear?" her friend inquired.

"Why, of course I am! Anybody would if they would just deal in a reliable place," the young wife declared. "Now, there is my grocer," she continued; "he is just as obliging and thoughtful as can be. The other day I ordered a dozen oranges, and when they came I found there were but eleven in the bag, so when I went to the store again I told him so.

"'Why, yes, ma'am,' he said, 'I know there were. I had put in a dozen, but I noticed that one of them was spoiled and of course I wouldn't send you any but the best goods, so I took it out.'

"Now, don't you think that was nice in him to be so thoughtful and honest?" she concluded.—Harper's Weekly.

Marriages In Bible Times.

From the Bible accounts of the marriages of Jacob with Leah and Rebecca and from other narratives of marriages in Jewish history it seems that marriage was not held to be a sacrament or religious rite in the times of the patriarchs. In those days the head of the family, the father, was priest and ruler of the family and the only priest or ruler whose authority it recognized. As far as we learn from the Bible narrative in the case of Jacob's marriages, the simple giving of his daughters by Isaac constituted the marriage, there being no religious or other ceremony whatever. Of course, however, marriages made in this way were just as sacred and just as binding as those performed in the most ceremonious manner in these days in Protestant countries the marriage laws do not look upon marriage as a sacrament, but only as a civil contract, though most people prefer to give it a certain religious sanction by having it performed by a church minister.—St. Louis Republic.

David Hume and his Wife.

A peculiar bequest of David Hume to his friend Clerot still further enforces the Hume liked Clerot and disliked port, calling it poison, and the two friends had many discussions on the subject. They also used to have disputes as to which of them took the proper way of spoiling their common family meal. The philosopher, about it fortnight before his death, wrote with his own hand the following codicil to his will: "I leave to my friend, Mr. John Hoins of Kilduff, ten dozen of my old claret of the second and one single bottle of that liquor called Port. I also leave him six dozen of port provided that he attests under his hand, signed John Hume, that he himself alone finished that bottle at two sittings. By this bequeathal he will at once terminate the only two differences that ever arose between us concerning temporal matters."—New York Tribune.

Singing in the Ears.

"Singing in the ears is a most peculiar condition. It is interesting to learn that, though the brain so distinctly conveys the impression of sound, there is really no sound at all. The sensation is produced by derangement of the nerves of hearing. Caused by poor circulation or such pressure and interference as some food. Indulged, excessive use of coffee, etc. Some one lately remarked that when the ears were ringing they were "intense." Truly, they carry wrong impressions to the brain. They feeeld things that do not happen.

A Precise Absolute.

"Lawyers are supposed to use the most literal mental meat," said an Ienhem member of the bar, "but every now and then officials of colleges of learning will encounter witnesses who can give them points in the matter of literal answers. An irishman was failed to testify in a damage suit arising out of the death of a man at the hands of a bull, so to speak.

"'Are we to understand, sir,' asked the prosecuting attorney, 'that the deceased, Patrick Flanigan, was your father?'

"'He was in the bull killed him, but the rist of his name was Mike.'"

Rare Ben Jonson.

The epitaph, "O Rare Ben Jonson," engraved on the tablet marking the burial place of the celebrated playwright in the "poets' corner," Westminster abbey, is said to have been inated with Jack Young afterward knighted, who, "walking there when the grave was covering, gave the fellow 18 pence to cut it." Dr. Brewer in his "Phrase and Fable" says Shakespeare called Jonson "rare Ben," but does not say where. According to Chambers' "Book of Days," the phrase formed the concluding words of the verses written and displayed in the clubroom of Ben's clique at the famous Mermaid tavern. The epithet "Rare Ben Jonson" is said to have been first uttered after the appearance of his highly successful farce, "Bartholomew Fair." The epitaph has been copied once at least. When Sir William Davenant was interred in Westminster abbey the inscription on his covering stone was "O Rare Sir William Davenant."

Deception of Wild Birds.

Falconers-having the largest species-can compress their features and look very thin if they think it necessary to do so. As to the owls, they can blunt into any position they think most suitable. It is useless to look for these self preserving traits in any of the fauntic kept in zoological collections, for the birds are so accustomed to see large numbers of people passing and repassing or standing in front of them that they treat the whole matter with perfect indifference. They know that at a certain time their food will be brought to them and that they are otherwise perfectly safe. The ptarmigan in a wild state have a bloom on their plumage. The fine bloom on a bunch of grapes, which is lost so often soon when in captivity.

A Train for Tyler.

During Mr. Tyler's incumbency as the presidential office he ordered to make an excursion in some direction and sent his son Bob to arrange for a special train. It happened that the railroad superintendent was a strong Whig. As such he had no favors to bestow on the president nun himself. Bob that his fond did not run any special trains for the president. "What!" said Bob. "Did you not furnish a special train for the funeral of President Harrison?" "Yes," said his superintendent, "and I was severing your father in that condition you shall have the best train on the road."

A Central Clock!

The famous timepieces or watch clock of Canton is housed in a temple on the city walls. Three big earthen jars in successive shelves and a fourth and lowest one filled with a wooden cover constitute the whole timepiece. The water descends by slow drops from one jar to another, the lowest one of 4 feet in the last jar filling the hours as it rises. Every afternoon at 2 o'clock since last at 2 the lowest jar has been emptied; the upper one filled and the clock thus wound up for another day.

A Native African Food.

The native food of the Matanda country, in southern Africa, consists of manioc and that alone. It is a plant particularly adapted to wet, marshy soil, says the author of "Through Africa Portsmouth." It takes two years to arrive at maturity and while growing requires very little attention. The root when full grown is about the size and has very much the appearance of a Germain sausage, although it tapers it grows much larger. One shrub has several roots and the investigator has on three of them very inquire the severity of the remainder. When newly dig it tastes like a chestnut and the digestion of the proverbial ostrich can alone assimilate it raw, but when cooked in water for a few days until fully decomposed, dried on the roofs of the huts and stamped it forms a substantial white soft meal, far whiter and purer than the best flour. Then it is beaten into a thick paste and baked with a little savoury seasoning of a locust or a caterpillar, which fill natives seek in deserted trees. Another way of eating this useful luxury is by baking the roots after soaking them and eating it as you would a turnip.

Why the Devil Has Cloven Hoofs.

Legends of the devil are quite common in Ireland, but the one which is most interesting and least known perhaps is that which tells why the prince of the infernal regions has split hoofs, like those of a cow beast. Moore alludes to the legend in his story of St. Kevin and Kathleen at Glendalough. In that story he makes St. Kevin throw his former ladylove over the cliff in order to get rid of her importunities, but the records of the Clouds lough district give the story a more pedestal touch. They insist that it was not Kathleen that was thrown over the cliff, but that it was Satan, who had assumed the form of the lady in order to tempt the saint. The moment the prince of evil toppled over the edge of the yawning abyss he spread his batlike wings and sailed away in safety, much to the surprise of the holy saint. Later on the devil again attempted to lay a snare for St. Kevin, but the saint managed to get the arch fiend on holy ground, where, of course, he was helpless. While the devil was in this helpless condition Kevin caved off his legs and attached cows' hoofs to the stumps. Since that day Satan has been cloven footed and will be until the end of time.

Echoes and Architects.

"It is possible to make echoes," said an architect. "It is, indeed, easier to make than to destroy them. In the past men built their great temples and theatres with no thought of acoustics, hence when the preacher preached or the actor declaimed their voices rolled freely amid the grotesques of the roof, down the rows of sculptured columns and round and round the nave. With wires strung here and with tapestries spread there, many of the echoes of the old world buildings have been obliterated. There are echo experts—builders acquainted with the science of acoustics whose specialty is echoes' destruction. Sometimes their cures are hard. Today an architect takes the echo in the echo. His building is constructed so as to exclude this fantastic sound. Another how to exclude it he knows how to welcome it also. I have frequently in Saratoga seen a man put up stalwart horses and enfeavored rocks so as to create an echo there."—Boston Herald.

Plagiarism.

Plagiarism, in politics and rubberised, is not of modern origin. In the middle ages ridicule and not physical suffering was the punishment employed for the detection of writers—for, beside the pillory, the stocks and the thews—a skull was often set on the head of the culprit, in which women generally scolds, were brought to a sweet resemblance—but the whipping post belongs to the Tudor age. The Elizabethan servant question was met by forcing girls for idleness on Sunday morning. But it was in the Hanoverian period that flogging was carried to excess. As late as 1804 six women were publicly flogged in Gulldcester, England, because they had been found shoeless.

The Revolver.

The revolver is of dubious service in war. Its only function there is as a defensive weapon. Indeed, it is the evolution of the mediaeval purpose to provide bitter soldiers with a firearm. In the cavalry the weapon is effective only up to fifty yards. It has no value for hunting. The average man can do more execution on birds and beasts with a shotgun. The only purpose which the revolver serves is to kill men at close range. For that purpose its usefulness is overestimated.—New York Mail.

It Couldn't Be.

Henri Farrer quotes Tricoche as having related to him the remark of a former who, after hearing a fire shot whistle, exclaimed: "Oh, my good president, consoled his wife by saying: "Never mind, Sally; that flint is not for us." "No dumbfoundum comfort stand it."

America's Pitiable.

America has little of the ecclesiastic sanctity of England, intellectual profundity of Germany or social finesse of France.—C. H. Wilkins in Atlantic.

An Arabian League.

The Arabians had a tradition that when the devil started forth from his home in hell to go to the earth he was the lazy to walk and became all the animals, one after another, to carry him. The camel refused first, but the devil struck him a thundering lick of the fiery lash and carried him the rest of the way. It is known now that, had after the experiences of the devil's every into the garden became apparent that they were domesticated to look up his enemies and punish it, so stocked out on its legs, and it was allowed forever after to travel about as best it could fat on the ground.

Where the Audience Was.

A London actor applying at a cheap theater in Salford found so small an audience that he sought out the manager for an explanation. "You see," the manager told him, "my people are of the finite concert." "Oh," the actor said, surprised, "I should hardly have thought your patrons would care much for high class music." "No," the other explained, "it isn't the truth, they go to pick pockets."

Size of Head.

The average adult head has 6 circumferences of fully twenty-two inches. The average adult hat is fully six and three-quarters size. The sizes of men's hats are six and three-fourths and six and seven-eighths generally. "Sevens" hats are common in Aberdeen, and the noddocks of our colleges generally wear seven and one-eighth to eight sizes. Sizes of wearing hats of the sizes six and three-quarters and smaller or below less than twenty-one inches in circumference can never be powerful. Between fourteen and twenty inches in circumference heads are invariably very weak and, according to this authority, two boys should think of marrying a man with a head less than twenty inches in circumference. Persons with heads under fifteen inches are mentally deficient and with heads under eighteen inches invariably idiotic.—London Young Woman.

A LOTTERY PRIZE

By R. ARTHUR

(Copyright, 1906, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

One afternoon, on getting home from the office, I found May waiting at the door in a state of intense excitement.

"Fred!" she screamed, before I got to the gate, "where is that ticket?"

"What on earth is the matter?" I asked.

"Oh, you have lost it! I know you have! And I shall never get anything again I wanted so much."

As she seemed about to dissolve into tears I made a dash up the steps. I have scenes above all things, and I felt instinctively that our neighbor, Mrs. Markey, was peeping at us from behind the curtains next door.

"Now dear," I began, when I had closed the door, "you mustn't excite your-elf, you know you mustn't."

"But Fred," she sobbed, "we've won a prize—a magnificent mahogany suite; but we won't get it now you've lost the ticket."

I suddenly remembered. In spite of our suspicions May had bought a ticket in the grand Hibernian Lodge lottery, and the suite she talked about must be the second prize. I ran into the dining-room, and a few minutes' search unearthed a flaring red ticket.

After the first joy of gaining some of the expense of other people, the question arose, what was to be done. Our house of five rooms and a bath was fully furnished. The furniture meant my savings for two years before our marriage. We really had no need for anything else. I timidly suggested that we should try and get the suite changed into money. May turned on me with a fine scorn in her eye.

"You never want to have things look like that," she cried. "Why we have nothing decent in the house."

This was rather hard on the furniture I had given up cigars and the theater for. But it doesn't do to argue with May. So it was soon settled, and that evening we proceeded to the Metropolitan furnishing store to view the suite. The sight of it made my heart sink. It would have dede for a palace. May was in raptures.

She hurried me home, and we were soon in our room arranging where the things should be put. Our room was 11 feet square. It had one small window and a fireplace. And even with the modest furniture in it there was hardly space to move about. But the matter presented no difficulties to May.

"The wardrobe will stand here nicely; and the washstand there, Freddie," she said. (She always called me Freddie when pleased). "And the dressing-table will fit in beautifully between the windows."

I had no doubts, but said nothing. There was little breakfast next morning, for May and the girl had been engaged from daybreak in clearing out the old suite and devising places to store it away. She scouted my idea that we might sell it, and said it would do for the spare room when we got one.

When I arrived home at three o'clock I found the van already at the door and a small crowd of onlookers around it. May was standing, flushed and excited at the gate.

"Oh, Fred, what shall we do?" she cried; they can't get the wardrobe in."

As it was, there were four men on each corner sideways wrestling with the washstand and using the profanest language. They had smashed the lamp by the hall, and the plaster all along the stairway showed like a cornfield.

By some miracle of handling, known only to furniture men, they negotiated the turning, and the washstand had reached its destination. That was the top landing. The men tried coaxing and violence, tilted it on end, ramm-ed it at the bedroom door in all sorts of impossible angles, but it would not be put through. So it was left where it was.

We held a hurried consultation in the garden over the fate of the wardrobe. It was out of the question to attempt the stairs with it. The head furniture man announced that it would have to be hoisted in by the window. As the apparatus to do this was not at hand, it was left all night in the garden covered by a tarpaulin.

May was in ecstasy. She had seen Mrs. Markey's face, green with envy, at the window.

In the morning we were invaded early by a gang of men with ropes and pulleys, and the wardrobe was soon dangling between heaven and earth. All the people in the street were at their windows, for the man directing the operation had a voice like a foghorn.

What an idiot the fellow was! It had never struck him to use his measuring tape. When the wardrobe was got up to the balcony, it would go no more go through the window than the washstand through the door. So it had to be lowered over again. May was half crylog with vexation.

"Bring it into the dining-room," she said; "we will make that our room, Fred, and have meals upstairs."

Mrs. Markey and her husband were enjoying it immensely. I could have strangled them.

I ordered the men to bring the thing in by the front door, and caught one of them winking at the other, as he said: "All right, guvnor."

Of course the thing drew up in the hall, and refused to budge. I might have known it. It was lucky the door could shut.

I gulped down some tea that had been made an hour before, filled at a chop that had been cooked at the same time, and went off to town in a rage.

At dinner that evening May was unusually affectionate. And she looked so pretty that I ground down my hatred of the suite as unworthy of the husband of so adorable a wife.

She was wanting to say something, and it came out at last.

"Darling, we must have a new carpet for our room."

"A new carpet!" I cried; "what is wrong with the one we have?"

"Oh, you know well enough how shabby it is. And Mrs. Wright was saying to-day, that we must really have one to match the suite.

"Anything else?" I inquired grimly.

"Oh, she knows a place where we can get a set for the washstand for almost nothing."

"But, my dear girl," I expostulated, "what would be the use of it? We can't perform our ablutions on the stairs."

"I wish you would not try to be sarcastic," said my wife, with dignity; "it does not suit you."

"Neither does the suite," I joked feebly.

May withered me with a glance.

In two or three minutes I was

Sha Was Wanting to Say Something.

routed horse and foot, and had to surrender unconditionally and May was mumbling down my hair by calling me "her own boy."

A week passed. I grew quite expert in the various ways of getting to bed and learnt to a nicety the course to be steered round the wardrobe.

But May was not happy. The position of the wardrobe and the washstand, which latter it was using to store my collars and shirts on, was a daily heartbreak to her. She grew silent and listless, and I cursed the day that brought that ticket into my possession.

Once evening, at last, the burden seemed to have been lifted. After a good deal of dissembling talk she announced carelessly that she had been out all day looking for another house, and had almost decided on one.

It was a gloomy-looking house in a side street, a house only fit for dying in. But the rooms were immense, and I saw at once that was the attraction for my wife.

The suite would be in its glory in the big bedroom, though I chuckled to myself how the other furniture would look. We moved in at the end of the month, washstand, wardrobe and all.

We had meals in a dining-room whose vastness was accentuated by our small table and sideboard which rose as islands in this ocean of bareness. Our oleographs, which had passed for oil-paintings in the old house, now gave the finishing touch to the ridiculous in our Gigantic hall. And the new bedroom carpet served as a rug in the suite room.

But May was at peace. The light had come back to her eyes. I was beginning to settle down under the new regime when the end came.

One day I got a telegram at the office from May. It said, "Come at once." I was seized with a horrible fear that something had happened to my darling.

There was nearly a collision at the street corner with a furniture-van, which bore something which gleamed and glittered in the sunlight. The flower bed by the garden path was trodden down, and the door had been a fight over it. The front door was open. I rushed in, and then, as I heard loud sobs upstairs, flew to the bedroom. May was lying on the bed weeping and refusing to be comforted by the maid—and the suite was gone.

We are back now in the old house, and there is another inmate who has replaced the suite in May's affection. I admire him very much, too, but he has a reprehensible habit of turning night into day, and insisting that some one else should keep him company.

The reason for the disappearance of the suite was that the treasurer of the Hibernian Lottery had absconded without paying for any of the prizes, and so the furnishing store had sent down for their suite. It was altogether illegal, and could have brought them into serious trouble. But I did not tell May this

PROFSSOR HAD LAST LAUGH.

Final Erasure Neatly Turned Joke on Students.

President Hadley, of Yale, was talking about his student days. "I remember a stately and venerable professor," he said, "upon whom some sophomores once tried to play a trick.

"The professor, one morning, being unable to attend to the class on account of a cold, wrote on the blackboard:

"Mr. Dash, through indisposition, is unable to attend to his classes to-day.'

"The students erased one letter in this notice, making it read:

"'Dr. Dash, through indisposition, is unable to attend to his lasses to-day.'

"But it happened a few minutes later that the professor returned for a box he had forgotten. Amid a roar of laughter he detected the change in his notice, and, approaching the blackboard calmly erased one letter in his turn.

"Now the notice read:

"'Dr. Dash, through indisposition, is unable to attend to he asses to-day.'"

"Speaking of endless chain prayer that is going the rounds," said the woman with the cheerful voice, "I can't see what good that can do, unless, maybe, it might start some poor wretch on the road to glory, but I got an awful lot of silly petticoat through an endless chain once. The manufacturers sent letters asking for five names and a two-cent piece. I sent five names and the ten-cent piece, not thinking much about it, just trying it and it wasn't long before they sent me this lovely silk petticoat. It was the nicest sort of silk, too. As long as I wore it it didn't crock."

Caution.

Imitations have been placed upon the market so closely resembling Allcock's Plasters in general appearance as to be well calculated to deceive. Remember that Allcock's are the original and only genuine porous plasters—the best external remedy known—and when purchasing plasters the only safe way is to always insist upon having Allcock's.

Universal Atmosphere.
The Swedish savant Ryberg has suggested that the discovery of the element metargon in the air strengthens the theory of the existence of a universal atmosphere extending between the planets and throughout the solar system. "No, sir, I've just come out," said the farmer, decidedly. "Mr. Evarts is talking in there."

"What about?" asked the stranger.

"Well, he didn't say," the farmer answered, passing a knotted hand across his forehead.—Youth's Companion.

CHINESE HAD FIRST ZOO.

Institution of Menageries Was Due to Two Incentives.

The Chinese had the first zoo. Menageries are thought to owe their origin partly to the cult of sacred animals and partly to the ambition of rulers to possess specimens of rare and valuable creatures from foreign lands or savage haunts from their own. In the simplest forms zoological gardens were one of the earliest developments of culture, and were familiar to the Chinese, Indians, Greeks, Romans, and pre-Spanish Mexicans in ancient times. The oldest recorded menagerie is Chinese, dating from 1150 B. C. The deer of Imus kept by Darius, as described in the book of Daniel, is an example of one of those primitive menageries, while the cult of sacred white horses by the ancient Greeks and Romans and that of so-called white elephants in Burma and Siam are instances of a second type. A five giraffe was received at the menagerie of Schoenbrunn as early as 1838.

NERVOUS HEADACHES

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Will Cure Most Cases and Should Interest Every Sufferer.

Nobody who has not endured the suffering caused by nervous headache can realize the awful agony of its victims. Worst of all, the ordinary treatment cannot be relied upon to cure nor even to give relief. Some doctors will say that if a person is subject to these headaches there is nothing that can be done to prevent their recurrence.

Nervous headaches, as well as neuralgia, are caused by lack of nutrition —the nerves are starved. The only way to feed the nerves is through the blood and it is in this way that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have accomplished so many remarkable cures.

Mrs. Addie Merrill, of 39 Union Street, Auburn, Me., says: "For years I suffered from nervous headaches, which would come on me every five or six weeks and continue for several days. The pain was so severe that I would be obliged to go to bed for three or four days each time. It was particularly intense over my right eye. I tried medicines but got no relief. I had no appetite and when the headache passed away I felt as if I had been sick for a month. My blood was thin and I was pale, weak and reduced in weight.

"I read about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in a paper and decided to try them. I first noticed that they began to give me an appetite and I commenced to gain in weight and color. My headaches stopped and have not returned and I have never felt so well as I do now."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50 by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

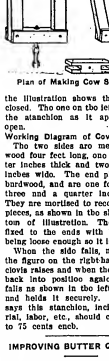
THE CANADIAN WEST IS THE BEST WEST

FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Some of the Advantages

The phenomenal increase in railway mileage, bank clearings, immigration and land values, are but a few of the many striking evidences of the growth and prosperity of Western Canada. Over 200,000 people went there last year (the majority of them from the United States), and secured 4,000,000 acres of the finest wheat growing lands in the world at $10 per acre. Many made from 20 to 50 per cent profit on their investment the first year. Over 12,000 new schools were established, and the standard of education is unsurpassed. Splendid climate, railway facilities unexcelled, markets unlimited. Write for pamphlet, rates, etc., to Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to the Canadian Government Agent, Wm. Pierce, 125 Jackson Street, St. Paul, Minn. Also authorized Canadian Government Agent, C. J. Broughton, Room 2, Bee Building, Omaha, Neb. Mention this paper.



THE DAIRY

HOME-MADE COW STANCHION.

Direction for Their Construction—Are Easily Made.

F. G. Semple, a Canadian farmer, furnishes Farm and Fireside with his plan of making cow stanchions. He says he has used both chains and the old stationary stanchion, but has come to consider his plan superior to either of them. The figure at the right in the illustration shows the stanchion closed. The one on the left represents the stanchion as it appears when open.

Plan of Making Cow Stanchion.

Working Diagram of Cow Stanchion.

The two sides are made of hardwood four feet long, one and a quarter inches thick and two and a half inches wide. The end pieces are of hardwood, and are one foot long and three and a quarter inches square. They are mortised to receive the side pieces, as shown in the sketch at bottom of illustration. The sides are fixed to the ends with bolts, which being loose enough so it is movable.

When the side falls, as shown on the figure on the right-hand side, the clevis raises and when the side comes back into position again the clevis falls as shown in the left-hand figure and holds it securely. Mr. Semple says this stanchion, including material, labor, etc., should cost from 60 to 75 cents each.

IMPROVING BUTTER QUALITIES.

Many Ways in Which a Better Quality of Milk and Cream Can Be Produced.

The dairyman and farm-wife, who often find the butter quality injured, might keep in mind this list of ways by which the injury can be done:

By using improper vessels for holding the milk when milking.

By using milk too soon after the birth of the calf, or up to the birth of the calf.

By failure to properly wash and scald and sterilize all vessels comin contact with milk.

By giving the cows bad water and having a disagreeable odor or an unhealthy quality.

By allowing the cows to wallow in the mud or in water in the summer, thereby coating the udder with dirt containing noxious germs which cause the udder through the teat and abide there for long periods.

By neglecting the surroundings of the stable—allowing the manure to rot in the immediate vicinity or permitting a mud hole before the stable door or about the water trough.

By milking in dirty air, or into dirty pails, or with dirty hands, or without properly cleaning and moistening the sides and udder of the cow; by cleaning out the stables just before milking, or stirring up a dust in the stable, or by feeding the cows roots or silage or even grain before milking. It would be easy to observo any of these rules.

Apples Good for Cows.

Apples will not injure or dry up cows if fed in regular quantities. At first they must be fed a few only at a meal, and the amount steadily increased. The same with cider pomace. Horses may be given one or two quarts daily, with benefit, says Farm Journal. A large feed makes horses soft and causes them to sweat and lather easily. Apples in moderate quantities are a benefit to bowels and kidneys.

The Barnyard.

Mud, manure, and a mixture of both are found during a rainy spell in almost every farmer's barnyard. The cows have the run of the yard and it is no wonder they become filthy. When their bodies are filthy it is next to impossible for the milk to be clean.

Helps the Churning.

In some cases where cows have been milking for a long time, there is some difficulty in churning. The addition of one or two fresh cows in the milking herd will often overcome the difficulty.

Get the Most Out of Cows.

Are your cows only grades? Make the most of them. Feed them well, care for them as well as you would thoroughbreds and improve your herd as fast as you can.

THE WHITE PLAGUE

SYSTEMATIC WARFARE WAGED TO WIPE OUT CONSUMPTION.

Warning That Intemperance Increases the Liability to Contract Disease —Neglected Colds a Prolific Source.

Organized effort is now being made throughout the United Stated to fight consumption. A warning is given against intemperate habits, which increase the liability to consumption, while the public places is deprecated, as the disease is frequently contracted from dried sputum.

Colds should not be neglected, as they leave the lungs in a peculiarly receptive condition for the tuberculor germ. The following simple formula will break up a cold in twenty-four hours. A leading authority on lung trouble says that when prepared from pure ingredients, it will cure any cough that is curable.

Take half ounce Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure); two ounces glycerine and half pint good whisky. Shake well and use in teaspoonful doses every four hours.

The ingredients can be secured from any good prescription druggist at small cost, and to avoid substitution should be purchased separately and mixed in your own home.

Virgin Oil of Pine (Puro) is put up in buff-ounce vials for dispensing. Each vial is securely sealed in a round wooden case, with engraved wrepper, with the name—Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure), prepared only by Leach Chemical Co., Cincinnati, O.—plainly printed thereon. There are many rank imitations of Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure), which are put out under various names, such as Concentreted Oil of Pine, Pine Balsam, etc. Never accept these as a substitute for the Pure Virgin Oil of Pine, as they will inverishly produce nausea and never effect the desired result.

Thinks Little of Chinese Army.

Dr. Morrison, the well-known correspondent of the London Times at Pekin, went to see the recent maneuvers of the modernized Chinese army in the neighborhood of Cheng-to-fu. He describes them as a repetition of the performence of 1905—a set piece carefully prepared long beforehand by a number of Japanese advisers. The inefficiency of thn officers is still conspicuous and the field training of the men inadequate, but the material is good. Dr. Morrison hints that without Japanese officers to direct affairs the contending armies would have been little better than a rabble.

State Prison Makes Money.

The Connecticut state prison for the fiscal year ended September 30, 1905, established a new record of revenues. Earnings from productive labor aggregated $57,411, while receipts from various other sources swelled the total income to $61,016. This showing, representing nearly 74 per cent. of the operating expenses of the institution, surpasses the income exhibit of any previous year, and enabled the prison management, despite the high cost of supplies, to limit to $22,861 its drafts upon the state treasury.

Where It Really Does Rain.

There is one man in San Francisco who is not fooled by the rain. He is F. S. Morris, of Portland, who is at the imperial. Morris came in dripping with water yesterday afternoon, and somebody remarked: "Gracious, isn't this rain a-right?" "Naw, nothing mild," replied the man from Portland. "You just ought to live in my country. Why, at home," and the Oregonian swelled with pride, "in my country the rain falls so fast that the rivers frequently fill up two feet above their banks."—San Francisco Chronicle.

MAY BE COFFEE

That Causes all the Trouble.

When the house is afire, it's like a body when disease begins to show, it's no timo to talk but time to act—delay is dangerous—remove the cause of the trouble at once.

"For a number of years," says a Kansas lady, "I felt sure that coffee was hurting me, and yet, I was so fond of it, I could not give it up. I paltered with my appetite and of course yielded to the temptation to drink more. At last I got so bad that I made up my mind I must either quit the use of coffee or die.

"Everything I ate distressed me, and I suffered severely almost all the time with palpitation of the heart. I frequently woke np in the night with the feeling that I was almost gone,—my heart seemed to smothered and weak in its action that I feared it would stop beating. My breath grew short and the least exertion set me to panting. I slept bit little, and suffered from rheumatism.

"Two years ago I stopped using the old kind of coffee and began to use Postum Food Coffee, and from the very first I began to improve. It worked a miracle! Now I can eat anything and digest it without trouble. I sleep like a baby, and my heart beats full, strong and easily. My breathing has become steady and normal, and my rheumatism has left me. I feel like another person, and it is all due to quitting coffee and using Postum Food Coffee, for I haven't used any medicine and nona would have done any good as long as I kept drugging with coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. "There's a Reason." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. All grocers.

His Practical Idea.

A benevolent old man who lived on his farm in Iowa never refused shelter to any who might ask it of him. His many friends remonstrated with him about this characteristic, knowing that many unscrupulous bobos would avail themselves of the opportunity, and that they was great danger of the old man being robbed. To these remonstrances the old man replied that he believed in "practical Christianity."

"But," said one of his friends, "this seems very impractical. Suppose one of these men took it into his head to rob you one night?"

"My dear young friend," was the reply, "I did all enter in the name of God, but I prove my belief in practical Christianity by locking up thin pants during the night."

FEARFUL BURNING SORES.

Boy in Misery 12 Years—Eczema in Rough Scales, Itching and Inflamed—Cured by Cuticura.

"I wish to inform you that your wonderful Cuticura has put a stop to twelve years of misery I passed with my son. As an infant I noticed on his body a red spot and treated same with different remedies for about five years, but when the spot began to get larger I put him under the care of doctors. Under their treatment the disease spread to four different parts of his body. The longer the doctors treated him the worse it became. During the day it would get rough and form like scales. At night it would be cracked, inflamed, and badly swollen, with terrible burning and itching. When I think of his suffering, it nearly breaks my heart. His screams could be heard downstairs. The suffering of my son made me full of misery. I had no ambition to work, to eat, nor could I sleep. One doctor told, me that my son's eczema was incurable, and gave it up for a bad job. One evening I saw an article in the paper about the wonderful Cuticura and decided to give it a trial. I tell you that Cuticura Ointment is worth its weight in gold, and when I had used the first box of Ointment there was a great improvement, and by the time I had used the second set of Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Resolvent, my child was cured. He is now twelve years old, and his skin is as fine and smooth as silk. Mrs. Minnie Steinman, 7 Sumner Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., April 16, 1905."

Ownership of National Banks.

The ownership of the national banks of the United States is not in the hands of the rich few, as is commonly supposed, because fully one-half of the banks have a capital of less than $100,000 each. Twelve per cent. have capitalizations of from $100,000 to $250,000, while about seven per cent. range between $250,000 and $1,000,000.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and up to the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced local remedies and prescribed wash, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., is the only Catarrh remedy now on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address:

MOTHERHOOD

MRS. JAMES CHESTER

The first requisite of a good mother is good health, and the experience of maternity should not be approached without careful physical preparation, as a woman who is in good physical condition transmits to her children the blessing of a good constitution.

Preparation for healthy maternity is accomplished by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made from native roots and herbs, more successfully than by any other medicine because it gives tone and strength to the entire feminine organism, curing inflammation, ulceration and inflammation, and the result is less suffering and more children healthy at birth. For more than thirty years has been the standby of American mothers in preparing for childbirth.

Notice Mrs. James Chester, of 427 W. 35th St., New York says in this letter:—Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—I wish every expectant mother knew about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. A neighbor who had learned of its great value at this trying period of a woman's life urged me to try it and I did so, and I cannot say enough in regard to it. I did not suffer quickly and am in the best of health now."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is certainly a successful remedy for the peculiar weaknesses and ailments of women.

It has cured almost every form of Female Complaints, Dragging Sensations, Weak Back, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation, Ulcerations and Organic Diseases of Woman and is invaluable in preparing for Childbirth and during the Change of Life.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free.

ON SECRET SERVICE

True Stories of Experiences in the State, War, Treasury and Postoffice Departments.

By COL. JASPER EWING BRADY
(Late Censor of Telegraphs and Chief Signal Officer, U. S. A., Santiago de Cuba.)

AN INSIDE CASE

Col. Cheney took down the telephone receiver in answer to a ring.

"Hello."

"Yes, this is Cheney."

"Oh, it's you, Van Cott. Sure thing. I'm glad you're in town. Come right up."

Ten minutes later Mr. Cornelius Van Cott, general superintendent of one of the large express companies, appeared in Cheney's office. Cheney and Van Cott were old friends.

"Well, what on earth brings you here, Van?" said Cheney, after shaking hands. "Whatever it is, I'm glad to see you. I'll put you up while you're in the city—"

"Hold on, Cheney, this is a business trip, not for pleasure."

"Wife with you?" interrupted Cheney, laughing.

"Stop your foolishness. I came here to see you personally—on business, understand—important business. You won't put me up, either, nor will you be here for a few days after I get through with you."

"Phew! It's the real thing, then." Cheney had a pretty good idea of the nature of the business. His detective service company had done a lot of valuable work for Van Cott's corporation, and whenever anything unusual happened Cheney was called upon to do the work necessary to solve the case. This, notwithstanding Van Cott's company had a pretty good secret service department of its own. The head of this department, John Coghlan, was a warm admirer of Cheney, personally, and he had no jealous feelings when Cheney was called in on a difficult case.

"It hasn't been in the papers, as yet, but I presume you know our St. Louis office was touched to the extent of $100,000 a few days since. The money disappeared as if by magic. It was checked in all right, and apparently checked out the same way, but when the package was opened by the consignee it was found to contain tissue paper."

"Who was the consignee?"

"Third National. It was a remittance from a Pacific coast bank. We put our own men to work on the case, and notified the St. Louis police. There hasn't been much progress made, and that's the reason I'm here. I want you to take the case—you, personally, understand."

"Suspect anyone at all?" asked Cheney, biting off the end of a cigar.

"No, not a soul. I've looked up the record of every man in the office, and they all appear good to me."

"Who receives the money in the St. Louis office; I mean large amounts?"

"Marc Catlin received this package."

"Catlin?" said Cheney, interrogatively. "Is that your president's name?"

"Yes, and Marc Catlin is his nephew. Oh, he's all right."

"How old?"

"About 38."

"Habits?"

"Good, now. About seven years ago he got mixed up financially. Thought he was a Napoleon of Wall street. Usual result—went broke and through bankruptcy. His uncle put him in the express business, and he has since done mighty good work. We are on the eve of promoting him to a better position."

"Anyone else around Catlin while this particular package was being handled?"

"There was another clerk, Daniels by name, but Catlin says the package wasn't out of his sight from the minute he received it until it was handed the bank messenger. And the bank messenger, by the way, was one of the assistant cashiers, who was sent down purposely by the president for this remittance. He brought another man with him, and the package was delivered to the bank as received."

"That's what the assistant cashier says, eh?"

"Yes, and that's true, all right, Cheney. The bank officer, Chadwick, and the other man, are well-known in society, financially well fixed, no bad habits. I've had them looked up. They didn't take it."

"You've certainly got a heap of mystery there, Van Cott. Who of the St. Louis force has been active on the case?"

"The chief gave me his best man, Lieut. Darrel, and he, in turn, has had several men working with him; but, apparently, they're up against a blank wall. Now, it's up to you, Cheney. Are you willing to take it?"

"Yes, I'll do it," replied Cheney. "Any other officer of the company know you were coming to me?"

"No, I'm the only one. You work it out, and your reward will be commensurate with the size of the case."

"Don't you worry about that, Van. I'll make my bill ample enough to suit all requirements." All through the conversation Cheney had assumed a spirit of raillery towards Van Cott, but underneath it all he was doing a lot of thinking, and his mind was quickly made up.

"Go back to St. Louis, Van Cott. Pursue your investigation and later you will hear from me. I'll be down that way before long and will see you later."

Van Cott took his leave and Cheney gave the case a great deal of thought that day. Miss Woods had been in an adjoining room and through a concealed speaking tube had heard every word of the conversation, had taken it down, and later gave Col. Cheney the transcribed report. He went over it very carefully and then filed it away properly briefed. A full record was kept of every case handled by Col. Cheney or his men. He came to the conclusion it was an "inside case," that is to say, the stealing was done by some one on the inside who was in the pay or power of an outsider or a gang. This was the theory on which he would work. First he wanted to find out what progress the St. Louis force was making. He wanted their theories and ideas. Already he knew the express company's side of the case. Cheney was a firm believer in cooperation, where the parts cooperating were harmonious. His relations with the police departments of the various cities were most cordial and when he appeared in Chief Landingham's office in St. Louis the next morning he was well received.

"What case are you on now, colonel?" asked the chief.

"That $100,000 express robbery," replied Cheney.

The chief was interested at once. "The express robbery, eh? Well, it's a damned puzzling case, Cheney, and I'm not sorry you're on it. You can depend on my cooperation."

"I know that, chief, and that's why I came to you. Who have you working on the case now? I mean actively?" Of course Cheney knew Darrel was doing the work, but he didn't want the chief to know he knew it.

"I put Darrell at work as soon as the express company notified me of the robbery. You know Darrel, don't you, Cheney?"

"Yes, I have heard of him. Has he made any progress?"

"Not much, although he's worked pretty hard."

"May I see his reports?" asked Cheney.

"Certainly," said the chief, handing Cheney a package of papers which were lying on his desk. "I've just been reading them."

"I'll want to study these papers awhile. May I take them to the hotel with me? I'll bring them back to you in the morning."

"All right, colonel; and if you want any further help, let me know."

Cheney walked to the old Planter's hotel, where he was very well known, went to his room and denied himself to everybody. Darrel's reports were spread out in front of him and he went over them several times, making a mental note here and there. The only item that stood out prominently was that a certain "Red" Michelon was in St. Louis the day the money disappeared, but he had not been seen there since. Darrel's theory was that Michelon was implicated in the robbery. Michelon was an all around high class crook. In a number of former robberies similar to this one he had played a prominent part and on two occasions had "done time" for his shortcomings. It was known that Michelon had confederates in several places who were ever ready to help him in his nefarious works. Cheney knew all this before he read Darrel's report, and the theory looked like a plausible one. Cheney also knew Michelon by sight and his photograph was in his Chicago Rogues' Gallery. Every police department in the country knew Michelon, and his movements were recorded and reported from time to time. The last Cheney had heard of him he was in New York and was keeping pretty well under cover. His health was reported as breaking down. These things caused Cheney to ponder deeply.

"Was Michelon really here on that day? Darrel said in his report he heard he was," Cheney asked himself.

"It won't be a hard matter to find out," he soliloquized. "This is Thursday. I ought to have an answer by Tuesday next. I'll write McCarren; he can tell me." McCarren was chief of the New York detective force. Cheney wrote the letter, asking if McCarren knew where "Red" Michelon was on the day (naming the date) of the express robbery. After mailing the letter Cheney busied himself investigating Catlin, Daniels, Chadwick and the other man. He merely verified Van Cott's report about them. Chadwick and his friend were above reproach. Catlin, too, notwithstanding his previous experiences, was apparently living a decent life. He was married and resided in Kirkwood. Daniels, the other clerk referred to by Van Cott, was a good dresser, unmarried and boarded way out on Pine street. He had only been in the St. Louis office about three months, having come from Denver. His salary was but $65 per month, and he appeared to live up to it.

The next day (Friday) Cheney went to the express office. Van Cott received him graciously, and rendered him every assistance. Catlin was called in and told a straightforward story. He had received the package, verified the seals and placed it with a number of others in a basket. Later they were placed in the vault. The bank messenger, Chadwick, called, receipted for the package and that was all there was to it. Naturally $100,000, even though it be in bills of large denominations, would make a bulky package. Catlin's story of the receipt of the package was so complete Cheney did not call in Daniels.

"Van Cott," he said, after talking it over, "I am convinced there were two and perhaps three men in this deal. There's probably a man on the coast, one inside here and one outside. They've worked it pretty smoothly, but the end is not yet. I am satisfied Catlin is not the man, and I'm not sure but what the change was made out on the coast. Of course I know the safe in which that package was placed came through under seal from Frisco. Your records show it was not opened in transit. I've sent to Chicago for one of my men, Guthrie. He'll be here to-night. To all intents and purposes he's one of your men, but he'll take his orders from me."

Cheney left the express office and went to the city hall to see Chief Landingham and to return Darrel's reports. Darrel was there and acknowledged the introduction with a curt nod of the head and a "Howdy, colonel." His manner was the least bit resentful, as if he considered it impertinence for Col. Cheney to be on a case he was supposed to handle. Cheney did not like him a little bit. There was something sinister about his look and manner and his eyes were shifty; but that might have been an unfortunate characteristic. He had been on the St. Louis force a number of years, and, truth to tell, had established a good record. Cheney watched him narrowly.

"I've read your reports, Darrel, and gather from them you think probably 'Red' Michelon may have had a hand in the case."

"Sure as shootin', colonel. Michelon was here that day and in the express office. I got that straight."

"Where did you get that information, Darrel?"

"Well, you see I heard in a general way he was here, so I took his phiz out of the gallery for identification purposes. Several people saw him here that day."

"Yes, but who?"

"Well, Daniels recognized the picture in a minute. Said Michelson was in the office while the $100,000 package was there."

"Ah, Daniels recognized him, did he?"

"Yes, and it's all plain as mud to me. Catlin gave Michelon the real package and substituted the phoney one. Michelon disappeared that night, but I've located him in New York, and Monday night I'm going after him. You'll see he and Catlin are the ones. Why, it's—plain—as mud."

"Yes," thought Cheney, "it is as plain—as—as—mud."

"Of course you'll take a representative of the express company along with you?"

"Yes, I thought of taking Daniels. He'd be able to identify him. But I'll leave that to Van Cott."

Darrel went out and Cheney talked awhile with the chief and left. That evening at four Sid Guthrie arrived from Chicago and reported to Cheney. He was given an outline of the case and then Cheney said: "Watch Daniels; don't let him out of your sight from the time you first see him until to-morrow morning. Be ready at all times to make a quick trip east." Guthrie was true blue; Cheney knew that. All Cheney wanted to do was to keep in touch with Darrel and Daniels until he heard from New York. Monday night or Tuesday morning he should have his letter. Cheney knew right at that minute who the culprits were, but he didn't want them to get wind before he was ready to act.

The next morning (Saturday) Guthrie reported. Daniels had gone home, stayed there until nine o'clock, slipped out of the house, gone down to some resorts on lower Pine street, and spent money pretty freely. At one a. m. he started back home and at Twelfth and Pine streets met Darrel and talked for a few moments. They seemed to know each other pretty well. On the way down-town that morning he stopped at the post office and received mail at the general delivery.

"Good," said Cheney. "Just hang around now where I can get you quick; things are moving."

Chief Landingham sent for Cheney and consulted with him on the advisability of arresting Catlin.

"No, I wouldn't do that just yet, chief," said Cheney. "I'd have Catlin shadowed for a day or so so he won't get away. He can be arrested any time and we want all the culprits together. Let's play them, chief."

"All right, Cheney, I guess you're right, but I don't want to fail."

"You won't fail, chief. We'll have the thieves within three days." And Cheney smiled to himself.

Sunday was a day seemingly of inactivity. Cheney dined with Van Cott. One of Chief Landingham's sleuths was watching Catlin and Guthrie spotted Daniels.

Monday morning there was a conference in Chief Landingham's office. Cheney was there, so was Van Cott and Darrel. To all intents and purposes Cheney and Van Cott acquiesced in Darrel's plan to leave that night for New York to arrest Michelson. Darrel had used the time from Friday until Monday to get the necessary extradition papers. Every one complimented Darrel on his perspicuity and good judgment.

"I'll send Green, one of our trusted men, with you, Darrel," said Van Cott, "and he can represent the company in any transactions you may have. He's a good man and you can trust him."

"All right, Mr. Van Cott, there won't be any trouble, I reckon."

The meeting broke up. Cheney and Van Cott went to the express office. Guthrie was there.

"Sid," said Cheney, "your name is 'Green' for the next few days. You leave to-night for New York with Darrel of the St. Louis force. You will take breakfast in Toledo to-morrow morning. I will probably send you a message there; follow its directions implicitly. Keep your eyes and ears open and if Darrel should attempt to lose you between here and Toledo arrest him and notify me. He's a bad man in a gun play. Look out for him."

"All right, colonel, I'll be 'Johnny on the Spot.'" Guthrie was always laconic.

At 9:30 that night Darrel and Guthrie left over the Wabash for New York via Toledo. Cheney had one of his St. Louis men watch Daniels. He didn't want to lose track of him just yet. He had also made arrangements with the postmaster to send up any mail which might arrive from New York that night. The fast mail was due at ten o'clock. Cheney and Van Cott waited. At 11:15 a messenger came with the expected letter from McCarren. Cheney broke the seal and scanned the brief contents.

"I thought so, damn him. Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus is an old precept of law, Van Cott, and it applies here. McCaffery says on the day the robbery was committed 'Red' Michelon was in Roosevelt hospital, had been operated upon for appendicitis and is there yet. A likely story of Darrel's. A telegraph blank, please, Van."

Cheney sent the following telegram to Guthrie at Toledo:

"Seth Green, care Supt. L. S. & M. S., depot, Toledo, Ohio: Arrest Darrel for $100,000 robbery—bring him back if he'll come—if not turn him over to Toledo police and await papers. Daniels has confessed—wire report.

(Signed) "CHENEY."

"Read that and have it sent, please, Van Cott."

"Yes, but—Cheney—you say Daniels has confessed. He hasn't."

"Oh, I know that," laconically replied Cheney, "but he will before another day rolls around." And with that both men went to bed.

Guthrie and Darrel reached Toledo at 7:30 the next morning and went in the depot dining-room for breakfast, and while there Cheney's telegram was brought to Guthrie. Darrel watched his face as he read it, but Guthrie was too well trained to give anything away.

"What is it, Green?" asked Darrel.

"A message from Cheney," answered Guthrie, putting it in the envelope. "Here," he said, "you'd better read it."

Darrel picked it up, looked at the superscription and started to take the message out when—snap! quick as a flash Guthrie had the darbies on his wrists and he was looking in the barrel of a gun held in Guthrie's right hand.

"It's all up, Darrel, you're my prisoner."

"Prisoner be damned!" fumed Darrel. "What for? Here, take those irons off of me. If this is a joke you'll pay dear for it."

"Joke, eh?" laughed Guthrie. "Go on and read the telegram and you'll find out the joke is on you."

Darrel did read, and when he came to "Daniels has confessed," his face became livid with rage and the veins of his neck stood out like whipcords.

"Confessed! Well, the damned little sneak. Confessed! God, what wouldn't I give to have my hands on him this minute!" and in his wild anger he did just what Cheney had expected he would do—exposed his hand.

Of course, the scene just described created quite a commotion in the depot restaurant. A depot officer came in and Guthrie and he took Darrel up town to the jail. At first he was obdurate and refused to go back to St. Louis without papers, but finally consented to do so, "just to get even with that hound, Daniels," as he expressed it.

At 9:30 Tuesday morning Cheney received a message from Guthrie, saying:

"Arrested Darrel this morning. Consents to come back to St. Louis. Will arrive to-night. Darrel wild against Daniels."

"I thought so," said Cheney to Van Cott. "Now we'll have Mr. Daniels."

Mr. Van Cott sent for him and he came in blithe and chipper as a May morning.

"Mr. Daniels," said Cheney as soon as the door was closed, "I arrest you for complicity in the recent $100,000 robbery from this office." A six-shooter was handy, but it wasn't necessary. Daniels wilted; his knees almost sank from under him; he looked wildly from Cheney to Van Cott.

"Good God! Mr. Van Cott, I—why—I didn't have anything to do with it. I—didn't—Catlin said he—I—" Speech failed him.

"Darrel was arrested this morning in Toledo. He was going to New York. You were to meet him there a week hence. A third man was to join you, and the spoil was to be divided. A clever scheme, Daniels—but Darrel has confessed."

The last statement revived Daniels. He became the antithesis to what he had just been. Like Darrel, he fumed and raged and in the end gave everything away.

"Who was the third man, Daniels?" asked Cheney. "Come, speak up, it may help mitigate your punishment."

Daniels hesitated a moment, and then told all. Sinclair, of the 'Frisco office, was in the scheme. Darrel originated the idea and Sinclair and Daniels were his dupes. Sinclair received the package from the 'Frisco bank, made a duplicate of it and sent it by mail to Daniels, care of general delivery, St. Louis. When the real package came in Catlin received it, and after entering its arrival threw it in the basket. Just then his attention was called by a man at his window. That man was Darrel in disguise. Catlin's back was only turned an instant, but in that time Daniels made the change, substituting the bogus package for the real one. That night he turned it over to Darrel, who invented the "Red" Michelon story as a good excuse to leave St. Louis. Daniels was to go with him, but Cheney thwarted that. Later, Daniels was to resign. Sinclair and he were to come to New York, divide the spoils and then leave the country.

Daniels was locked up and Chief Landingham notified of Darrel's arrest. He was simply dumfounded.

Darrel was brought back that night and lodged in a cell far removed from Daniels. The next morning both culprits were brought in to Chief Landingham's office.

"You damned cur," growled Darrel, "what did you want to peach for? We had a cinch." Good judgment had given way to anger.

"I didn't say a word until you squealed," said Daniels.

Darrel looked from one to the other of the men in the office. All at once he realized what had been done.

"Well, by the eternal, Cheney, you've given us the double cross all right."

"Call it that if you want to," said Cheney. "You'll probably have ample time to think it over."

He certainly did. "Fifteen years," said the judge a few months later.

AT AN INDIGESTION SUPPER.

Participant Tells of an Experience He Doesn't Care to Repeat.

"Did you ever go to an indigestion supper?" asked an uptown church member, as he shuddered at the memory. Then without waiting for a reply, he went on: "I did. They did not call it that, but I did. Its title was The Feast of the Seven Tables, and it was held in our church. There are seven tables, each bearing a different kind of repast. Eight people were allowed at each table and as there were over 40 present we had to move along rapidly, taking each table in succession.

"To facilitate matters a bell was rung, as at a progressive church party, and we had to move on to the next table. On the first table were sandwiches, milk, crackers and cottage cheese. I was in the first batch and started to eat slowly, barely finishing a sandwich when the moving bell rang. Grabbing up a few crackers, I stuffed them into my mouth as I moved on to the next table, which bore potato salad, olives and pickles. We had just managed to throw in a few of these when the next bell rang, and again we had to move on. Still munching an olive, I began to make a raid on the baked beans, saratoga chips, beets and pepper sauce, which adorned table No. 3. Again the bell warned us to get a move on, and I then tackled the gelatin and junket on the fourth table.

"By this time the various kinds of food were beginning to stick in my throat from hurried eating, but the fifth table was easy, as it contained oranges, apples, bananas, peaches and pears, which could be put into the pockets. At the sixth we had ice cream and cake and on the seventh we found all kinds of candy. I went away satisfied that I had got the full worth of the 35 cents I had paid for the supper, but next day I had to pay $1.50 to a doctor to treat my indigestion, so it was not worth while. Never again."—Chicago Daily News.

Mayor Pardons a Mule.

Mayor Dunne to-day issued a pardon for a mule. The action was taken on the assurance of State Senator E. J. Rainey that the prisoner at the city pound had never before offended and would be good in the future.

The mule is the property of Gerald Broderick, 15 years old, who appeared in the Mayor's office armed with a letter from the senator. He peered over the high railing and caught the attention of Abe Merinbaum, bridewell pardon clerk.

"I want a pardon," said the boy.

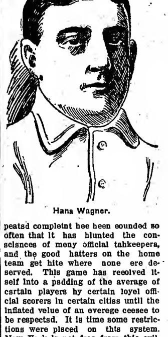
"Who for?" asked Merinbaum.

"You have locked up my mule," answered the youngster with a catch in his voice.

Merinbaum read the Senator's letter, consulted with the Mayor, visited the deputy controller and a pardon was arranged.—Chicago Daily News.

Woman Who Passed for a Man.

An extraordinary woman is "William Edwards," whose sex became known only when she was arrested at Brisbane, Australia, recently. Those who knew her in Melbourne, believing her then to be a man, as she was always in men's clothes, state that she was stronger than most men and that she was a very good pugilist.



When she took it into her head to enter a bar she was very open handed with her money. She followed for a time the avocation of horse trainer, and owned the racing pony Tasman. It is also stated that about six years ago she was married to a widow.

"My heart is a garden and you are its rose," the young man said.

"Sh-she" replied the girl. "If pa hears you he may take it into his head to be the pig that comes in and roots around."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Sporting Gossip.

A perusal of the official batting averages of the National league is productive of several side lines of thought, one of which is the fact that a scoring reform is badly needed. A few seasons ago official scorers were selected because of their fitness and impartiality, and they followed certain general rules fairly well. They even got together occasionally and straightened out some kinks in the rules. Scoring nowadays is a joke compared with the old methods. In some few cities a conscientious official may be found. "If we don't get the best of the scoring at home," the player argues, "it's a cinch we won't get it out on the road." This oft-repeated complaint has been sounded so often that it has blunted the consciences of many official bookkeepers, and the good batters on the home team get hits where none are deserved. This game has resolved itself into a padding of the average of certain players by certain loyal official scorers in certain cities until the inflated value of an average ceases to be respected. It is time some restrictions were placed on this system. New York is not free from this evil, but there is no such padding of the averages there as in some other cities. The ball player can tell you. He knows. "I can't get any base hits in Chicago," says one, or "I made three rank errors in Cincinnati and every one of 'em went as a base hit for the other fellow." Perhaps Hans Wagner would have led the league this season without any padding of his average, but ball players do not believe he outranked Steinfeldt and Lumley so many points. As a matter of fact, Pittsburg is one of the towns where many errorless games are played, for the simple reason that everything is scored a hit. Wagner has been handed many credits that he did not deserve this season by the home scorers. Steinfeldt and Lumley suffered because they had to earn most of their hits to get them. Nearly all scorers are more lenient than they should be, but the Pittsburg thing is overworked. It is a notorious fact that the most inexcusable errors are set down as base hits when the batter happens to be Wagner or some of the other good hitters of the team. When the race for honors is close, as it was last season, then the scorers stretch their imaginations still further until the system becomes a farce.

Much is heard of doped horses on a race track. The manner in which these horses are doped is explained by a prominent veterinarian. No one is likely to be caught in the act of doping a race horse, because the dose given is so small it can be administered with little danger of detection long before the race. If a horse is to race at three o'clock he gets a two-grain powder on his togue in a darkened stall at one o'clock. The drug takes effect in about 30 minutes and the animal breaks out into a sweat. He is rubbed down, cooled out and done up as if he had come in from morning work. Every effort is made to keep him quiet until post time, but he very often breaks out again, and is again cooled out. The doped horse never takes any warming up work, and this facts affords the best means I know of for finding him out. He is moved slowly to the starting point, great care being taken to prevent him from becoming excited until the flag is dropped. Then a kick and dig to the work, and in an instant the full force of the dope is felt, stimulating the animal to run the race of his life.

Announcement is made that Meadowthorpe, the noted breeding plant of the late Col. James E. Pepper, near Lexington, Ky., will be sold in February and the entire stud disposed of. Over 200 head of stock, including 42 brood mares and thoroughbred stallions, will be sold.

Next year will be Cy Young's eighteenth in baseball.

Nate S. Wilbur, known in baseball circles throughout the country, has resigned as secretary of the Louisville Baseball club. He has not severed service with the national game, however, and will form a connection with one of the big league clubs for the coming season.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY

THE SUNBEAM.

VOL. VI. SUNBEAM, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, FEB. 15, 1907. NO. 46.

At the Nation's Capital

Social Feud Said to Be Cause of Chairman Shonts' Resignation from Panama Canal Commission—Study of "Fire Alarm" Forsker of Ohio—Other Gossip from Washington.

WASHINGTON. — "Official etiquette," and snobbishness in capital society, of which his wife and daughters, Theodora and Marguerite, were victims, is declared, to be the real cause of Theodore P. Shonts' resignation from his $30,000 a year position as chairman of the Panama canal commission.

It was natural for outsiders to suppose that when Mr. Shonts came here from Chicago as chairman of the commission he would take high rank in the government and have a correspondingly high social status in the fabric of Washington. Mr. Shonts, who was president of a railroad, did not realize that the actual control over the digging of the canal had been officially placed in the hands of the secretary of war, who was paid $22,000 a year.

Mrs. Shonts also misunderstood her rank in society, and out of the misapprehension grew a social conflict so great that President Roosevelt had to settle it. The president ruled that the isthmian canal commission takes rank immediately after the interstate commerce commission. Chairman Shonts, therefore, was outranked socially by Chairman Knapp, by the civil service commission and by the regents and secretary of the Smithsonian institution, to say nothing of the members of the cabinet, the diplomatic corps, the justices, senators, representatives and delegates in congress, and commissioners and judicial officers of the District of Columbia.

The commission, by official writ, was put so far down the list that the wife of its chairman would have had to make her first call on several hundred other women to have kept in harmony with the Washington social code. This is a matter of the gravest import in Washington society.

The trouble was accentuated by Mrs. Shonts' social secretary, who advised her to limit her calls to wives of only high "official rank." Calls were omitted which should have been made, and invitations declined which would better have been accepted and the call made and returned. And invitations accepted which did not in any way further the social status of the chairman of the canal commission and his family.

Out of the enmity developing resulted the resignation.

FORAKER THE SAME FIGHTER AS OF OLD.

Just now Senator Joseph Benson Forsker of Ohio is one of the most prominent public men standing in the national limelight. Two causes—one carefully planned, the other accidental—bring Forsker well into the person of the political story of the country.

First he is a can date for the Republican nomination for president in 1908; second, he is the self-avowed antagonist of the present incumbent of the White House and all his works.

In both these situations Forsker stands not primarily as a fighter. And as a fighter the characteristics of the man and the methods of the man appeal to all dabblers in the picturesque chronology of the day.

Forsker is one of the men in the senate who works. His enemies may say he is bitter; they may say he is revengeful; they may even say he is vindictive, but they cannot deny that he is everlastingly, incessantly busy.

He is up every morning before daylight, and it is after midnight nearly every night before he retires. During the most active sessions of the senate—no matter what fight he may have on hand—he never neglects to keep up his extensive line of reading.

Without exception, he is undoubtedly one of the best Latin and Greek scolars in public life. But how he is in Washington with the affairs of the nation and the affairs of his state—which state, by the way, keeps its senators fully occupied—he remains in close touch with the law, and does more legal practice when in Cincinnati than any other man in the United States senate.

That he is one of the hardest workers in congress is an established fact, but despite his hard work, he maintains his health.

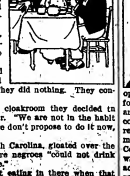
"I believe that Forsker has been honest in this Brownsville fight," said one close to the administration to me the other evening in Washington. "I believe he is sincere in the stand he has taken and is doing what he believes is right."

Those who heard Senator Forsker make his Brownsville speech in the senate the other day, and who knew him in the old Ohio fights, recognized in him the same old "Fire Alarm" Forsker. They recognized in him the same quick spirit of repartee—the same eager sarcasm—the same alertness to recover a lost point. It is the same Forsker that he was 20 years ago. The years have whitened his hair, but it has not dimmed the enthusiasm and the fighting spark that has been within him since those school days when he "licked" his playmates.

DAMAGE CAUSED BY SPURS OF OFFICERS.

It is only at the national capital that young women exploit the grievance about having their best gowns rent in twain by spurred officers of the army and navy and by the uniformed foreigners. It may be that spurs are called for by the regulations, but they are certainly a great nuisance when the White House is crowded to the doors and nearly all the feminine toilets are of fragile lace, chiffon and muslin.

The older officers assert that the occasion is a hugbear, and if they successfully run the gantlet in the ball room without destroying any gowns they are glad to back up in a corner of the east room and remain there all evening. The younger men are not so careful, and each levee has its list of victims of the spurs and clashing sword.



NEGROES ARE SERVED IN RESTAURANT OF HOUSE.

Southerners are indignant because the other day for the first time in the memory of members of congress negroes have been served at the house of representatives' restaurant.

While several members, men were dining in the portion reserved for members and their guests, a negro accompanied by a white woman entered, took seats at a table and ordered food. It was as cooly as though they had no idea of the precedents they were smashing.

The negro waiters served them with alacrity. Adamson, of Georgia; Randell, of Louisiana; Taylor, of Alabama, and a few other southerners were dining in the same room.

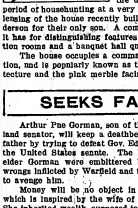
Representative Weeks, of Massachusetts, and Gardner, of Michigan, at an adjoining table, waited to see what the southern members would do. They did nothing. They continued to eat without starting a lynching bee.

After they had returned to the Democratic cloakroom they decided in "cut out" dining in the house restaurant hereafter. "We are not in the habit of dining with negroes," said one of them, "and we don't propose to do it now, even if it is permitted at the capitol."

And only Saturday Senator Tillman, of South Carolina, gloated over the fact that there were places in Washington where negroes "could not drink with white men, and you senators know it is true."

"It is a good thing Senator Tillman was not eating in there when that colored man sat down," commented one of the negro waiters after the restaurant episode had occurred, "because there sure would have been something doing."

COMPOSER OF "SALOME"



Dr. Richard Strauss, the revolutionist of the musical world who has raised himself into preme prominence by the extraordinary daring and originality of his opera "Salome," which has caused such a furor in New York, must not be confounded with the Viennese waltz writers of the same name. Dr. Strauss is a composer of quite another brand and has become the rock on which the musical world has split.

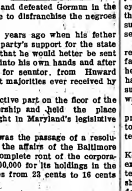
He has been the Bostonpitmeister in Berlin and has conducted an orchestra there, but as a musician he is best known as the writer of symphonic poems or "programme music" of an ultra modern type; and in compositions of this class he has been called the apostle of tonal ugliness, the Turner of musical literature and one who has begun where Wagner left off. Believing in the suggestive power of a printed scheme, he not only presents tonal embodiments of persons and scenes, but has endeavored to suggest the metaphysical position of Nietzsche in his "Also Spracht Zerathtustra." But of more human interest is his attempt in his musical score to trace the shifting details of romance. Thus in "Don Quixote," marginal notes in the score enable one to follow the knight through an ingenious symbolising of his reading of romances, his confusion of thought, his insanity, his wanderings, his hallucinations and his mishaps.

It was as the representative of this style of writing that Dr. Strauss came to America with his wife, Paulina Strauss de Ahne, the singer, in 1904. They were heard in Detroit in concert in which Strauss played on the piano his own compositions and his wife sang. Although a great composer, he illustrated his business spirit during his American tour by closing it with a concert in a department store.

"Salome," however, is the work by which Strauss has created a sensation and refilled his coffers. Reviewers who witnessed it in Germany or New York (it has been barred in many cities) were convinced at once that heretofore Strauss' labor as a progranme writer has been futile and that his original style is best adapted to opera where the scenes, the acting and all the stage accessories lend assistance in forming the mental picture and sensation which the music strives to interpret.

WIFE OF NEW CABINET MEMBER

Mrs. Oscar S. Straus, wife of the recently appointed secretary of commerce and labor, the latest addition to the list of cabinet hostesses, made her first appearance in the White House receiving line on New Year's day.



Mrs. Straus brings to her new position a wide social experience, gathered in foreign lands. As the wife of the American minister to Turkey, she enjoyed a pleasant reputation as a clever, cordial woman of winning personality, and uneffected manner.

She is the mother of two charming daughters, both of whom are married and a young son, still in a college preparatory school.

Mrs. Straus entered at once very heartily into the duties of her new position, her strenuous period of househunting at a very awkward season of the year resulting in the leasing of the house recently built for former Senator and Mrs. John B. Henderson for the next two years. It contains thirty rooms, built in the Italian style, it has for distinguishing features a ceiling ballroom and a series of reception rooms and a banquet hall quite the equal of anything in Washington.

The house occupies a commanding site in the aristocratic residence section, and is popularly known as the "pink palace," owing to its style of architecture and the pink merble facings, which render it rather unusual.

SEEKS FATHER'S PLACE

Arthur Pue Gorman, son of the famous Maryland senator, will keep a deathbed promise to his father by trying to defeat Gov. Edwin Warfield for the United States senate. The last act of the elder Gorman were embittered by the alleged wrongs inflicted by Warfield and the son promised to avenge him.

Money will be no object in the campaign, which is inspired by the wife of the late senator. She inherited wealth, supposed to be millions, left by the dead statesman. The feeling of young Gorman against Gov. Warfield is bitter. Warfield broke with the elder Gorman's wide organization in no obscure office until the former reached the governorship.

Then the governor became independent, appointing opponents of the organization to office, and defeated Gorman in the latter's declining days by vetoing his pet measure to disfranchise the negroes of Maryland.

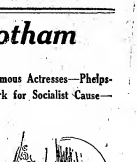
Young Gorman first came into notice three years ago when his father was in Europe. The young man had wanted his party's support for the state senate, but his father had expressed the opinion that he would better be sent to the house of delegates. The son took matters into his own hands and after a fight in the convention became the nominee for senator, from Howard county and won the election by one of the largest majorities ever received by any Democratic candidate.

During the session of 1904 he took no very active part on the floor of the senate. In 1906 he at once assumed the leadership and held the place through some of the most bitter fights ever fought in Maryland's legislative halls.

The greatest service he rendered the state was the passage of a resolution, offered by himself, for the investigation of the affairs of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad company. This resulted in a complete rout of the corporation legislators and the gain by the state of $2,500,000 for its holdings in the property of the road and reduced the state taxes from 23 cents to 16 cents on $100.

Young Gorman is a successful attorney.

ADMIRAL SIGSBEE RETIRED



Rear Admiral Charles Dwight Sigsbee, who was recently retired from the command of the League Island navy yard and station under the limit of naval service law, will be remembered as the best preserved to the American people through his marvelous initiative and coolness after the Maine, of which he was in command at Havana, was destroyed in Havana harbor, was born in Albany, N. Y., January 16, 1845, the son of Nicholas Sigsbee and Agnes Orr Sigsbee. He was educated at Annapolis, the United States Naval Academy, graduating in 1859. His career there being a most promising one. He was married in 1870 to Eliza Rogers Lockwood, the daughter of Gen. Henry H. Lockwood. He served with credit, after his graduation, in the civil war under Admiral Farragut in operations during 1863-65. After the war he was sent to the China station for four years, and in 1869 he returned to become an instructor in Annapolis and afterward headed several departments there. From 1874-78 he was in command of the Blake, a coast survey steamer, and an important were the results of his investigations that several governments honored him with medals and honorary degrees. He commanded later the Kearsarge, Dale, Constellation, Portsmouth, Maine, St. Paul and Texas. During the Spanish war he commanded the St. Paul, earning war record, and was advanced by act of congress for extraordinary heroism from his captaincy to become a rear admiral. He has written several notable and original works on deep sea topics, which are considered standards by the naval authorities of many countries.

NEW YORK.—One of the oddest fads in New York city is on the upper West side, not far from the Manhattan street station of the subway. It takes form in the indulgent if expensive title of the Soubrette Museum. It is tenanted by Mr. Epes W. Sargent, who some years ago began to pick up odd theatrical souvenirs and who increased his collection until it is unlike anything else in town.

The most striking feature of the apartment is the portiere of tights between the dining-room and library. Pauline Hall, Vernona Jarbeau, Charidah Simpson, Truly Shattuck, Emma Carus, Belle Gold end hoit a dozen others contributed to the collection, which is caught up on either side with gaudy pink, white and black striped stockings contributed by Sellie Stembler. They were worn by her in a vaudeville sketch and are quite the most impossible things imaginable.

In one corner of the room a dainty satin apron with lace insertions, worn by Lillian Russell in her Weber & Fields' days, occupies a prominent place.

A notable feature is a dado of stage shoes running completely around the parlor. It comprises every style of stage shoe, from the half-ounce dancing slipper to the 22 ounce clog. The smallest shoe in the collection is that of Josephine Cohen, a dainty dancing shoe of black kid, a full half inch smaller than a shoe worn by one of the smallest of the Lilliputians' company. There are steam-stained slippers from serpentine dancers, such as Loie Fuller, side by side with the dainty French creations of Fougere, the straw sandels of Ten Ichi, the magician, and a cloth of gold slipper worn by Elsie de Wolfe. Ada Lewis' slipper is so tough in looks as the parts she used to play.

A cabinet in one corner was used in one of the productions of the old Lyceum theater, and scarcely suggests its picture-frame molding and stamped paper origin, while a glazed cabinet contains a heterogeneous collection, ranging from an inkstand owned by Gen. Santa Anna, the Mexican patriot, and passed back again to Fordi's theater used the night of Lincoln's assassination, to dressed flems from New Orleans, and a Turk's head made by Goldin, the magician, out of a napkin cleverly folded. A two-quart candy jar is very nearly full of sent compos, telling of shows good and bad.

All told the collection consists of more then 2,000 souvenirs, and the history of most of them can be readily recalled by the owner.

MILLIONAIRE AND WIFE QUIT SETTLEMENT WORK.

J. G. Phelps Stokes and his wife, who was Rose Pestor, a cigarmaker, have nbandoned their settlement work on the East side in New York, and will become active missionaries for the Socialist Democratic cause.

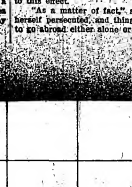
"So long as there remains this inherent injustice in the misguided industrial system, which makes people poor, and then sees that they are kept so," they say, they have found their work can do little or no effective good.

"The idle rich are blind to the fact that a donation to charity or philanthropy can serve no really good purpose so long as the unjust social system remains," is another reason advanced by Mrs. Stokes for their abandonment of a task which his made them known throughout the country.

When Mr. Stokes, son of a millionaire New York family, took up settlement work in New York, after leaving college, he met Rose Pastor, then writing for a Jewish newspaper and working in one of the settlements. She had formerly been a cigarmaker in Cleveland. O. He married her, gave up his rich home, and went to live with her in a five-room flat in the heart of the lower East side.

BLIND GIRLS TO OPERATE SWITCHBOARDS.

Miss Hanna Isaacs, the blind telephone operator of Lebanon hospital, the Bronx, has been requested to teach a class of blind girls the art of manipulating a telephone switchboard. She is going to do this at the suggestion of an officer of the telephone company, who has agreed to hire the blind operators immediately if they show anything like Miss Isaacs' proficiency.



Miss Isaacs was taken to the hospital three years ago to have an operation performed on her eyes. At that time her sight was failing. Before the operation could be performed, however, she contracted brain poisoning, and it was necessery to take out both her eyes.

The unfortunate young woman had neither relatives nor friends. She had become a general favorite at the hospital, and Superintendent William Danb planned to keep her and make some easy berth for her. At that time the hospital did not have a telephone switchboard, and as one was going to be put in one of the surgeons suggested that the blind girl learn to operate it. The switchboard was put in and it has ten trunk wires and 40 extensions.

The girl learned to operate it in two days with such skill and splendid precision that everyone who watched her work was amazed. She also learned to operate a typewriter, and now handles all the correspondence for Superintendent Danb.

A few weeks ago the young woman was invited to attend one of Helen Keller's lectures at the Waldorf, and after Miss Keller spoke she told of her experience as a telephone operator. Before this Superintendent Tucker of the telephone company had taken a deep interest in the girl, and proposed that she teach a class of blind girls to become telephone operators. She was delighted with the idea, and will begin her new work next week.

BEGGERS CONTINUALLY HOUNDING MRS. SAGE.

Mrs. Russell Sage is practically in a state of siege at her country home at Lawrence, L. I., because of the importunities of applicants for her bounty.

So persistent have been the demands upon her, not only by special messengers and by mail but by those who hope to obtain a personal interview, that she is almost deprived of out-of-door recreation.

Scores of these beggars who would extort from her some promise or gift of money for either real or fancied needs lie in wait outside the grounds and outposts are maintained by men and women who trust to luck that fortune may favor them in their appeals.

Mrs. Sage has been in a quandary whether to remain in Lawrence or come into the city to live, but close personal friends have advised her to remain where she is. For, as one of them remarked: "Mrs. Sage is bonnded to death in the country, but she wouldn't know a moment's peace were she to move to New York."

Mrs. Sage has, according to the statement of this same friend, determined that she will grant an interview to no one; that she will neither see nor speak with any one not an intimate friend or who does not come accredited from her attorney, Henry W. de Forest. Her servants have been instructed to this effect.

"As a matter of fact," said this friend, "Mrs. Sage is beginning to feel herself persecuted, and things have come to such a state that she hesitates to go about either alone or with friends."

J. D. ROCKEFELLER GIVES $32,000,000

IMMENSE DONATION IS MADE BY HIM TO THE GENERAL EDUCATION BOARD.

Largest in All History—Announcement By Oil King's Son Surprises the Members—Their Letter of Appreciation and Thanks.

New York, Feb. 8.—Thirty-two millions of dollars worth of income-bearing securities was the gift which John D. Rockefeller, Jr., announced to the general education board when it assembled for a special meeting in this city late Thursday afternoon.

For general education purposes throughout the country, is given as the purpose of this donation—the largest single prize ever handed out for such purposes.

Mr. Rockefeller previously had given the board $11,000,000 for the same work, his contributions now amounting to $43,000,000.

Simply Announced by Son.

The general education board apparently was not prepared for this gift, which was announced simply in this letter:

"New York, Feb. 6, 1907. General Education Board, 54 William street, New York city.—Gentlemen: My father authorizes me to say that on or before April 1, 1907, he will give to the general board income-bearing securities the present market value of which is about thirty-two million dollars, ($32,000,000) one third to be added to the permanent endowment of the board; two-thirds to be applied to such specific objects within the corporate purposes of the board, as either he or I may from time to time direct, and remainder not so designated at the death of the survivor to be added also to the permanent endowment of the board. Very truly, John D. Rockefeller, Jr."

Most of the members of the board were surprised at the announcement, and amazed at the size of the gift. Dr. Buttrick, the secretary, said he did not know the gift was to be made until he received the letter.

Board's Letter of Thanks.

The board voted to accept the gift, and, in appreciation, drafted a letter to the elder Mr. Rockefeller in part as follows:

"This is the largest sum ever given by a man in the history of the race for any social, or philanthropic purposes. The board congratulates you upon the high and wise impulse which has moved you to this deed, and desires to thank you, in behalf of all educational interests whose development it will advance, in behalf of our country, whose civilization for all time it should be made to strengthen and elevate, and in behalf of mankind everywhere in whose interest it has been given, and for whose use it is dedicated.

Feels Its Responsibility.

"The administration of this fund installs upon the general education board the most far-reaching responsibilities ever placed upon any educational organization in the world. As members of the board, we accept this responsibility, conscious alike of its difficulties, and its opportunities. We will use our little or no effort to transmute your gift into intellectual and moral power, counting it a supreme privilege to dedicate whatever strength we have to its fast use in the service of men. Very respectfully yours, Frederick T. Gates, chairman; George Foster Peabody, treasurer; Dr. Wallace Buttrick, secretary; Robert C. Ogden, J. D. Rockefeller, Jr., Albert Shaw, Starr J. Murphy, Edward A. Alderman, Harry Pratt Judson."

The absent members of the board, whose names were affixed to the letter to Mr. Rockefeller by their associates, were: E. Benjamin Andrews, Hollis B. Frissell, Daniel C. Gilman, Hugh H. Hanna, Morris K. Jesup, Walter H. Page.

A copy of this letter will be engrossed on parchment and sent to each member of the board for his autograph signature, and will then be formally presented to Mr. Rockefeller.

While the board was in session Thursday gifts to five colleges were ordered, amounting in all to $450,000, as follows: Beloit college, Beloit, Wis.; Morningside college, Sioux City, Ia.; Lafayette, Easton, Pa., Pa., $50,000 each. Wabash college, Crawfordsville, Ind., and the University of Wooster, Wooster, O., each $125,000.

His physician announced at night that the attack is not a serious one. TRAIN HITS AN ELEVATOR

THREE ARE KILLED IN WRECK OF GREAT WESTERN FAST MAIL.

Four Others Seriously Hurt—Engine and Cars Leave Track While Going 60 Miles an Hour.

Rockford, Ill., Feb. 8.—The Omaha fast mail, on the Great Western railway, was wrecked at German Valley, a small station in the southeast corner of Stephenson county and 98 miles from Chicago, killing three and seriously injuring four others early Thursday morning. The sleeping coaches were the only ones which kept the track and the rest rolled down the low embankment on which the Great Western tracks are laid throughout its entire distance.

The dead are Mertin Cilna, of Chicago, and two mail clerks.

It is said that the conductor of the wrecked train was instructed to take a siding at German Valley either to escape blocking from a smashed freight car there or to go around a freight train stalled at that point.

The train was going 60 miles an hour and, striking a spiked switch, left the rails and went over the embankment. The engine turned over, and struck the small grain elevator at the point, which is operated by the railway as a collection point from the farms around. The impact was sufficient to break in the walls of the elevator and a stream of grain poured out, burying the train crew and some of the mail clerks.

ICE TRUST EVIDENCE GONE.

Disappears from Office of New York Attorney General.

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 9.—All the evidences on which was based the complaint of Attorney General Julius Mayer against the American Ice company for dissolution of an alleged monopoly of the ice business, served on December 20, has disappeared from the attorney general's office and cannot be found. This announcement was made Friday night by Attorney General William S. Jackson.

Mr. Jackson also made public affidavits of employes of the attorney general's office which show that a part at least of the papers were known to his missing late in December before the retirement of his predecessor, Mr. Meyer, but that this was not known to Mr. Jackson until early in January when, after he himself had assumed office, he took up the case with a view of further proceedings.

EDINBURG, N. D., IN DISTRESS.

Fuel and Food Failing and No Mail in Three Weeks.

Washington, Feb. 8.—An urgent appeal for fuel has been received by the interstate commerce commission from the town government of Edinburg, N. D. A dispatch says suffering there is imminent and business places are closing.

Grocers are running out of supplies. There have been no local freights since December 24, the dispatch says, and no mail has left the place for three weeks. It is claimed that coal has been on the road since October 15, and but two cars have arrived in six weeks after repeated appeals. The charge is made that the railroad has open, but little or no effort is made to move trains.

Chairman Knapp has called the attention of President Hill of the Great Northern railway to the matter.

RUSSIAN GOVERNOR SLAIN.

Terrorist Kills Alexandrovsky, Two Policemen and Himself.

In a desperate attempt to escape the assassin also killed the assistant chief of police and a policeman and wounded the manager of the theater. Before the terrorist could be captured he shot himself, dying later in the hospital.

The assassin was not identified. The bullets which he used in his revolver were subsequently discovered to be poisoned.

M. Alexandrovsky was well known as chief commissioner of the Red Cross in the field during the war between Russia and Japan. He was also Russian commissioner to the St. Louis world's fair.

IN CHARGE OF THAW DEFENSE.

Sketch of Noted California Lawyer, Delphin M. Delmas, Taken in Court.

EVELYN THAW WAS ANNOYED BY WHITE

SHE SAYS HE PURSUED HER AFTER HER MARRIAGE TO HARRY.

Hot Protest by Jerome—Asks Court to Put Stop to Defamation of the Dead—Plot in Hummel's Office Told.

New York, Feb. 9.—Evelyn Nesbit Thaw again Friday was the central figure at her husband's trial. She was on the stand—her direct examination unfinished—when the usual week end adjournment until Monday morning was taken.

Picking up the threads of her life's story where she had dropped them the evening before, the girl wife of the defendant—always, she declared, telling her story just as she had related it to Harry Thaw from time to time—brought the narrative down to her wedding in Pittsburg on April 4, 1905, and their return to New York following a honeymoon trip in the west. She declared she had heard little or nothing of Stanford White until after this and that on another occasion when she passed him in a cab she noticed his cab turn around and follow her in the direction of a doctor's office, where she was going to have her throat treated.

Jerome in Hot Protest.

District Attorney Jerome, who had throughout silently listened to the young wife's statements, sent a thrill of excitement through the courtroom late in the day by jumping to his feet and vigorously protesting against "this defamation of the dead."

"In there no limit," he exclaimed, "to the aspersions that are to be cast upon this man? Gentlemen, how well knows I cannot, under the law, controvert any statement this witness might make against the memory of Stanford White."

In tones bitterly sarcastic, Mr. Jerome spoke of "this battle of the defendant," and declared that the court had the right to limit such testimony "until competent evidence has been adduced here to show that this man is, or was, of unsound mind. We don't know whether this defendant ever was insane," he concluded.

Court Curbs "Defamation."

The question which called out the vehement protest from the district attorney was addressed to Mrs. Thaw by Mr. Delmas, and its purport was whether or not Harry Thaw had at any time told her about "other girls who had met a fate similar to yours at the hands of this man."

"What men?" snapped Mr. Jerome.

Stanford White," replied Mr. Delmas, with the coolness of voice and manner characteristic of him; and then he added, still in the same low tone, "who else?"

Justice Fitzgerald held that the district attorney's suggestion was a good one, and he thought the defense should lay a broader foundation to show insanity before proceeding along the lines suggested by Mr. Delmas' question.

"We will proceed to do this as soon as possible," announced the attorney.

Mrs. Thaw declared that Stanford White, during the year which followed her experience in the room of the mirrored walls, repeatedly sought to have her visit him alone.

Wouldn't See White Alone.

"I told Harry," she said, "that Mr. White had begged me, had pleaded and cried and scolded, and done everything he could to make me come to see him alone. I refused and he told me I was cruel and that I was as cold as a fish and not a human being. I told Mr. White I didn't care to trust him."

After her return from Europe, and during the months she would not see Harry Thaw because of the dreadful things Mr. White and his friends told me about him," she declared Thaw accused her of improper relations with the architect.

"I told him it was a lie and that I had not," she testified, "with an emphatic show of feeling."

The defense had Mrs. Thaw tell of another incident which has been cited in his life—her acquaintance with "Jack" Barrymore, the actor. Mr. Barrymore was in the courtroom one day during the early part of the trial, at the instance of the district attorney, it was said. Mr. Delmas asked Mrs. Thaw Friday to tell what she had told Mr. Thaw of her acquaintance with the actor.

Jack Barrymore Proposed.

She said she had first met Barrymore at a party given by Stanford White, the year following her introduction to the architect.

"I thought him very nice," she frankly said, "and one day at Mr. White's studio he said, 'Evelyn, will you marry me?' I said, 'I don't know.' He asked me a second time, and again I said, 'I don't know,' and everybody laughed. Mr. White told me I would be very foolish to marry Mr. Barrymore, and my mother said so, too, and we all querreled, and the upshot of the whole thing was that Mr. White said I ought to be sent away to school, and I was, to New Jersey."

More of Thaw's Letters.

The day began with a continuance of the reading of the letters from Harry Thaw to Mr. Longfellow, written after Evelyn Nesbit's revelations to her suitor in Paris. There were others, also, which Thaw had sent the attorney to deliver to Miss Nesbit, who, at the time, would not see him. Mrs. Thaw followed these with a recitation of her experiences with Stanford White and Hummel concerning the alleged affidavit which she made charging Harry Thaw with having taken her from her mother against her will, and with gross cruelty. Mrs. Thaw told how she had been induced to answer some questions about herself and Mr. Thaw at the time, and had been told the stories about his "cruelties to girls." Stanford White and Hummel, she declared, told it was necessary to take drastic measures to protect her from such a person and that Harry Thaw was a degenerate of New York.

She denied that she had ever signed the papers in Mr. Hummel's office, but said she remembered having signed some papers for Mr. White in Paris. She was told, she said, that she did not know. When she got frightened about the papers and demanded to see them she was told that Mr. Thaw had Hummel's office and there they burned a paper which had her name on the bottom of it. She was not allowed to see what the paper contained before it was destroyed.

Story of Her Wrecked Life.

New York, Feb. 8.—Evelyn Nesbit Thaw told her story Thursday. To save the life of her husband, charged with murder, she bared to the world the innermost secrets of her soul—a narrative for which a newspaper was a more fitting place than the crowded, gaping courtroom. It was the same story she told Harry Thaw in Paris in 1903, when he had asked her to become his wife—the confession of one "who tells" there was an insurmountable barrier to her ever becoming the bride of the man she loved.

Then, in the form of a direct narrative of her girlhood and told the early struggles of herself and her mother to keep body and soul together; of how gaunt poverty stood ever at the door, and how she finally came to earn a livelihood by posing for photographers and artists, she won the murmured sympathy of the crowd which filled every available space in the big courtroom.

Then came the relation of the weeks of that girlhood at 16 years of age. It was the story of her meeting with Stanford White, the idol of the sumptuous studio apartment, whose dingy exterior gave no hint of the luxurious furnishings within; of a velvet-covered swing in which one could swing until slippered toes crashed through the paper of a huge, rose parasol swung from the ceiling; the story of a glass of champagne, of black, whirling sensations and of a mirrored bedroom walls. In short, she told all the story.

WANT $25,000,000 FOR CANAL WORK

SECRETARY TAFT EXPLAINS THE NEED TO THE HOUSE COMMITTEE.

Big Sum for Equipment—Appropriation Necessary Regardless of Whether Digging Is Done by Contract or Not—Doings of Congress.

Washington, Feb. 9.—Secretary Taft appeared before the house committee on appropriations Friday to explain the appropriation of $25,000,000 which the isthmian canal commission has asked to have included in the civil sundry appropriation bill, now under consideration. The secretary of war was accompanied by Chairman T. P. Shonts, of the isthmian canal commission; Dr. W. Gorgas, the canal sanitary agent; J. B. Bishop, secretary to the commission, and R. R. Rogers, general counsel to the commission.

Much of the general discussion before the committee concerned the proposed canal contract and Secretary Taft expressed the opinion that the public generally prefers the contract system, as it believes the government can do work cheaper in that manner. However, the appropriation for the canal will not be affected through the failure to grant a contract, as the provision has been made in the bill that the money is to be available for canal work regardless of whether the government does the work itself or lets it out to a contractor.

The proposed appropriation is desired chiefly for the completion of the equipment of the isthmus, and as the government proposes furnishing the equipment to any contractor it was explained by the canal officials that the allowances for this purpose should be liberal.

Many Pension Bills Passed.

A new high record in the way of the passage of private pension bills was made by the house Friday when 725 bills were passed in an hour and a half.

The novel appropriation bill carrying $95,426,000 was taken up and under the order of general debate, speeches were made by Mr. Lemer of Florida on the "railroad rate bill," Mr. Higgins of Connecticut favoring the creation of the White Mountain and Apalachien forest reserves and Mr. Bartlett of Wyoming on the "limitations of federal authority" and the withdrawal of coal lands from entry.

Speeches on Indian Bill.

The senate Friday passed the Indian appropriation bill, which has been in controversy for months throughout the week. Senator Frazier made an address on the subject of states rights, after which the army appropriation bill, carrying a total of $81,600,000, was taken up. The army measures were hardly read as a number of committee amendments and adjournment was taken shortly before 6 o'clock with it became apparent that considerable debate was to be occasioned by an amendment to permit shipowners not to receive reduced rates from the railroads on the transportation of troops and supplies for the army, and to elect army officers and their families to accept free transportation. The adoption of the amendment would be a modification of the railroad rate bill passed at the last session of congress.

River Bill is Passed.

Washington, Feb. 8.—The house Thursday completed and passed the rivers and harbor appropriation bill, carrying more than $63,000,000, with sundry amendments, all of which were supported by the chairman of the committee, Mr. Burton, of Ohio. Among the important amendments adopted were:

To construct dam No. 2 and complete dam No. 3 in Allegheny river, $235,000, being an increase of $35,000.

Improving Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels of New York, the secretary of war being authorized in his discretion to prosecute the improvement in such channels with a view to obtaining first a depth of 35 feet and subsequently increasing it "to the depth now approved in the adopted project as the available depth in the entrance to said harbor shall require."

For continuing the improvement and for the maintenance of the Chicago river, $200,000, being an increase of $180,000.

Calumet River Project.

The paragraph in relation to the Calumet river, Illinois and Indiana, was amended so as to authorize the secretary of war to enter into a contract to complete the project, for which $191,500 is appropriated, the aggregate cost is limited to $170,000, exclusive of the amounts heretofore appropriated.

The survey of the Missouri river was authorized from its mouth to Sioux City; also a survey of the Savannah river, Georgia, for 30 miles below Augusta.

A bill amending the denatured alcohol bill was asked.

The naval appropriation bill was taken up and made the continuing order.

Captured Train Robber Escapes.

Trinidad, Col., Feb. 8.—Robert Mc-Manus, said to be the last survivor of the notorious "Black Jack" band of train robbers, escaped Wednesday from the custody of Sheriff Bride, of Guymon, Okla., jumping from a train in New Mexico while it was running at the rate of 40 miles an hour. McManus had been arrested at Pueblo on a charge of horse stealing.

CANADA'S GOOD TIMES.

The Immigration During 1906 Was 218,000.

While it is well to heed every word of caution from the leaders in commerce and finance and to avoid all speculative ventures that lack a solid business foundation, it is clearly evident that there is no conspicuous weak spot in Canada's present era of prosperity. The Toronto Globe says: "The Dominion has in a commercial sense plenty of money, and our leading financial institutions are in a position to lend freely in the United States. The chief productive enterprises of Canada are not buoyed up by an era of dangerous speculation, but are following substantial business methods and finding safe and continuous markets for their goods. We are not bolstering up any industries by extensive export bounties that might impoverish the people as a whole, and ultimately lead to collapse through the failure of the artificial aid. There is no extreme protection in Canada such as would create great fortunes for a few at the expense of the general public and lead to disruption and catastrophe. The prosperity of Canada has no artificial foundation being based on a healthy and substantial expansion of trade and industry, with a proportionate extension of productive settlement to new areas.

It is true that we are borrowing extensively for railway construction, but every line will bring new territory within the limits of profitable occupation, and will create prosperous settlements to bear the burdens and repay the outlay. We are not exhausting mineral resources, for it is quite reasonable to assume that, although mineral wealth is never permanent, ours will during the measurable future develop a far greater productive capacity than at present. Our timber wealth can be made continuous by a judicious policy. And agriculture, the real foundation of our prosperity, is expanding with every new exploration or railway construction. We are not in the flush of a railway boom that could bring its punishment through the useless duplication of lines. The gigantic railway enterprises that now stimulate every line of business in Canada will create a new impulse, and thus render easy the heavy burdens of debt now freely assumed. Canada's era of prosperity has been unprecedented, but there is no sign of weakness and no cause for lack of confidence. While our growth is normal and healthy, we need have no alarm at its rapidity." This article might be taken as a text for the great growth that is taking place in Central Canada, where thousands of homesteads are annually taken up during the past few years. The past calender year has given to Canada by immigration the addition of 218,000 to its population. Of this the United States contributed 63,781. The agents of the Canadian government, whose advertisement appears elsewhere, say that this number will be largely increased during 1907.

Appeals for Starving.

St. Paul—Governor John A. Johnson, both as governor and president of the Minnesota branch of the Red Cross Association, has issued an appeal to Minnesotans to aid the starving thousands in China. Contributions should be addressed to Kenneth Clark, treasurer, St. Paul. Governor Johnson's letter says in part:

"No one is ignorant of the distressing condition of the people of China. Millions are on the verge of starvation. To relieve distress immediate action is needful, if human suffering and human life are to be spared. The people of Minnesota have been abundantly blessed in material matters and out of their abundance should respond to the cry of suffering humanity.

"The Minnesota branch of the national Red Cross offers its services in receiving and forwarding contributions to the suffering millions of China. Will not the people of Minnesota respond quickly and generously to this appeal for aid."

Owl Claws Boy.

Moorhead—A big white owl was responsible for the severe injury of a ten-year-old boy named Crume yesterday afternoon.

The boy was playing in the streets near his home, carrying the big bird on his arm. Suddenly it fastened its long sharp claws on his wrist, the talons entering nearly to the bone. The little fellow screamed with pain, but held tightly onto the other leg of the bird, fearing that it would grip him with the other claw.

Oscar Cederberg heard the boy's screams and hurried to his assistance, wringing the owl's neck. He then with great difficulty succeeded in loosening the claws of the dead bird from the boy's arm, the blood spurting from the wounds in a stream. The doctor says the boy will recover unless blood poisoning supervenes.

Crushed in a Lift.

Minneapolis—Valdeman Mortenson was almost instantly killed in the lift used to carry paper rolls from the basement of the Journal building to the pressroom. Mortenson was a wagon driver, and after finishing his work he was sitting around the basement when he proposed to one of the other boys that he ride up on the lift. He stepped onto the platform and his companion, starting the motor, ran up the steps to the pressroom. Before he reached the room he heard a scream and found Mortenson wedged in between the floor and the edge of the lift.

Clubs Abuse Hubby.

Winona—William Fischer of this city according to his wife's story, raised a rough house at his home, and after kicking his wife just to show his authority, he went to bed. His helpmate alleges that he has been abusing her for more than twenty years, but that kick settled the business, so after he was in bed she hit him over the head with a club, then called the police and had him arrested. He was put under bonds of $100 to keep the peace for six months. From appearances it will be about that time before his head is healed.

Heavy Death Roll.

Minneapolis—Death claimed 268 victims in Minneapolis in January. Of these 150 were males and 118 females. The total is the largest for a single month in years, except the total of 281 for last August. Pneumonia, with 36 deaths charged to it, led the list of causes. Tuberculosis was a close second with 32 deaths. Bright's disease claimed 23, heart disease 18, old age 15 and cancer and cerebral congestion and hemorrhage took 13 each. Accidents of various sorts cost 11 lives.

Tears House in Two.

Minneapolis—Charles Leo Sedblom's house, at 691 Polk street northeast, was torn in two by a Great Northern freight train. One-half of the house was smashed into and piled in an unrecognizable heap, while the other half was left intact and in just as good order as it was before the crash. At the time of the accident six people were in the house, but fortunately they were all in that part of it that escaped injury.

Find Man Badly Frozen.

Neshweuk—An unidentified Swede was picked up on the road between here and Keewatin in a badly frozen condition. His hands and arms were frozen as stiff as boards and another hour of exposure to the terrific storm and sub-zero temperature would have resulted in his death. It is thought that both his hands will have to be amputated.

Minneapolis. — Thomas Dillon, a switchman employed by the Great Northern railroad, was so seriously injured in the St. Louis yards that it was found necessary to amputate his left arm. He is in a critical condition.

Death Claims Gen. Flower.

St. Paul.—Gen. M. D. Flower, postmaster of this city and president of the Union Stock Yards company, died at his residence at 428 Ashland avenue, after being ill but four days.

Mark D. Flower was born in Chagrin Falls, Ohio, on March 31, 1841. He came west in 1847 and came to Minnesota in 1855, after receiving an academic education. He enlisted in Company C of the Seventh Illinois infantry, and served with that company 38 months, the first two years as a private. At the battle of Corinth he was promoted to the position of captain for meritorious service. During the siege of Memphis he was made adjutant and captain of the provisional brigade organized for the defense of Memphis.

Need Not Pay Fee.

St. Paul.—The attorney general's department has decided that assessment insurance companies and purely fraternal societies are not supposed to pay an incorporation fee to the state, this, in spite of the fact that they must file articles of incorporation in order to do business in the state. The secretary of state, Julius Schmahl, asked for an opinion in this matter some days ago. Assistant Attorney General Simpson holds that any insurance companies organized for pecuniary profit do not come in this class, but must pay the regular filing fee. There are about thirty-six of these companies doing business in the state and about twenty-three of them have complied with the law, leaving about thirteen which must pay the fee.

Good Roads.

Minneapolis.—"It's a hard matter, this fighting for good roads."

George W. Cooley, leader in that movement in Minnesota, while not discouraged, showed by his tone of voice, that he was very much wearied by his work in that direction.

"Our main difficulty," he said, "is with the town boards, and the people throughout the state, who have had the building of the roads heretofore. While it is generally recognized that the only way good roads can be secured is to have uniformity throughout the state, we are up against these little boards who hold us back. Every man who has a little authority in road building, hates to let it go, and especially is this true in rural districts.

Five Men Stabbed.

Duluth.—A desperate free-for-all fight occurred in an Austrian boarding house at 209 Central avenue, West Duluth.

Five or six men were wounded with knives, four being given medical attention at the police station. Miko Bozichk received such severe slashes over the head that his recovery is in doubt.

Five patrolmen were required to suppress the riot. Nobody has ascertained yet what it was all about.

Gets Verdict for $35,000.

Austin.—Rex Clay, a brakeman on the Milwaukee road, was awarded $35,000 damages by a jury for personal injuries. His back was broken and he has been helpless since the accident, which occurred at Lyle, Minn., in December, 1905. He was knocked from a car and rolled between the platform and the car. He is 20 and the son of a conductor. The suit was brought by his mother.

Steps Before Train.

Duluth.—Frank P. Noyes, thirty-six years old, a switchman in the employ of the Northern Pacific road, was killed. He threw a switch for a train, and stepping backward got in the way of another train and was run down. Both legs and one arm were severed and he died without recovering consciousness.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 6—The most important action of the legislature today was the passage by the senate after considerable debate of the Coller bill to increase judicial salaries. Senator Ole O. Sageng, the lone populist in the senate, desired to speak against the bill but the chair ruled a bill is not debatable when on the calendar of the day awaiting passage and that the senator only had the privilege of explaining his vote. The bill as passed by the senate provides the salaries of supreme court justices shall be $7,000, and judges of the district court $5,000. In Hennepin, Ramsey and St. Louis counties the district judges are each to receive an additional $1,000 out of county funds.

Another important action of the senate today, also along judicial lines, was the passage of a resolution by Senator Geo. P. Wilson of Minneapolis calling for a committee of three senators and five representatives to draft a bill redistricting the state for judicial purposes.

Two municipal ownership bills, one by W. I. Nolan in the house, and the other by Senator Manly Fasseen in the senate, put in an appearance today. They are duplicates and copies of the famous Mueller law of Illinois to permit cities to issue bonds for purchase of public utilities.

The house held no session this morning and only a brief one this afternoon. Representative Spencer presented a bill to create the office of county weighmaster in each county, as general official weigher and acting under the county commissioners. A bill by C. R. Miller would increase the railroad gross earnings tax 4 to 5 per cent and make roads liable to special assessments for local improvements. Senator Nelson introduced a bill to make elective the offices of the clerk of the municipal court, city clerk, city attorney, and city assessor in municipalities throughout the state.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 7—By a vote of 80 to 30, the house today declined to increase the salary of each member $150 for expenses. The allowance was proposed for legal service, telegraphing, telephoning, etc. J. W. Stokes, author of the resolution to appropriate the money, spoke strongly in favor of its passage. A. J. Rockne moved for indefinite postponement. He claimed the resolution unconstitutional. Stokes in reply accused Rockne of trying to "be the whole thing in the house," and also asserted it was necessary to hire lawyers to draft measures because there was not a single lawyer in the house. This sally brought out considerable mirth but failed to carry the day.

The house committee on elections today reported in favor of seating James D. O'Brien of St. Paul in the house, in that he had a clear majority of votes over James Deuegre. The house did not ask for any details but settled the contest which has been pending for some time, by accepting the committee report without debate. The contestants were of the 26th legislative district, St. Paul.

Ambrosa Tighe of St. Paul broke the individual record in the house today by introducing at one time eleven bills. Two relate to bribery of public officials, and take from a witness the right to refuse to answer questions about bribery which may be self-incriminating. Another bill contains a like provision with reference to investigations of bribery among legislators. Another bill calls for annual reports of foreign corporations operating in Minnesota to be filed with the secretary of state and demands fees therefore. In Ohio a similar law yields the state $750,000 income a year.

W. L. Case introduced a bill to give counties one half the inheritance taxes of estates within their respective limits, and one half to the state.

C. E. Johnson presented a resolution calling upon the board of control to at once proceed with the erection of a new state prison on the new site recently purchased for this purpose. J. G. Lennon held the resolution over for the day by giving notice of debate.

The session of the senate today was brief. There was much time lost in debates on measures which were finally laid over or not acted on at all. Several bills of importance put in an appearance. One by Senator Cashman of Owatonna proposed to put the Iowa distance tariff in effect in Minnesota, the only changes being that in cases where the Minnesota rates are lower, they are substituted in the Iowa schedule. The tariff is proposed for the Western classification of freight now in use in this state.

A bill by Senator A. L. Hanson proposes an appropriation of $75,000 for relief of farmers who were "drowned out" in 1905 and 1906, to aid them in purchasing seed grain. Farmers desiring to borrow from this fund may do so through applications filed with the county auditor. He in turn refers the matter to the county commissioners; they to the state auditor, and the state auditor to make the loans March 15 next. The loans are to bear 4 per cent interest and all be payable Nov. 15 next, after the new crop has been marketed.

The Sundberg committee of the senate, appointed to investigate railroads, examined two witnesses late today. W. H. Chadbourn, chief engineer of the Great Western, was called to tell of the cost of the original construction of the roads in Minnesota. He stated he had searched his office high and low but had been unable to find a single record of original cost of construction.

Charles W. Gardner, auditor of the Soo road, Minneapolis, was also examined. As to cost of buying rights of ways, he was sure the roads had to pay considerably more for land than if the property was simply purchased for farming. He lamented the present agitation against railroads in this country, and said that as a result railroad bonds have to be floated in other countries and the interest be sent away instead of remaining at home.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 8—After being told that to pass a resolution today would be a slap at Senator Knute Nelson, the senate voted 33 in favor of the measure and 18 against it.

The resolution was the one introduced by Senator Canfield several days ago, and called up today for final action. It is a memorial to congress asking that the bill limiting the number of hours per day railroad employes may work, be reported out of committee to the floor of congress for a fair show. The bill aims to decrease the number of railway accidents by prohibiting overworking of men. Senator Canfield had explained, on introducing the resolution, that it was introduced by him on request of United States Senator LaFollette of Wisconsin. Senator Putnam secured the floor and strongly opposed the resolution. "LaFollette came into this state last election for the special purpose of opposing and attacking Senator Nelson," he said. "I for one believe Senator Nelson stands for the sentiment of the people of Minnesota. The passage of this resolution would be a direct slap at Senator Knute Nelson and I am opposed to it." On roll call several senators explained they were voting for the resolution because they believed in its subject matter, and they meant no reflection on Minnesota's senior United States senator.

The most important measure, perhaps, which has been introduced in the legislature this session was introduced in the senate today by J. M. Hackney of Hamline and in the house by S. O. Morse of Slayton. It provides for an exposition at the state fair grounds in 1908 to celebrate the 50th anniversary of Minnesota's statehood, the exposition to be under the management of the directors of the State Agricultural society. The bill empowers them to erect necessary new buildings and acquire 80 acres more of land. The money is to be raised by sale of state certificates, similar to those issued for the state capitol, and the certificates to be paid off by the profits of the exposition and ensuing state fairs. For the exposition, the governor, attorney general and auditor are added to the state fair directors.

Under suspension of rules today, the Spooner bill first passed the house than went to the senate, and there was rushed thru without being referred to any committee and on recommendation of Senator G. P. Wilson former attorney general. This is the bill which appropriates $50,000 for the attorney general for a special contingent fund for engaging legal assistance to fight the injunction brought by the railroads of the state against any reduction in rates, as has been ordered by the state railroad commission. According to the bill, $25,000 becomes available as soon as the bill is signed by the governor, and $25,000 more Jan. 1 next.

The senate today also passed the Rines house bill, which prohibits the state auditor from the further issuance of any further mineral leases on state lands. Bills were introduced in both houses today for the regulation of automobiles. They provide that county commissioners may prohibit certain roads from being used by autos, that autos must slow down to 8 miles an hour at crossings and when passing any objects; and that on no road shall the speed exceed 14 miles an hour.

Lieut. Gov. A. O. Eberhart today announced the appointment of Senator Clague, of Red Wood, and H. H. Witherstine, of Rochester, as a special committee on the part of the senate to make an investigation of express rates in Minnesota. The house is to name a committee to act with these senators.

The joint committee for the investigation of the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, the Duluth Board of Trades, and all combinations in restraint of trade, today organized by electing Senator Peterson of Owatonna chairman and Frank T. White of the house secretary.

Alexandria—Nick Barten of Belle River died from the effect of falling down stairs. He was a farmer.

Revenue Sales for January

St. Paul—The report of the internal revenue department of Minnesota for the month of January shows a decrease in the revenue derived from the sales of stamps, compared with the sales of January, 1906. The total sales last month amounted to $228,831.66, whereas in the same month of 1906 the sales amounted to $23,488.20. Stamps for beer brought in the greater part of the revenue, $19,260. The tax on cigars was $3,408.90, that on snuff $150, and the sale of stamps for tobacco $161.87.

Jumps on Moving Train

Dodge Center—John Daggett, living five miles west of here, was killed while attempting to board a moving freight train about half way between Dodge Center and Kasson. Daggett attempted to catch one of the cars as it went by, but losing his hold fell beneath the wheels, both legs being cut off. He died almost immediately afterwards.

St. Paul—The body of George Harris, janitor at 457 East Sixth street was found frozen in his room.

HER MAIDENLY MODESTY.

The first time they met, she was breezily free with him, because, as she afterwards explained, she never expected to see him again. He kissed her at parting, and she was not offended.

But when they had become friends, do you imagine she would suffer him to kiss her? Not she.

And now that they have fallen in love with each other, and are engaged to be married, she is afraid to meet him, except in the presence of a third person, lest she be compromised. For she is a modest girl.—Puck.

The farmers boat meeting at the High Landing school house on last Saturday afternoon, resulted in a determination of the farmers to build a boat to transport freight on the Red Lake River. The contract was made and the cash advance to build the boat, and notwithstanding we may have been accused of being a little slow in the matter the whistle if the farmers boat will be heard on the river early this spring. All are now united.
It took time to get aquainted, but it seems now that the people living along the river have only one idea, and that is to use our railroad.

It is to be hoped that president Roosevelt did not intend to knock the poor homesteaders in the head with his big stick, when he gave it that powerful sweep, ordering all final proofs to be held up until an investigation could be made by a special agent of the government. This trouble is the investigation will never be made, and if this order is not rescinded or modified the homesteaders may just as well abandond their land first as last, for they can never get title to it.
There is a concentrated movement being made by the entire north west to have the order rescinded and if this can not be done emigration will be heavy to Canada next spring; while the homestead lands in America will be a wilderness, until after the close of the presbut administration.

jumps on the legislators with the following: Even this early in the session, members of the legislature who a few short weeks ago were promising their constituent that they would vote to abolish passes and for a two cent passenger rate—are now throwing out their chest with the remark,
"I don't propose to vote for no people will never get reform measures enacted until they elect men honest enough to keep their

An Art Anecdote.

Edward Rosewater, founder and editor of the Omaha Bee, had a sincere love of art. He hated pictures that indicated scamped work, so called impressionistic pictures that were merely rough and hurried sketches and so called portraits that bore no likeness to their originals. A young painter showed Mr. Rosewater one day a portrait of a mutual friend.

"That a portrait of Smith?" the editor exclaimed. "I'd never have known it."

"Oh," the artist exclaimed, "I didn't try for a likeness, you know. I tried for an effect—an effect in gray."

"I know a man in New York," said
Mr. Rosewater, "who had his portrait painted last year. It cost him $4,000; and he was very proud of it. When it came home he showed it to his cook.

"'Well, Mary,' he said, 'how do you like this portrait?'

"'Sure, sir,' said the cook, 'it's lovely.
It's beautiful. It's divine.'

"'And of course,' said my friend, 'you know who it is?'

"'Oh, of course I do, sir,' said the cook. 'Of course, of course.' As she spoke she kept drawing nearer to the picture, studying it more and more closely. 'Of course, sir,' she said, 'it's you or the mistress.'"—Buffalo Enquirer.

The Sultan's Rebuke.

An ambassador of a well known Enropean monarch was riding in the streets of Constantinople when one of the sultan's carriages rolled by. Seeing it well guarded, his curiosity got the better of him, and when the carriage reached him he was daring enough to peep in at the passenger.
He was surprised and pained to receive a blow in the face from an attendant in charge. Mad with rage, he demanded redress of the sultan. The sultan listened attentively and, for a moment appeared lost in thought. At last he spoke: "My dear —, I have gone carefully into the case and see exactly how it stands. You are, of course, a gentleman. Therefore you would never have committed such a breach of good manners as to peep into the harem unless you had been legally invited to take a look. Therefore no one to have taken place. Therefore no attendant could possibly have struck
you. The whole affair seems to be a pooling, of your fancy. Let us dismiss it."

His Constancy.

A story is told of General Bill Alfred Horsford, who achieved a celibate army. A soldier once sought his permission to marry, saying he had two good conduct badges and $25 in the savings bank. "Well, go away," said
Sir Alfred, "and if you come back this day year in the same mind you shall marry. I'll keep the vacancy." On the anniversary the soldier appeared at his quarter. "But do you really, after a year, want to marry?" "Yes, sir, very much." "Serjeant Hodge, take his name down. Yes, you may marry.
I never believed there was so much constancy in man or woman. Right about march!" As the man left the room, turning his head, he said:
"Thank you, sir. It isn't the least wonder."

Wade Label Did Not Work.

A home missionary was visiting Mrs.
Sling perhaps longer than he should have, to hear his wife pour out the convicts.

"Don't you know, my friend," said he, "that crime never brings happiness
It is only suffered for and paid for."

"I'm sure members of a church don't want to," she replied.

P. Sullivan received a telegram on Sunday morning stating that his brother Thomas was danger ously ill at Crystal North Dakota, and he left for there at once. We have not heard any later news but the many friends of Mr. Sullivan in this locality will hope for his recovery.

There is a very good prospect now for a big flood this spring when this snow goes as it is about all water. When one travels over this upper country and considers that all this volum of water will pass through Crookston, it is no surprise that they begin to worry about a spring flood down there.

The share holders of The Red Lake River Transportation Company are being talked oh to pay up the cash for our first boat. Collectors are numerous and it does not make any differnce who you pay your share to as the Company will have to issue stock on the reciept of any one authorized for a colector.

As soon as the snow starts to melt and run into this river and that Water runs under the ice people should be careful about driving teams onto it, as the strong current will cut the ice out from the under side in one day, and if you have not got any extra heroes that you want to git rid of keep them off the ice when the spring break up starts, as any horse that goes through this ice his working days are over, and he starts on the road to horse heaven.

Greenbush Journal: There is no use in talking, the weather we have had in Roseau county this winter cannot be beaten; not even by North Dakota. We won't take a back seat for any of them, when it comes to weather, or any other old thing.

We guess it has been pretty cold way up in Roseau this year.

Will Build Boats.

Rhoda Minn.

Feb. 11th, 1907.

Editor The Sunbeam.

The much agitated boat question, has at last come to a final end, and the out come was that the Red Lake River Transportation Company decided to put on their own line of boats. The first boat to be constructed will be 12 x 40 feet with steam power. The contract has been let and the first boat will be ready for business about May 20th, and more boats will be put on as soon as needed. Mr. Winton, of Thief River Falls has for some time been making liberal propositions to the Company for the use of his boats. The main reason for not accepting his proposition were because his boats was hardly capable of rendring satisfactory service for the use they was mostly wanted for, and that was for shipment of cream, and the Transportation company decided it would be best to get a boat that would give satisfactory service in this work. The boat will also have good passenger accommodations, as it will be an all purpose boat, one that the people living along the river can feel proud of. However it was not the intention of the Transportation Company to put this boat on the river for the purpose of "bucking" Mr. Winton or his line of boats, but to satisfy the demand of the people to have a way to get their produce to market. It is quite likely that Mr. Winton will run one of his boats and possiably both, just the same. However let us hope the river will be wide enough for all on peaceful terms, and leave room for the logs between

THE EARTH'S CRUST.

Its Rigidity Is About Equal to That of Granite.

Professor T. J. J. See of the United States navy has investigated the rigidity of the earth by mathematical processes depending on the theory of gravitation. He found that, were it fluid, the globe would have a rigidity greater than that of wrought iron, owing to the tremendous weight. The earth's matter under this great pressure acts as a solid and so vibrates in an earthquake, and the average rigidity of the whole mass is nearly equal to that of nickel steel. Nickel steel is one of the strongest and hardest metals known. The globe is thus proved to be capable of withstanding enormous strain. Dr. See proves that the rigidity of the earth's crust is about equal to that of granite, which is one-sixth that of steel, and that toward the center the rigidity rapidly increases. At the earth's center the imprisoned matter is at an enormously high temperature, yet under the great pressure there at work it is kept three times more rigid than the nickel steel used in the armor of a battleship.

This method has been applied also to the other planets. It turns out that the rigidity of Venus is greater than that of platinum and probably about identical with that of wrought iron. The rigidity of Mars is about equal to that of gold, while the rigidity of Mercury, the moon and other satellites is about equal to that of glass. The average rigidity of the great planets—Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune—lies between eighteen and three times that of nickel steel. The great rigidity of these bodies is due to the great pressure acting throughout each large masses.

In the case of the sun the result is still more extreme. The average rigidity of all the sun's layers is over 2,000 times that of nickel steel. This result shows the effect of gravity in equalizing and hardening a mass even when it is self-luminous and at enormously high temperature.—Chicago News.

WHY TRAVEL ABROAD?

An American Should Give His First Study to His Home Land.

When Payne wrote "There's No Place Like Home," he gave poetic expression to the love he bore toward the ingle nook more precious than "temples or palaces." What flowers of rhetoric could approach in power of assertion these five little monosyllabic words, "There's No Place Like Home"—to gainsay which were impossible!

It is the great privilege of Americans to be able without hypocrisie to apply them to travel, for what is there in any part of the habitable globe more fraught with interest, instruction, education, refreshment of mind and body and uplifting of soul than nature has provided, with hand so lavish, for the delectation of those having the good fortune to dwell in this goodly land?

Would he see a Riviera? We have several on the shores of the coast, waters both of the gulf and the Pacific, far distancing that loved by the Mediterranean.

Does he pine for snow capped mountains? Let him repair to the plains where Pike's Peak, Mount Logan and our other great elevations rear their hoary summits into cloudland.

Would he witness a majestic cataract? There is but one without a peer, the incomparable Niagara—in the chain of our great lakes, most turbulent of them all.

Neither Nile, Niger nor Ganges, great rivers though they are, are comparable to our own mighty, world renowned "The Father of Waters." Our peerless Hudson excels in picturesque effect the vaunted Rhine.

What of the beauties of the Golden Gate, on whose shores sits enthroned queenly San Francisco, premier among peerless among cities by a much traveled European prince of imperial blood?

Where is there, even in miniature, anything to vie with that terribly fascinating valley of the Yosemite? Where to compare with the deep and rugged gorge through which passes to the sea the impetuous Colorado river?

The Mammoth Cave of Kentucky, one of the World's Wonders, is as yet but partially explored.

Why then, travel abroad, while all these and vastly more than can be enumerated remain unseen by most?

"Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel?" said Naaman, the leper of old when ordered by the prophet to bathe himself in the Jordan for healing. Why then hie admiring his proud of country and fellow patriotism? Most worthy are they of emulation.

Let it be said or recognized, there is no grander travel field than that we have at home.—Travel.

Starboard and Port.

Why do the sailors call the right hand side of the ship "starboard" and the left hand "port?" For the answer it is necessary to go back to the days of the Normans and Saxons. In the viking ships the warfaring Norsemen had a "board" or planking on the right side of the ship above the places for their oars. The viking himself held the steer oar, which was fastened to the right hand side of the stern. Thus the right hand side of the ship became known as the steer side, and as the ports of the vessel were hung there it was called the "steerboard," or starboard side, while the lower, or lurking side, became the larboard. Hard to certainly located fulfilled this.

Beyond Reason.

There be two individuals who cannot be reasoned with—a girl in love and a man who is determined to run for an office.—New Orleans Picayune.

Love is never afraid of the work.—Chesney Stevens.

A FROLIC IN MEXICO

BREAKING THE PINATA DURING THE CHRISTMAS FESTIVAL.

This Mirth Provoking Pastime Is the Great Social and Fun Making Feature of the Season—Dressing and Filling the Olla.

Christmas in Mexico is not the typical Christmas of cold and snow and ice, but one of bright, warm sunshine, cloudless blue skies, flowers in profusion, trees in full foliage and a life of out of doors.

At least a week before Christmas in the principal streets of Mexico arches are erected from sidewalk to sidewalk, festooned with wreaths of flowers and hunting in the national colors—red, white and green. Under the arches booths are erected, and every toy making afforded in Mexico is on sale.

In every Mexicon house great preparations are made for what is called the "pinata." Every child keeps and scrapes and saves the centavos for weeks and months ahead. All kinds of articles are made especially for this ceremony, and every family vies with its friends and neighbors to have its pinata more beautiful and fanciful than any one else's.

The pinata is really an earthenware utensil which is in general use for cooking. It is called in common parlance an olla and is of brown pottery something like the old fashioned earthenware crocks used in the north before enamel ware became the fad.

The pinatas are large or small, as the purse of the purchaser permits. They are round, pot bellied and very large at the top. They are sold from door to door on the streets and in the markets. They cost only 10, 15 or 20 centavos, but the olla is the least expensive part of the game.

The body of the olla for a woman is covered with tissue paper; then a crinkled paper dress is fashioned; then a bodice is built up draped to represent a loose white waist, and above this is pieced a false face. The hair is made with black paper, braided in one long plait at the back, as the women wear their hair in Mexico. Sometimes a white mohaire headdress is made of the lace paper used by bakers and confectioners.

A flower pinata is decorated with large paper flowers in every color of the rainbow. Red, white and green ribbons, forming long streamers, and silver and gold tinsel, gloss balls and colored lights all help to make the flower pinata very beautiful. The possibilities for dressing these pinatas are endless. In a large family the mother and daughters have their own pinatas, and great secrecy is maintained in the decoration of the olla. It is the aim of each to devise an original and dressing the pinata as possible, and it can be said that the very keenest rivalries in the families of wealthy Mexicans the luxury of the pinata often mounts into thousands.

After the olla is decorated to the taste it is filled. The filling consists of peanuts, candies, nuts, bon bons, little marbles, and all kinds of Mexican dainties. These dainties are candied fruits, and pasta etc.

Christmas night the pinatas are carried in great state into the sala and suspended from the ceiling one at a time. All the relatives of the family are present, and as consins or the 4th and 5th degree are counted and children are very numerous there is generally a large gathering. They all stand at a respectful distance and are ranged in a row around the walls of the room.

One person is constituted master of ceremonies, and he sits in the chair of the house. He or she stands in the middle of the room. Next by is a jar or bandana field filled with sticks or canes of sticks. When everything is ready a child, or grown person is selected and each one takes the cane forward and is blindfolded.

Then the fun begins. The person blindfolded is turned round and round until she looks all knowledge of where the pinata hangs. A cane is put in her hands, and she is told to hit the pinata and try to break it. She is given three chances. If she fails to hit it she sits down amid laughter and ridicule. If she hits it without breaking it she is entitled to a small prize.

Then the next is selected, and after another being called up, blindfolded and given a cane and three chances to break the pinata. Finally the one more fortunate than the rest succeeds in giving a hard enough blow, and, crash, the pinata falls to the ground in broken pieces, and its contents are scattered far and wide.

A wild scramble ensues. Everybody makes forward to gather as much of the spoil contents as possible.

Then the fortunate breaker of the pinata gets a handsome prize and is awarded the seat of honor. He or she also draws out of a concealed fold another pinata, breaking another pinata. As soon as the contention dies down and quiet is restored the second pinata is broken, and so and the same routine goes through as the first pinata until the last pinata is cracked, and then the party is rewarded.

The pinata party is a great social and gala making feature of the Christmas season. After the pinatas have been broken and a supper has been served there follows dancing, or a reception, consisting of looking round the acquaintance is brought in to play the pinata party.

Upon travelling Indians are quite fond of the singing bands. A party of Indians at Christmas time from Oaxaca to come in England, Germany, France and Italy. They have been known to appear in Mexico from time immemorial, and are much in demand during the festive season.

Where the Audience Went.

A London actor appearing at a choice theater in Salford found an small an audience that he refused to go on unless paid for an explanation. "You see," the manager told him, "my people are at the Hallé concert." "Oh," the actor said, surprised, "I should hardly have thought your patrons would care much for high class music." "No," the other explained, "to tell the truth, they go to pick pockets."

Size of Heads.

The average head in boys is a circumference of fully twenty-two inches. The average adult has a head of six and three-quarters and six and seven-eighths generally. "Soverign" heads are common in Aberdeen, and the professors of our colleges generally wear seven and one-eighth to eight sizes. Edgar Allan Poe's hats of the largest size, and Oliver Wendell Holmes' are of the same circumference. Daniel Webster's hat was seven and one-eighth. Men of different callings run to different sizes. Lawyers and preachers are generally large headed. Between nineteen and twenty inches in circumference heads are invariably very weak and consequently the authority, "no such animal," "Skulls of marrying a man without a head" dates from twenty inches. Between these limits are generally found the heads of men of ordinary intellect. Heads of idiots are usually small.—Boston Transcript.

Lady Isabel's Invitation

By Mrs. Neish

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

"You see," said Lady Isabel to me, "there is the difference between men and women. Now, as for this method of breaking into society, a man will make it worth your while merely to be seen about with you once or twice, and thus trust to his money doing the rest for him; but women are so jealous of one another that even really rich women have a lot of trouble in getting on, if they're nobodies, and if they once get hold of you, they insist on their pound of social flesh in return for it." She paused and hesitated.

"I know," I said, anticipating her aversion to calling a spade a spade.

"Exactly so," said Lady Isabel. "Who has been helping you lately? I asked.

"Look at the bother I had with Mrs. Barrington-Brown," she replied, ignoring my question, "and what a fearful nuisance it was taking her abroad, and all the fuss I had to make to get her introduced; and now there's Mrs. Leamington-Smythe—I can't be always thinking of new schemes to help these people, on," she added.

"Can't you?" I murmured, "is there really a fault to your ideas?

She nodded. "And yet, you know, I feel that after borrowing her house for Christmas—at least, of course, I mean she offered it—I feel I must be civil."

"Was it her house?" I asked, as I recalled the cheerful Christmas gathering and the pleasant little New Year's shooting party.

Lady Isabel nodded "Yes; and when I gave all those parties, I had several of her friends there—

"How good of you."

"Yes; wasn't I? But you see they were all well off and useful, and I thanked her, too, and all that you know—and now she actually wants me to introduce her to the Princess Mor-

"I Am Merely Considering Mrs. Leamington-Smythe—" genblatter. It's impossible; I sounded the princess, and she deliberately hinted she prefers not to have Mrs. Smythe presented to her."

"And now you won't, of course, get the house for Easter," I said, with deepest sympathy.

"My dear Marjorie," said Lady Isabel, "please do not run away with the idea that people are always thinking about themselves—I am merely considering Mrs. Leamington-Smythe—"

"I might have known it," I said pentetially. "But why consider Mrs. Smythe at all?"

"Well, you see, I've asked her to come to my party to-morrow, especially to be introduced to the princess, and"—she lifted an envelope—"now I've had this delicate intimation I really don't know what to do. You see, I am giving this party on purpose, and if I don't introduce Mrs. Smythe she will be furious and if I pretend I haven't had the princess' note and present the woman it will be worse still. Whatever shall I do, Marjorie? For goodness sake, don't sit there staring at me, but tell me what on earth to do."

"Whom would it pay you best to please?"

Lady Isabel looked absolutely shocked. "My dear girl, for goodness' sake, don't be so hotefully crude;" then she added meditatively, "Of course I'd like to please the princess best."

"It is rather awkward," I admitted.

"What a pity they have both accepted."

"Yes, isn't it; but people only do accept, as a rule, when you wish they wouldn't."

"What will you do?"

"I don't know," she answered, "I must think it out; in the meantime, I must write my letters, and then we'll go and have luncheon."

"Doesn't she look a dear; she really is quite a lovely woman, only I do wish she'd dress just a teeny weeny bit better," said Lady Isabel, lavishing her usual qualified praise on her especial guest.

The princess crossed over to us at the moment, and the qualified praise ceased somewhat abruptly.

It was a crowded party, and Lady Isabel, radiantly successful, was flitting gaily from guest to guest. Suddenly I saw her face change, and a look of astonishment and dismay pass over it like a flash, and then recovering herself, as I vertly believe only Isabel can, she turned to greet Mrs. Leamington-Smythe.

"How are you, dear? So glad you could come, after all; how very, very sweet of you, and what a pretty gown."

"I've only just returned to town," said Mrs. Leamington-Smythe. "We motored straight up from Rottingdean to you, Lady Lascelles and I, and I went to her club to tidy up, and—oh, by the way, she told me to tell you she'd so sorry she couldn't come, but—"

I lost the rest of the sentence in a friend's greeting, but presently Isabel pulled me on one side.

"My dear Marjorie, it's a tragedy," she whispered; "and now whatever shall I do?"

"I don't see that it matters," I said; "you can't force her on the princess. Can't you explain to her—delicately, you know."

Lady Isabel groaned. "My dear girl, if you only knew how much there is to explain, and what tenterhooks I am on—"

"You, Isabel; why should you be on tenterhooks. What do you mean? I thought you had devised a plan by which—"

The princess, interrupting us, said good-by, adding that she had enjoyed herself so much, but she hadn't another moment to wait; and she left the room in rather a hurry. She had been standing close to Mrs. Smythe, who was obviously all eagerness, and who looked deeply disappointed as she saw her say good-by to us.

"There you go; are you safely out of it," I whispered cheerily. "You can't introduce a person who isn't there, and the princess has saved the situation by running away."

"Hse she?" said Lady Isabel, with a grimace; "you would not say so if you realized what the situation is."

"Good-by, dear Lady Isabel," said Mrs. Smythe a little later on, with a rather sour smile. "I'm enjoyed myself so much. It's been a perfectly delightful party. Was that the princess? Isn't she lovely?"

"Yes; I'm so sorry I couldn't introduce you to her," said Lady Isabel, "but, as you saw, she was obliged to run away."

"Some other time, perhaps," murmured Mrs. Smythe, with another wry smile.

"Yes, dear," answered Lady Isabel. "By the way, we shall see you to-morrow afternoon at the Stauntons, shan't we?"

"Oh, yes."

"She may be there," said Lady Isabel, who knew the Princess was going out of town. "I believe she said she was going to be there. Good-by, then, dear, till to-morrow then; be sure to come, and don't be late."

It was the following afternoon, and we were making our way leboriously down Mrs. Ernest Staunton's crowded staircase. As we reached the hall we came face to face with Mrs. Leamington Smythe, who had just arrived. Lady Isabel went towards her.

"How are you, dear?—how late you are; the princess hasn't come yet, and alas! here wo are, obliged to run away."

Mrs. Smythe's answer was to regard her with a glaring and icy stare, and then, bowing coldly to me, swept past me across the hall and up the stairs.

"My dear Isabel whetever is the matter?"

Isabel answered me with her usual radiant smile, but her face had grown a little pale. "I rather believe that I have just been cut, Marjorie. What?"

"It seems so," I agreed half doubtingly; "but why?"

"Yesterday," answered Isabel laconically.

"Yesterday?" I repented; "but you could not introduce her to a woman who would not wait; besides, she was quite friendly to you yesterday."

"Ah, but you see, I had written her a little note, and then said you wanted her to see before she came."

Lady Isabel laughed, and then she said:

"Nothing much—only I had said I was very sorry to put her off, as I was ill and going out of town."

Later Particulars.

Delilah had cut off Samson's long hair.

"It's a trifle coarse," she said, "but I can use it for a switch."

When it was too late, however, she reflected that she could have stilled Samson in much better advantage by exhibiting him in a State street shop window as an advertisement of a hair tonic.—Chicago Tribune.

"Have the Eskimos adopted any of the ways of civilization yet?" asked the young man with the pleasant hair.

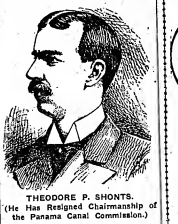
SHONTS QUITS CANAL.

HEAD OF ISTHMIAN COMMISSION RESIGNS POSITION.

Goes to Take More Lucrative Job as Chief of Gotham's Traction System—Stevens in Full Control of Work.

Washington.—Theodore P. Shonts, chairman of the isthmian canal commission, has resigned, to take effect on March 4, and his resignation has been accepted by President Roosevelt. Mr. Shonts leaves the government employ to go into that of the Ryan-Belmont combination in the management of the Interborough Street railway system in New York.

Ha will have no successor in the government. The entire control of the building of the Panama canal will be concentrated in the hands of John F. Stevens, the present chief engineer. Ho will be made chairman of the commission as long as that body lasts, but the commission itself is to be abolished if congress follows the view of the senate committee, which is soon to make a report on the subject, with the complete approval of the president.



Secretary Taft will then become the responsible head of the civil government of the canal, and Chief Engineer Stevens will have entire control of the technical details.

Mr. Shonts leaves his place without any trace of ill feeling on either side. On the contrary, by a peculiar combination of circumstances Chairman Shonts wanted to go, President Roosevelt was willing he should go, and the big company in New York desired Mr. Shonts' services, and was willing to pay for them.

Paul Morton, president of the Equitable Assurance society, came over here to make a formal offer of the place at the head of the New York traction system, the management of which has become so unsatisfactory that it became necessary to find a public man who would command the confidence of the people. President Roosevelt was sounded to find out whether he would feel that Mr. Shonts had deserted the government in the face of the enemy if he went to New York to take a larger salary. To the surprise of Mr. Shonts' friends, the president replied without hesitation that he considered the commission had seen pretty outlived its usefulness and that Mr. Shonts' services would not be necessary after the conclusion of the winter season here.

The chairmen of the isthmian canal commission has retained his place all along as president of the Panama railroad. He insisted that the salary of $30,000 a year allowed by the government was not sufficient for him, and he held on to his railroad position with the distinct understanding that it would not be permitted to interfere with his labor for the canal.

This decision created considerable dissatisfaction in certain government circles, as all cabinet officers and others in search of the government usually have cut loose from private business matters entirely except in the way of investments or as sleeping partners in active commercial life.

Like Mr. Wallace, the previous engineer, who was so severely scored by Secretary Taft for leaving the government services to accept a higher salary outside, Mr. Shonts will make money by leaving Washington. It is understood his salary will be not less than $50,000 a year and it may be considerably more. Actual services on the traction lines of New York and Brooklyn surface, elevated, and subway, has been of the most wretched description and the owners at last have realized that they could escape the friendly legislation only by putting in charge a man of recognized executive ability. They sought Chairman Shonts because he had been appointed by President Roosevelt and they believed the people would accept his choice as a guarantee of an honest intention to better the service.

of no hell is drawing converts by the thousands, hae his heart set upon securing Dowie's Zion City and is ready to take advantage of the recent troubles of Dowie and his followers. Pastor Russell has made several trips to Zion City and has had his financial representatives there consulting with the leaders of the sect to ascertain upon what terms he could secure the property.

Several meetings have been arranged, and Pastor Russell hopes that his religion will prove quite as popular as that of Elijah II. Pastor Russell established his sect in Allegheny about ten years ago. He founded a Watch Tower Bible association, which publishes his tracts and sends them broadcast. Publication houses have been established in nearly every large city of this country and in London and Paris. He claims several million followers.

Money has been flowing into his coffers—or rather the coffers of the sect—like water. He solicits not a penny, and his tracts are sent free. He accepts the scriptures, but puts a new interpretation on all the vexatious passages. He claims the Bible teaches there is no place of eternal punishment, and claims he has proven his position.

A unique method of spreading his doctrine is his habit of spending hundreds of thousands of dollars annually in buying his sermons printed in the daily newspapers.

Recently, he secured a divorces from his wife, after a sensational trial, her charge being that he said his love was like that of a jelly fish in that it went out to any spirit that responded to him.

CAUGHT BY THE GRIP—RELEASED BY PE-RU-NA.

The Medical Profession Recognizes The Grip as Epidemic Catarrh.

EFFECTIVE MEDICINE FOR LA GRIPPE.

Robt. L. Mattson, A. M., Principal of Cullowhee High School, Painter, N. C., writes: "Peruna is the most effective medicine that I have ever tried for la grippe. It also cured my wife of nasal catarrh. Her condition at one time was such that she could not at night breathe through her nostrils."

LA GRIPPE AND SYSTEMIC CATARRH.

Mrs. Jennie W. Gilmore, Box 44, White Oak, Ind. Ter., writes:

"Six years ago I had la grippe, followed by systemic catarrh. The only thing I used was Peruna and Manalin, and I have been in better health the last three years than for years before."

Mrs. Jane Gitt, Athens, Ohio, writes:

"Six years ago I had la grippe very bad. My husband bought me a bottle of Peruna. I was soon able to do my work."

Wonder of Plant Memory.

Plant memory is a problem for the inquisitive botanist, says the Dundee Advertiser. In 1901 a plant allied to the squash and pumpkin was taken to New York from the desert of Sonora, in Mexico, and since then it has been kept—without watering—in a temperature of 3,600 miles from home. During the six weeks of rain in the desert the plant grows its leaves and flowers and perfects its seed. Then it dries up and leaves only a waterfilled gourd, which a thick, hard shell seals against animals and evaporation. The transplanted specimen still remembers the rainy season of six weeks. It wakes, sends out rootlets, stems and leaves, and then dries up again until the following year.

Of Interest to Women.

Every woman naturally should be healthy and strong, but a great many women, unfortunately, are not, owing to the unnatural condition of the lives we lead. Headache, backache and a general nervousness are prevalent amongst the women of to-day, and to relieve these conditions women resort to the druggists for a bottle of some preparation supposed to be particularly for them, and containing—nobody knows what. If they would just get a box of Brandreth's Pills, and take them regularly every night for a time, all these troubles would disappear, as these pills regulate the organs of the femalina system. The same does not only have the same effect, no matter how long they are used.

Brandreth's pills have been in use for over a century, and are for sale everywhere, plain or sugar-coated.

Saved by a Song.

A boy was amusing himself by whistling the birds that were flying around him. At length a beautiful bbbolink perched on a rough bough of an apple tree near by.

The boy picked up a stone, and got ready to throw it at the bird. The bird's throat swelled, and forth came the song: "A-link, a-link, a-link, bobolink, bobolink," a-no-sweet, a-no-sweet, I know it, I know it, a-link, a-link; don't throw it, throw it, throw it."—

And the boy did not throw the stone, but dropped it on the ground.

"Why didn't you stone him, my boy? You might have killed him and carried him home."

The little fellow looked up and replied, "Couldn't 'coe he sang so."—An Irish Paper.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages and that is catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in the curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

The druggist wrote back: "Cannot sell what you want to a minor; the adult must call in person and sign the poison register."

SUFFERED TWELVE YEARS FROM AFTER EFFECTS OF LA GRIPPE.

Mr. Victor Patenaude, 225 Madison St., Topeka, Kan., writes:

"Twelve years ago I had a severe attack of la grippe and I never really recovered my health until two years ago. I began using Peruna and it built up my strength so that in a couple of months I was able to go to work again."

Work and Pray.

When we pray for any virtue, we should cultivate the virtue as well as pray for it; the form of your prayer should be the rule of your life; every petition to God is a precept to man. Look not, therefore, upon your prayers as a method of good and salvation only, but as a perpetual motion of duty. By what we require of God we see what He requires of us.—Jeremy Taylor.

STILL MORE PROOF

That Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Have Cured Even the Most Stubborn Cases of Rheumatism.

"When I was a boy of sixteen," says Mr. Otto H. Rose, a retired grocer, of 1206 Lexington Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind, "I met with a serious accident which injured the bone of my head over the right eye. I recovered from the accident to all appearances, but not many years after I began to have intense pains in the injured part, which came on every year and would last from a few days to several weeks.

"I consulted the doctors, who told me that I was suffering from neuralgia. The sight of my right eye was affected, so that at times I could scarcely see to read it, while both eyes watered constantly. During these attacks I was often dizzy from the terrible pains. The pains came on every morning and passed away in the afternoon. I never suffered from the pain at night.

"I tried without success to get relief until a friend told me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. When I had taken a few boxes I felt the pain growing less intense and in a much shorter time then I had hoped for I was entirely cured. I have recommended the pills to several persons, who have used them with good results.

"My wife uses Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for, nervous headaches and finds them the best medicine she has ever used as they give relief where all others fail."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists or sent, postpaid on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

POULTRY and BEES

DROPPING BOARD.

Arrangement made Which Makes a Lighter and Cheaper Affair.

Instead of a solid platform, or "dropping board," beneath the roosts, use two fairly wide boards in front of and behind the roost, as shown in the cut.

The Dropping Board.

They will catch practically all the droppings, and each board can be carried out and emptied when desired; or a basket can be placed on the floor directly beneath the opening between the boards, and when a box the droppings on ooo board can be shoved off into the basket and pulled forward into the other. Having two boards and these loose, romarks Farm Journal, makes it easier to guard against vermin.

GOOD POULTRYMEN.

Some of the Ways in Which They May Be Known.

It is never difficult to judge a poultryman by the conditions which exist around the yard and houses.

A good poultryman will keep everything neat and clean and provide warm, and comfortable houses, with nice scratching sheds. He will keep only pure breeds, and these ho will select carefully and cull out all poor specimens.

Ho will feed carefully a variety of foods—never too much or too little—and will et all times see chet mites do not get noy headway in the houses.

Ho will provide a separato house for the pullets and will never allow them to roost in trees or on fences.

All in all, everything will tell nt a glance that he is the man who will make a success.

HEN POINTERS.

It will pay to own a root cutter.

Trap nests expose the fraudulent hens.

Fatty meat should never be fed laying stock.

Novor undertako more than you can easily do well.

No positively fresh-egg supply needs to go a-begging.

Indifferent care will ruin the capacity of and breed.

Indian Runners are small ducks and prolific layers.

The steady layor is of more value than the phenomenal one.

"Good condition" is measured by both weight and health.

Hnvo on object in view, and then "work steadily to the line."

To market an ailing fowl is, or should be, considered n crime.—Farm Journal.

An lily ventilated poultry house is an abomination in cold weather when the house must be closed to keep out the cold. It is better to let the house be cold than damp, but if well ventilated there is need of it being either damp or cold.

The drinking water for the fowls should have the chill taken off of it before they can be expected to partake of it freely. They will never lay eggs in abundance if they must drink ice cold water—Journal of Agriculture.

The Need of Grit.

I believo many chicks die during tho summor because they do not get enough grit, declares a writer in Farm and Home. The past summer my supply of grit run out and on unusual number of chicks died of bowel trouble. As soon as I began to feed grit again not nearly so many died.

I make my own grit. I secured a supply of limestone and crushed it to the desired fineness and it gave excellent results. I am a great believer in charcoal for chicks, and, indeed, older birds are all the better for having free access to it. During the past summer I have had excellent results from using only dry food.

Eggs Exported.

Although the hens of the United States do not produce anything like as many eggs' as our own people need, 19,500,000 were exported to Great Britain last year, says Farm Journal. Our British cousins consumed last year more than 17,000,000 pounds of poultry, a considerable portion of which was furnished by the United States. It is therefore plain that the poultry business is not likely to be overdone in the United States very soon.

Country Mud.

Country mud may sometimes be a trifle too deep for comfort, but still it is good, clean soil; while the black ooze on the city streets is a compound of coal dust and pneumonia, sweetness, brick dust and typhoid, besides a hundred other filthy compounds that cling to shoes and clothing like wax.

ONE DAY BEHIND SCHEDULE.

Boston Business Man Wanted to Take Time to Catch Up.

Several years ago, when the University of Chicago held its decennial celebration, John D. Rockefeller was its guest for several days. A bewildering succession of functions followed one another in such quick succession that each affair was from one to four hours late.

At the great banquet on the closing day, Mr. Rockefeller, in his afterdinner speech, told the following story:

"I have felt for the past 24 hours like the Boston business man who lived in the suburbs and came in to his office every day. One winter afternoon he took the train for his home, but a terrific snowstorm was raging, and about half way to his suburb the train was snowed in. All night the passengers were imprisoned, but early in the morning they managed to reach a nearby telegraph station, and the Boston man sent the following dispatch to his office:

"Will not be in the office to-day. Have not got home yesterday yet."—Montreal Herald.

MIX THIS AT HOME.

Valuable Prescription Which Anyone Can Easily Prepare.

The following simple home-made mixture is said to readily relieve and overcome any form of Rheumatism by forcing the Kidneys to filter from the blood and system all the uric acid and poisonous waste matter, relieving at once such symptoms as backache, weak kidneys and bladder and blood diseases.

Try it, as it doesn't cost much to make, and is said to be absolutely harmless to the stomach.

Get the following harmless ingredients from any good pharmacy: Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup of Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking well in a bottle, and take a teaspoonful after each meal and again at bedtime.

The above mixture is said to give prompt relief, and there are very few cases of Rheumatism and Kidney troubles it will fail to cure permanently.

These are all harmless, every-day drugs, and any druggist should keep them in the prescription department; if not, have him order them from the wholesale drug house for you, rather than fail to use this, if you are afflicted.

A Precious Heritage.

Sweetness of temper is a precious heritage. It gives beauty to everything. It keeps its windows open towards the golden country, and fills the home with perpetual delight. The fortunate possessor of a sunny soul is God's favorite in the world. He is a living Gospel, which no one will ever repudiate, and the blessedness of which all men will appreciate. The body will grow old and the smooth brow will be furrowed, but a happy disposition is an aureole to the grey crown of age. Blessed is he whose life looks out upon the land of Beulah, and whose soul is responsive to the nutiying vision."—Exchange.

Strenuous Treatment.

"Grandpa had the lumbago the other day."

"Indeed! What did they do for him?"

"Oh, they used the old-fashioned remedies. They soaked his feet in a tub and put ten home-made plasters and poultices on him. Then they dosed him with herb teas until he was red as a beet. After the lumbago was gone they put him in bed and sent for the doctor."

"Gracious, what did they need the doctor for?"

"Why, to cure him of the effects of the old-fashioned remedies."

Patriotic Colors.

"How is the baby, Mrs. A.?"

"Oh, I am dreadfully worried about him. You see, that careless nurse left him too near the steam radiator and totally turned red."

"Gracious!"

"Then we rushed him out in the cool air and he turned white."

"You don't mean it!"

"Yes, and when we gave him his bath he turned blue."

"Oh, I wouldn't worry over him. He is just a genuine American baby. Hasrah for.the 'Red, White and Blue.'"

GUIDES CHILDREN.

Experience and a Mother's Love Make Advice Valuable.

An Ills. mother writes about feeding children:

"If mothers would use Grape-Nuts more for their little ones, there would be less need of sickness and fewer doctor bills.

"If those suffering from indigestion and stomach trouble, would live on Grape-Nuts, toast and good milk for a short period they would experience more than they otherwise would believe.

"Our children have all learned to know the benefit of Grape-Nuts as an appetising, strengthening food. It is every evening, with few variations like this: 'Mamma, let's have toast and Grape-Nuts for breakfast; or, let's have eggs and Grape-Nuts'—never forgetting the latter.

"One of our boys in school and 12 years of age repeatedly tells me his mind is so much brighter after having Grape-Nuts as a part if not all his breakfast." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

WORKS IN THE GARDEN.

Eighty-Seven Years Old, But Has a Sound Back.

Robert Scollan, 87 years old, of 58 Garden St., Seneca Falls, N. Y., a fine, sturdy old gentleman, who works in his own garden, gives thanks to Doan's Kidney Pills for his sound back and kidneys. Mrs. Goetchious, his daughter, says: "Father had a severe attack of kidney trouble and lumbago, which caused him much suffering. He began taking Doan's Kidney Pills and was soon cured. We always keep them on hand. My husband was cured of bad pains in the back by taking only part of a box."

Used Him as Eraser.

The late Dr. Henry Martyn Field some years ago related at a Williams alumni dinner a rather amusing incident of his freshman days at college. Being only 13 years old when he entered he had not reached the point where the natural friction between the big boy and the small boy ceases and he was at particular feud with one of his fellows, a stalwart country youth fresh from the farm. One day young Field went early to the classroom and put upon the big blackboard a very exasperating caricature of his enemy, with his name beneath. When the aggrieved party saw what had been done he said not a word, but catching up his youthful tormentor, he used him as an eraser and after rubbing out the offensive picture quietly took his seat.

NO RELIEF FROM ECZEMA

For Over Two Years—Patent Medicines, Quack Cures, and Doctors Fail—Cuticura Succeeds.

"I was very badly afflicted with eczema for more than two years. The parts affected were my limbs below the knees. I tried all the physicians in the town and some in the surrounding towns, and I also tried all the patent remedies that I heard of, besides all the cures advised by old women and quacks, and found no relief whatever until I commenced using the Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Resolvent. In fact the Cuticura Remedies I found immediate relief, and was soon sound and well. C. Y. Betts, Tippecanoe, Ind., Nov. 15, '05."

Henry Clay and Lew Wallace.

"Mr. Clay was of a personality once seen never to be forgotten. Tall, slender, graceful, he had besides the air majestic which kings affect, imparting it exclusive property.

"Throughout Mr. Clay's performance my eyes scarcely left his countenance, which, as he proceeded, sank from sight until he was left with facial illusions, nothing of it remained but the mouth, and that kept enlarging and widening until it seemed one elastic hole holding the ears together. Indeed, at this late writing, my one distinct recollection of the man and his speech is the mouth and its capacity for infinite distension."—Autobiography of Lew Wallace.

THREE EPOCHS IN A WOMAN'S LIFE

MRS. ELVA BARBER EDWARDS

MRS. GEORGE WALTERS

There are three critical stages in a woman's life which leave their mark on her career. The first of these stages is womanhood, or the change from a care free girl to budding womanhood. The second is motherhood, and the third is Change of Life.

Perils surround each of these stages, and many of the misery that comes to women through ill health dates from one or another of these important crises.

Women should remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made from native roots and herbs has carried thousands of young girls over the critical period of puberty, has prepared mothers for Childbirth, and in later years carried them safely through the change of life more successfully than any other remedy in the world. Thousands of testimonials from grateful women, two of which are here published, substantiate this fact beyond contradiction.

Mrs. George Walters of Woodlawn, Ill. writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I feel it my duty to tell you of the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me in preparing for childbirth. After suffering and losing my children a friend advised me to try your valuable medicine. I took your advice in five weeks and was entirely relieved of more than thirty years its long list of aches and pains, by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to the respect and confidence of every fair minded person.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Makes Sick Women Well.

Mrs. Elva Barber Edwards of Cathlamet, Wash., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I went to tell you how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound carried me through the critical period of the Change of Life without any trouble whatever, also cured me of a very severe female weakness, and I cannot say enough in praise of what your medicine has done for me."

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for Mrs. Walters and Mrs. Edwards it will do for other women in their condition. Every suffering women in the United States is invited to accept the following invitation. It is free, will bring you health and may save your life.

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women.

MASURY'S HOUSE PAINTS WILL WITHSTAND THE RAVAGES OF TIME.

THE perfection attained by Masury's House Paints during the sixty-five years they have been in use is due to the great care with which the ingredients are used in their manufacture.

The pigments employed are ground in Pure Linseed Oil by specially constructed machinery which ensures uniformity in consistency and color.

They are superior in covering capacity, preservative qualities and durability of finish. These established points of excellence make them at once the safest and most economical paints to buy.

In determining this matter of suitable paints you must remember that it costs as much to cover your house with poor paint as it does to cover it with the best, and that inasmuch as Masury's House Paints defer repainting for the longest possible period, they are the proper paints to buy. Because by their great endurance the original cost is of slight moment. Manufactured by

True Stories of Experiences in the State, War, Treasury and Postoffice Departments.

The Changed Prescription

"My Dear Col. Cheney:

"The bearer, Mrs. Elvloa Simpson, is in dire distress; and after haviog heard her story I am convinced you are the only man on earth thnt caa assist her. I bespeak for her your very best personal efforts. I still hold in grateful remembranco the splendid work you did for me, and Mrs. Farwell joins mo in best wisbes. Sincerely,

"CHARLES B. FARWELL."

"P. S.—I will bo responsible for your fee in this case."

So read Col. Cheney whlla Jeff stood by awaiting the coloael's orders.

"Farwell," ba mused, "ob, yes; that's the chap from Dulutb tbst 'wanted n name.' His P. S. is extremely interesting." Then to Jeff: "Lady waiting outside?"

"Yas, Kunnel, an' sbe's powerful perturbed, sah. She bin cryin' I 'spect fum th' look ob her eyes."

"That's notbing, Jeff, women cry on the slightest provocation."

"Das de trufe, kuonal. But dis pore woman's in n heap o' troublo an' ve'y anxious ter see you. I reckon sbo's a widder. She all dressed in brack."

"Well, show her in, Jeff, ond let's get through with it."

"Yes, sah."

Mrs. Simpson camo in almost timidly. She was n tiny littlo woman, nbout 55 years old. Her eyes wero a kindly gray, though red from recent weeping. Her plain black habiliments confirmed Jeff's assertion thst sbo was n widow.

"Mrs. Simpsoo?"

"Yes, sir," replied the woman in a quiet diffideot voice, "snd I kaow you are Col. Cheney. Mr. Farwell sbowed me your picture."

"You koow Mr. Farwoll quite well, Mrs. Simpson?" Col. Cheney merely wanted to get tbo womnn perfectly nt ease so sho could state her trouble succinctly and in as few words ns possible.

"Oh yes, sir, indeed I do. When ho first camo to Cbicago nnd worked in the post office he boarded witb me on the West side. Ho continued to meke my houso his homo even after hs entered the railwsy mnil service."

Mrs. Simpson's manner and taik showed her to bo a womsn of refinement ond good breeding. Her appearanco would indicato sho was not in easy circumstaaccs.

"You see, Col. Cbeney, wben troubie camo I knew no ono to go to, no ons in all tbis broad city, so I wroto Mr. Farweli and told him everytbing. Tbis morning an nnswer cams end inclosed therein was tba lottor of introduction to you. You may ba snro I lost no time in coming to your office."

"Yes, Mrs. Simpson," replied Cbeney with a pleasaat smile, "and now perhsps you will teli mo tbis nwful trouble. Maybo we sban't find it so had after nil." Tban ha muttered to himself: "Women invsriably put tho cart beforo tba horse."

Mrs. Simpson actually smiled a wan, pitiful smile. Her henrt wss sora oppressed and tho colonel knew it, but something in his frank, pleasant manner seemed to giva her hope nod courage, nnd sbe replied:

"Excuso me, colonel; I tbought you knew; it's nbout my son Samuel. He's 24 years old and a pharmacist. Ha graduated nt tbo university four years ago with n degreo of Ph. G. and sbortly afterwards took a position in tbo store of G. H. Rhodus, of this city. Thero hss never been e complaint against him so fsr as I know. His habits are good and all his sparo time is spent in readiog. His wages hs always brought to me saying I must not work so hard. You see, colonel," and here the little woman's eyes dropped, "we haven't had much since my husband died 15 years ago, and sometimes it's heen a hard struggle to get along. Samuel was doing so well and not long ago congratnleted himsoif that his salary hnd been increased, so that I couid keep housa for him and do nothing else. Now," and hero thoro was a catch in her voice, "now it's all gone—all gone."

"But why, Mrs. Simpson, why is it all gone? What has made the change?" quietly asked tho colonel.

"Samnel is in jail!" A suppressed sob sprang involuntarily from the poor woman's heart as she conveyed this information.

"In jail!" exclaimed Cbensy. "For what?"

It took a momsnt for Mrs. Simpson to recover herself and she proceeded:

"Some time ago Mr. J. H. Haviland's little daughter Lanra was suddenly takon very ill. Dr. Furniss was called to attend her and wrote a prescription. Mr. Haviland's butler took it to Rhodus' store and Samnel filled it. He gave the medicine to tbe butler. That night Laura Haviland died. Thero was an investigation and as a result Samuel was arrested for criminal carelessness in filling the prescription." Again Mrs. Simpson's feelings well-nigh overcame her.

"Go on, Mrs. Simpson, tell me everything."

"Yes sir, I will. Natnrally Mr. Haviland was very bitter and his wife was almost crazed by her grief. Laura was their only child and both parents fairly idolized her. I sympathize with them with all my heart. Dr. Furniss made a statemeot to Mr. Haviland in which he said tbo prescription had not been properly filled, tbat a certain poisonous drug had been placed therein in sufficient quantity to kill a man. Samuel had compounded the prescription, but he insists he put it up exactly as prescribed. That's tha whole case, colonel, and oh," bero all a mother's yearning, love and heartfelt pleading cama into Mrs. Simpson's voice, "I know Samuel did not make ths horrible mistake. I know it. He couldn't have done so. You will help me, won't you, colonel?" Her hands were raised in entreaty.

"From what you say, Mrs. Simpson," gravely replied ths colonel, "it's a very serious caso. Dr. Furniss stands high professionally in this city. I am frank to admit I do not like him any too well, bat that doesn't affect his professional standing. I can't promise any definite results but I'll investigata and see what can be done. Who is your son's lawyer?"

"Ho hasn't any; I couldn't afford to pay very mucb, and tbs Havilands are so rich it would take a good ona to offset tbe talent employed by them to assist tha stata in prosecuting my son. Oh, Col. Cheney, it's awful—awful!" and heart-rending sobs ahook tho little woman's frame.

"There, calm yourself, Mrs. Simpson, your son sbail at least have fair play. I'll get him a lawyer; I'll see the boy right away and arrange bail. Meantima you go homs; Samuel will join you thera this afternoon; later I'll inform yon what to do. Pending the boy's trial I'll try and get him soms employment, though, of course, he could hardly expect to follow his profession until this cass is settled."

"God bless you, Col. Chensy. Mr. Farwell said you would help me, end I feel better already."

"I can't do impossible things; but I'll leave no stone unturned to find out tbo truth. That's what we went, Mrs. Simpson, the truth."

"That's all, colonel, and tha truth will vindicata my son Samuel."

Mrs. Simpson left, and witb his usual alacrity Col. Chensy started to work on the caae.

First hs called up "Central 2126."

"Hello," he said, "Mr. Layton, please."

"Hello, tbat you, Layton? This is Chsney talking. Are you very busy now?"

"No," eoms back tho answsr over tho copper wire; "end if I was I wouldn't be too busy to do anything I could for you. What's up, colonel?"

"Got a case for you. Not a big fee, if any, but a charitable act, and a heap of satisfaction for you in doing it."

"What is it?"

"Too long to explain over ths wire; besides tho details ars not yet complete. I'm going over to the county jail now, and will see you on my return. By the way, I may want you to go bail for a friend of mine."

"All right, colonel, do as you ses fit. I'll wait for you and wo'll go to luncheon together."

"All right, Layton; good-by."

"Good-by."

Mr. Emerson Layton wss a very shrowd lawyer, ngo about 39, and also independently rich.

As Mrs. Simpson had stated, Mr. Haviland was a very rich aod influential man. His stately home facing tbe Lake Sbore drive was ooe of tba most beautiful in the city. He would leava no stons unturned to prosecute the man responsible for his daughter's death.

Dr. Furniss, the physician in tho case, was what is known as a "fashionable doctor." His practice was among the rich, and bis fees in keeping. A graduate of Pennsylvania university, he had an extensive hospital practice, and had later gona abroad and studied in Heidelberg and Vienna for two years. Professionally he was wall equipped, and enjoyed good standing. His influential family connections had insured him a larga practica from tha first. As Cheney had told Mrs. Simpson, he personally did not lika Dr. Furniss.

At 11 o'clock he appeared at the jail. At his request he was allowed to see Samnel Simpson. Cheney looked the young man over thoroughly. He was a clean-cut, manly-looking chap, brown eyes and hair, and truth was written all over his face. The colonel told Simpson of tha interview he had had that morning with his mother. Frankly and honestly young Simpson related to Col. Cheney all he knew of the case. Of course Rhodus had a very large store, and large numbers of prescriptions were put up there every day. Ha could not remember the component parts of any one he had filled. But it was an invariable rule that each prescription be checked after it was filled. Simpson had done this, and pasted the filled prescription in a big book kept for that purpose. After he had given the medicine to the Havilands' waiting butler the matter passed from his mind, and he thought no more of it until his arrest. That was all.

"What hours were you usually working in the store, Simpson?" asked the colonel.

"I came on at eight in the morning, sir, and save for an hour for luncheon, worked until six."

"About what time was this prescription filled?"

"Abont five in the afternoon, if I remember rightly."

"And Laura Haviland died at midnight the same night, I believe?"

"Yes, sir."

"You know Dr. Furniss?"

"By sight, yes, sir. Ha's besn in tha stora several times about medicins."

"Been in there sinca tha child died?"

"The day following, about ten in tbs morning, ha cama in and asked to sea the prescription book—ssid hs wanted to look up n certain prescription hs had given n man somo tims ngo."

"Who wns thers while he was looking up tbis—er—prescription for a man?"

"Why, no one, sir, as I recollect."

"And you wera with him all the tima hs was in tbs stora that morning?"

"Yes.—Wait. No—let ms think. Hs did ask ma to get him soma morphine tablets one-eighth strength for his hypodsrmic casa."

"You got them?"

"Yes, sir; I went to a room behind tha prescription casa whsre poisons ara 'kspt and secured what Dr. Furniss wanted."

"How long were you gone?"

"Two minutes, possibly. Not over three at tha outside."

"Very good. And ths next you knsw was your arrest?"

"Yes, sir."

"Whsra has the prescription hook been sinca your arrest; do you know?"

"Tha officer arresting ma was accompanied by a man from tha prosecutor's office, and he took the prescription in question with him. I supposa it's to ba used against me."

This concluded ths interview. Chsney arranged the bail and sent Samuel homa to his mother with an injunction to say nothing abont the cass to a soul and to report at Cheney's office at nina tha next morning.

Then Cheney went to tha prosecutor's office and obtained an exact copy of ths disputed prescription. He 'phoned Sid Guthrie to meet him at Layton's office. Guthria was there waiting whsn Chsney arrived.

"Go ont and get a spot on Dr. Harry Furniss; he has offices in the Renault building. There's about a hundred doctors in that building, but Furniss is ths king pin of tbem all, so far as style goes. Don't loss sight of him until to-morrow morning. Report to me at nins o'clock."

Guthria went and Layton, who had heard Chsnay's admonition, said:

"Furniss, eh? What's hs up to now?"

"Don't know yet, Layton, but that's tha case I spoke to you abont."

While at luncheon Cbeney told Layton ths sntira case as ha knaw it. Layton agreed to defend young Simpson, and whsn compensation was mentioned he laconically said: "Oh, hang the money part of it," which was typical of ths man.

Chany arranged to have his friends Dr. Stuyvesant and Layton come to his office at 9:30 the next morning.

Guthrie reported as directed. "He had found Dr. Furniss at his offica. Tha doctor saw a number of patients at his office until threa p. m.; mads a faw calls on the North side until five o'clock; wsnt to his bschelor apartmsnts and remained until six; cams out in evening clothes, dined at Auditorium Annex with two men; after dinner attended Illinois thsater; was called to 'phone during second act; at conclusion of performanoa took cab with bis two friends, went to South side, got couple of women acquaintances aod went to several places of more or less questionable character; women friends and two men left Furniss at two a. m.; doctor then went home a little bit under the weather; hadn't left home at nine a. m."

"You say 'women friends,' Sid. What kind?"

"Not tbs kind I'd care to be seen with in public."

"All right, Guthrie; put Lonergan on his trail to-day and you get soms rest. You need it."

"Bet I do, colonel. S'long." And Guthria was gone.

At 9:30 o'clock Layton, Simpson and Dr. Stuyvesant met in Chenay's office.

"Now, Simpson," said Chenay, when all were comfortably seated, "tell Mr. Layton and Dr. Stuyvesent just wbat you told me yesterday. Understand, averyona here is your friend."

Without a tremor in his voice and with the ring of honesty in avery word, Simpson told his story. Layton and Dr. Stuyvesant were impressed and whan tha boy was through Layton said:

"Go ovar to my office and I'll giva yon a position as a clerk and messenger until this case is settled." When the boy had gona Dr. Stuyvesant said:

"Have you that prescription, colonel?"

"Here's a copy I made yestarday. Yon doctors hava such an unintelligible way of writing these things, a person not an expert would have tronble in reading it."

"I guesa I can make it ont," said tha doctor, smiling. Then reading to himself he said: "Tincture Opii camphorated; Tincture Kino; Syrup Zangiberis and Syrup Simplicis. Teaspoonful evary three hours.' Um. Not an uncommon one; used for intestinal troubles for children. Nothing in that to produce death."

"Two doses of the medicine were given the child and three hours after the second dose she died. A chemical analysis was made of the remaining portion of the medicine. I secured it and here it is," said Col. Cheney, producing the paper. "What do you make of that, doctor?"

The doctor studied the paper carefully and said: "Good God! Cheney, there is no camphorated tincture of opium in this; it says Tincture of Opium.' That means the pure drug, and thera was anough to kill a strong man, lot alone a delicate child. It looks bad for the boy; it looks bad."

"Hold on a minuta," interrupted Layton, "Cheney only has a copy of that prescription. As counsel for young Simpson I want tha original. I know it's not customary to allow it, but tha prosecuting attorney will let me have it, I know. Ha's a good friend of mina. Just wait here a few moments, you fellows," and Layton grabbed his hat and was gone.

Chensy and Dr. Stuyvesant occupied themselves for about ten minutes when Layton burst through the door like a cyclone. He was an impetuous man. "Here it is," he exclaimed, laying tbs prescription on tbs table. This is what Dr. Stuyvesant and Cheney read:

For Laura Haviland.

℞	Tr. Opii Camph	ʒ iv.
	Tr. Kino	ʒ ii.
	Syr. Zangiberis	ʒ i.
	Syr. Simplicis qs. ad	℥ iii.

♏ st sig ʒ i. every 3 hours.

FURNISS.

44678S

4—10—82

"Well, doctor," finally said Chensy, "what about it?"

"There's nothing to it. Tha prescription is regular and professionally correct. It's in Furniss' handwriting; I'd know it any placs. Tha young man Simpson evidently forgot himself and put in tincture of opium instead of ths camphorated. It's an awful blunder to maka. I'm sorry for him becausa ha appeared honest to ms."

"It does look bad, Cheney," said Layton, "but we'll do what wa can for the boy. A light sentenca may bs securad."

"Sentenca bs damned!" burst out Cbenay. "I'm not convinced yet. I want time to think it over. I'll 'phona you gentlemen later."

After they had gona tha colonel paced up and down tha room denying himself to all. Ha went carefully over tha whola casa. Mrs. Simpson's position appealed to him, as did tha boy's honesty; but there was that damnabla telltala prescription, there was tha chemist's analysis; the chain appeared complete.

A gentla breeza from the window came into tha room; it caught up ths original prescription and blew it on the floor at Cbeney's feet. Ha stooped, picked it up, and was about to deposit it on ths tabla when something caught his aya. Ha stopped, looked at the paper in his hand for a moment. Three steps took him to ths window, up went tha curtain, and from his pocket Col. Chensy took out a powerful magnifying glass. In tha glaring sunlight he studied every phase, avery word and characteristic of tha written prescription. His breath almost stopped.

"Well, by the eternal!" he muttered. "He is elevsr but ha's overstepped himself this tima." Back to his desk be went and 'phoned Layton and Stuyvesant to coma to his office at four o'clock—thera was going to bs "something doing" in ths Simpson case—No, ha wouldn't teli now, but thsy could come prepared for a good time; that was all.

Guthria was routed out; Chsnay wouldn't trust any other of his force to do what ha wanted dona that day.

"Go out and find out all you can about ths movements of Dr. Furniss on tha —th of this month (naming the date of Laura Haviland's death); get it quick as you can. Pick up Lonergan and tell him I want Furniss hera at four this afternoon."

The sleep was gone from Guthrie's eyes and ha did as hs was told.

At three ha reported. Chensy listened to what he had to say and muttered, "thought so."

At four o'clock Layton and Dr. Stuyvesant came in wondering what was up. Chensy navar said a word about what was on his mind. A little while later Dr. Furniss came in dressed like a fashion plate: long coat, gray trousers and gloves, red scarf, silk hat, walking stick and patent leather shoes. Ha looked tha part of a "fashionable doctor." Cheney had met him onca and said:

"Good afternoon, doctor. Of course you know Dr. Stuyvesant and Mr. Layton?"

Dr. Furniss bowed slightly and said: "Good evening, gentlemen," and then to Col. Chenay: "You wished to see me about something, I believe—professionally?"

"Well, no and yes. I'm not personally ill," replied tha colonel, smiling. "I have been interested in the Simpson case. You remember it doubtless?"

"The young man who compounded tha prescription for Laura Haviland and by mistake put in a virulent poison? Oh, yes, I remember it."

"Mr. Layton is Simpson's lawyer and Dr. Stuyvesant has been called as a medical expert for tha dafense."

"It certainly is in competent hands than," said Furniss, bowing to Stuyvesant. "Thank you," quietly replied Stuyvesant, and Cheney continued:

"You attended Laura Haviland, I believe?"

"Yes."

"And wrote this prescription which was sent to Rhodus' drug store to be filled?" Dr. Furniss looked at the paper in Cheney's hand, and said:

"Yes, that's the prescription."

"Two doses, I believe, were given the child, one at six and the other at nine o'clock. Coma set in and at 12 o'clock that night the child died."

"You seem to be pretty well informed," said the doctor, smiling. "What you say is correct."

"Thank you. You are sure this prescription here is exactly as it was when you gava it to Jorkins, the butler, to have filled?"

"Precisely. Why all this quastioning, Col. Cheney? The prescription speaks for itself. Dr. Stuyvesant, here, can doubtless identify my handwriting."

"Quita true, tha doctor has already done so. I admit it is all your handwriting. But I also know," and here Col. Cheney arose, pointed his finger at Dr. Furniss and in a voice tense with indignation continued: "I know when you gave the butler the prescription it read: 'Tinctura of opii.' The word 'Comphornted' was not there."

Furniss turned as pale as a ghost, but gazed at Cbeney unflinchingly. The latter continued:

"When ths child died your professional instinct and knowledge told you it was a drug, not disease, that killed her. You began to wonder what was in the compound. Haviland, though torn with grief, had sense enough to taka the bottla for examination. You couldn't destroy that avidenca, if evidence thare was. At ten tha next morning you went into Rhodus' drug store, doubtless purposely going in at a tima when you knew Simpson was alone. You saw tha prescription; 'Tinctura of opii' stood out in glaring letters, accusing you of criminal carelessness. But you have a fertile mind, Dr. Furniss; you realized your mistaka, and told tha young man you wanted morphine tablets for your hypodermic case. Ha went to a small room whsra poisons are kept, and whila he was gona you quickly wrote 'C-A-M-P-H' after 'Opii.' Clever, my dear doctor, damned clever, but you overstepped once." The doctor started to interrupt, but Chensy continued: "Wait, I'm not through yet. The afternoon you wera called to Havilands' you wera attending a reception at tha Orrins'. It was a pretty gay reception, becausa in two hours you drank several high balls, bssides numerous potions of punch. Your condition was decidedly uncertain, though you had good control of your physical actions. Now, doctor, what about it?"

Layton and Dr. Stuyvesant looked on with wondering eyes. Furniss had paled, but later regained his equilibrium. After Cbsney was through ha said:

"Well, what about it? You have concocted a clever story, but it's all a series of damned lies—what can you prove? Nothing. Your trap is well laid, but I don't walk into it." Here the doctor got very sarcastic and continued: "Of what avail will your improbable story bs against my word? Bah!"

Tha doctor was fine, but Cbeney wasn't through yet. "Damn you," ha said, moving towards the doctor, "I expected that. You would fortify yourself with the high standing of your family and tha exalted position you hold among the profession; you would sacrifice young Simpson, kill his poor mother with grief; you would do all this to sava your own worthless self from the punishment you richly deserve, and which you are going to get. Listen a minute while I play the trump card. The evening you wrote tha prescription at Haviland's housa you used a plain black pencil. The next day in the drug stora you got hold of tha wrong pencil, and used ona with indelible lead to write 'Camph,' though tha sama color as tha other one. There are two in your pocket now," pointing at tha doctor's upper waistcoat pocket. "Look at this," and Col. Cheney moistened the end of his finger and touched the word "Opii." and then "camph." On tha first word no impression was made, but the word "Camph" became a dark purplish blue. "Now, Dr. Furniss, do you deny my story?"

Layton murmured "Good God!" under his breath. Stuyvesant stood perfectly still watching the drama unfold. Furniss' eyes almost seemed to jump from his head. He looked at Chensy's telltala work fascinated, like a rabbit does into the eyes of a cobra.

"Well," he stammered, "what are you going to do about it?"

"Do? From here we three gentlemen are going to tha prosecuting attorney's office and have tha charge against Simpson dismissed. To do this we shall tell the story. What tha prosecutor will do I don't know, but he's pretty keen after crooks." Furness winced as Cheney pronounced the word. "Then we're going to have that young man reinstated in his position, and Mr. Haviland put in possession of tha truth. That's all, Dr. Furniss."

"Can't this be fixed up?" said Furniss, with a sickly smile. Ha was one of those persons who supposed that every man had his price. Just how ha got out of that office, ha never could distinctly remember, but ha had a recollection of strong physical assistance from behind.

An officer was sent by tha prosecutor to arrest him that evening after Cheney had told his story. But tha bird had flown, and money perhaps saved him from being apprehended.

Mrs. Simpson was a happy little woman that night when her boy was brought to her free from all suspicion. Rhodus was glad to get him back.

"Col. Cheney," said Mrs. Simpson, while tears of joy ran down her cheek, "how can I ever repay you for what you have done for us? How—How—"

"You have already repaid me, Mrs. Simpson—paid me in full," said the colonel, with a bright smile.

"But I don't understand—how?" faltered the little woman.

"The smile on your face, the light in your eye, the joy in your heart, are full recompense for all I have done."

"God bless you, colonel."

Among these ara tha senior championship of ths Amateur Athletic Union at the Lewis and Clark exposition and tha 1,500-meter run at the Olympian games in Athens in 1906. In the 1,800-meter run at the Athens tournament ha was second by ten inches, and hs won several smaller events there. Lightbody was almost barred from participating in the Athenian games because of being conditioned in his studies at Chicago university, but by hard work he managed to make up his deficiency and had ths conditions removed. This has taught him, however, that it is nearly impossible to ba a good student and a good athlete at ths sama time, ha says, and as he does not expect to maka athletics his life occupation, he believes it his duty to devote more time to his mental equipment than ha has been doing.

Sensitiveness is one of tha characteristics of baseball playing, many members of tha profession being touchy in spots and soma all over. They dislike to hava their work criticized in a derogatory way, as it unfits them for duty and keeps them in a disturbed stata of mind. They keenly feel the stings of sarcasm or the gibes of disappointed fans. In other words, adverse criticism breaks them all up. While the majority of present day managers advise their players to keep plugging away and ignora criticism, many are unable to follow that sensible advice. They cannot stand tha gaff of adversa comment. Baseball history tells of a number of good players who chose to retire from the profession rather than ba subjected to remarks which rankled within their bosoms and upset their equilibrium. Posing as they do in ths continual limelight as public celebrities, ball players should possess natures impervious to attack, but all are not built alike. Baseball fans are a fickla class—always have been and always will ba. They ara very apt to hand a ball player a bouquet one day and a lemon the next. Few fans are lenient in judgment, but once a player makes good with them he possesses an army of friends who hold him up as an idol until the passing years bring stiffness to his joints and ba drops out of sight into a lesser league.

Many a good story is told on Tom Sharkey, but Tim McGrath, the famous trainer, and Eddie Graney, the "Honest Blacksmith" and peer of all referees, vie with each other in the spinning of yarns about the famous heavyweight. Here's Graney's story:

"After inspecting a bunch of Christmas turkeys in a butcher shop, Sharkey decided on one weighing 18 pounds, and paid for it. When tha bird reached Tom's house tha latter decided to weigh it, because ha is suspicious of everybody. He found it weighed only 13 pounds. As angry as a March hare, Sharkey sat off with Mr. Turk for the butcher shop. 'What's tha matter with this bird?' he asked angrily. 'When I bought it it weighed 18 pounds; now it weighs only 13.' 'Well, Mr. Sharkey,' said the butcher, 'you bought the turkey undressed. In getting it ready for tha table I suppose we dressed away about five pounds of it.' 'Is that the case?' asked Sharkey tartly. 'Well, in the future none of this three o'clock weighing in for me. When I buy turkey I want ringside weight. Good-day. That's all.'"

PRESIDENT SPARES NOT HIS OLD CLASSMATE

WASHINGTON. — There was forwarded to congress the other day in connection with a report of the interstate commerce commission on the same subject a letter written by President Roosevelt to Charles S. Hanks scoring Hanks and his colleague, George W. Harrison, for their failure to make good certain grave charges made against the work of the interstate commerce commission.

How Henks got his job is an interesting story. Hanks belonged to the class of '79 at Harvard, Roosevelt to that of '80. They were the champion boxers of their classes and met in an interclass championship affair. Hanks knocked down the future president.

After getting through college Roosevelt plunged into politics. Hanks married a rich wife and devoted himself to golf. He is the author of a book, "Niblick on Golf." Twenty-seven years later the two men met accidentally on a train in New England. The president was traveling in a private car. He got sight of Hanks in the car ahead. He rushed up to him, greeted him affectionately, dragged him back into the private car, and presented him to several members of the cabinet and others of the party as the "only man who ever knocked me down."

They talked about what they had done. Hanks was forced to confess he had not done anything serious.

"It's about time you did, old man," said the president.

"Well, I'm beginning to think so myself," said Hanks. "But what on earth shall I do? Give me a job down in Washington and I'll go to work."

"I will," said the president.

After much thought Mr. Hanks came down and announced that he had decided his life work should be "railroad legislation." The rate bill fight was then on. He thought he could furnish the president with some reliable information if he was given an opportunity to study the subject.

So he was installed as a clerk in the interstate commerce commission at $7,500 a year. He had an order from the president on the commission to turn the railroad problem inside out and shake it if he wanted to.

Hanks began drawing his $100 per month from the government, living meanwhile at the Willard hotel in apartments that cost him $100 a week. He brought G. W. Harrison, a friend, along, so that he would not get lonesome.

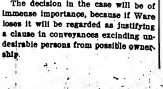
The result of this deep study on the part of the exiled Boston clubman was that he told the president all rates, both passenger and freight, ought to be given a horizontal slash of 10 per cent.

The result is as stated above.

WILSON'S IDEAS AS TO GOVERNMENT INVENTORS

IT IS a queer idea James Wilson has, in this day of graft, with respect to the duty of an inventor who uses government time and materials, toward that government. He holds that whatever the man invents should be patented for the benefit of the whole people and be given to them for their use without price.

Up in the army and navy when an officer who has been paid for his time and has used government materials and laboratories to perfect an invention it is to custom for the officer to give the free use of his invention to the government, if the government as an organization desires to use his patent. If it does not—and they usually see to it that it does not—the inventor is held to be at liberty to sell his invention to a firm or corporation which will use it and compel the government to pay royalties.



That is the exact condition with respect to the smokeless powder used by the navy. The patent is owned by a naval officer. The navy department has the right to use the patent, but it refuses to do so. So the officer has transferred the patent to the powder trust, which exacts 70 cents a pound for powder which reliable powder makers will contract to furnish at not to exceed 40 cents a pound. If permitted to use the patent worked out on the time of the government and with the materials belonging to the government.

Wilson holds that the law allowing free patents if the inventor will allow the government to use the invention should be construed to mean the people of the United States instead merely of the organization called the government.

Two of the scientists under Wilson have perfected a mechanical apparatus to be used in ascertaining the amount of moisture in grains. It is to be used in the grading of corn, wheat and oats when the farmer brings them to market. Any intelligent layman will be able to use it. Secretary Wilson ordered it patented and dedicated to the people of the United States for their free manufacture and use. The people of foreign countries will have to pay royalties on it.

Wilson's scientists have patented a toxin that destroys the germs of hog cholera and a process for the propagation and distribution of nitrogen-gathering bacteria which enables farmers to fertilize fields that have been robbed of nitrogen without inoculating them with pieces of sod brought from lands known to have the little insects needed to restore the proper amount of nitrogen by taking it from the air. The two inventions would have made the inventors millionaires, but Wilson compelled the inventors, who were working on government time and using government laboratories, to dedicate their discoveries to the free use of the people of this country.

NEGRO BUYS HOME NEAR ENRAGED MILLIONAIRES

FASHIONABLE Washington is agog over the purchase of a home in one of the most exclusive sections of the city by Alonzo Ware, a negro. Ware started to move into his new home, 1756 T street, but was enjoined. The matter is now awaiting hearing on its merits, and extensive real estate holders will make an effort to have the injunction made permanent.

John M. Henderson sold the house to James E. Leath for $6,500. Leath, a white man, said he was soon to marry and wanted a home. After the deal was closed Leath turned over the title to Ware for $10, and it is not alleged that Ware was the real principal in the transaction. Henderson owns $100,000 worth of property in the immediate neighborhood, he says, and has always been extremely careful that he sold only to desirable people so as not to injure the value of his remaining holdings. He charges that Leath secured the property by false representations and asks that the deeds to him and Ware be nullified.

The property is at 1766 T street, northwest, near Dupon Circle, the habitat of multi-millionaires. Several wealthy senators and congressmen have fine homes in the immediate neighborhood.

The decision in the case will be of immense importance, because if Ware loses it will be regarded as justifying a clause in conveyances excluding undesirable persons from possible ownership.

PEOPLE TALKED ABOUT

POPCORN PEDLER TO SENATOR

From popcorn peddler to United States senator is the story of the rise of William Alden Smith. He has represented the Fifth Michigan district in congress since 1894, and is now a choice of the Michigan Republicans to succeed Senator Alger.

Forced by the humble circumstances of his family, William Alden Smith, at 12 years of age, left Dowagiac, Mich., his birthplace, went to Grand Rapids and began selling popcorn on the streets there.

W. W. Hannaq of Detroit is said to have given young Smith his first recipe for sugar-coated popcorn. Smith proved to be such a success in the popcorn business that his profits soon amounted to as much as $75 a month.

His first job in any way connected with politics was given him by Speaker John T. Rich, who appointed him as page in the house of representatives at Lansing in 1879.

He began to study law in 1882. He studied alone for a while, and later became associated with the law firm of Smiley, Smith & Stevens. He was admitted to the bar at the age of 24, and later became general counsel for the Chicago & West Michigan and the Detroit, Grand Rapids & Western railroads.

His first work of any importance in connection with his railroad duties was at the time when the late J. B. Mulliken, general manager of the Detroit, Lansing & Northern, determined to run a line to Grand Rapids.

The task of securing a right of way was no easy one, and Smith was employed for the purpose of buying the necessary property at the right prices. His work in this connection was highly satisfactory, and in consideration of his services the company gave him the entrance which it was necessary to move to give place for the tracks. These cottages he moved to his own property and soon had houses to rent as well as houses and lots to sell.

He was made state game warden under Gov. Luce in 1887, which position he held until 1891. Later he was instrumental in building a logging railroad from Rapid City to Kalkaska and Stratford, and afterward his Lowell & Hastings branch to Belding.

When the Pere Marquette wanted these branches it is said that William Alden Smith made a neat sum, somewhere in the neighborhood of $100,000. He was elected to represent the Fifth Michigan district in congress in 1894, he was reelected in 1896, and has been elected by increased majorities each two years since.

In March, 1906, he bought a controlling interest in the Grand Rapids Herald, in which he had previously owned some stock.

Mr. Smith was born May 12, 1859; was married in 1886 to Maria Osterhout, and is the father of one son, William Alden Smith, Jr.

DANISH SHERLOCK HOLMES

Their coat-of-arms, a chessboard held by two lions, adorns many an old castle and manor in Denmark.

Baron Rosenkrantz, appropriately enough as the bearer of such a name, was born at Elsinore, where the principal scenes in "Hamlet" are laid. He is 39 years old. He studied law after a short term in the army became a magistrate. But his strong feeling of independence made him ill at ease in the service of the state and he left the bench to become a practicing lawyer. His first writings, which appeared in various newspapers, were scathing attacks on the Danish system of administering justice. His excursions in the realms of journalism led him into the pleasanter fields of literature and the drama. In the course of eight years he has produced 16 novels and seven plays.

At the Tsarkoe-Selo station Mr. Meyer entered a gilded state coach drawn by four white horses with liveried outriders, and an escort of the emperor's own Cossacks, and was driven to the palace in military state, the court dignitaries following in other state carriages. He was met at the palace by the Princess Galitzin, grand mistress of the court, and conducted into the presence of the emperor.

Of his books the most notable is "Royal Love," written in 1903, which tells the story of Henry VIII. and ill-fated Anne Boleyn, founded on a historical study of the period and unpublished letters and documents. The baron has just produced a dramatization of it. His experience gained as a magistrate and lawyer, combined with a deep insight into human nature, he has utilized in the production of several detective novels of thrilling interest and the creation of a character which he has dubbed the Scandinavian "Sherlock Holmes." Though a prolific and facile writer, he is a most conscientious and painstaking one. His mother was a Scotch woman, a member of the famous old Clan Mackenzie, and he speaks and writes English perfectly.

LOVED BY MANY CHILDREN

Mrs. Daniel Lothrop under the pen name of Margaret Sidney has endeared herself to thousands of American boys and girls by her naturally executed and fine flavored books for juveniles.

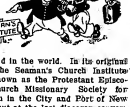
Mrs. Lothrop's maiden name was Harriet Mulford Stone. She was born in New Haven.

It was Mrs. Lothrop who first perceived the assistance which would be derived for the furthering of this elevating spirit of love of country, by the establishing of a society to be composed entirely of juveniles. With her usual energy and industry she contrived and arranged the preliminaries for the establishment of the National Society of the Children of the American Revolution, of which she was the founder and first president.

As a correction for the tendency or the danger of spoiling American children, Mrs. Lothrop once published in a symposium the following suggestions:

"First—The old-fashioned respect for parents and for God should be revived.

"Second—There should be an amendment introduced to the resolution that appears to have been adopted largely, that the Sabbath was made for man to make a worse day out of it than out of the other six.



"Third—That ill-doing should be execrated and punished.

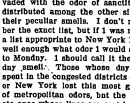
"Fourth—That American children should always hear from American citizens expressions of loyalty to their country, which their lives bear out.

Round About New York

Gossip of People and Things in the Great Metropolis

MODERN HOTEL TO BE BUILT FOR SAILORS

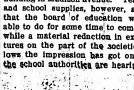
WHEN Jack Tar returns to this port after being tossed on the brine, there is always a welcome beacon light gleaming for him. Latchstrings are always on the outside for the mariner because, with his "roll" he is always a mark for the "landlubber." But the sailor is becoming wise, and "God is on the sea as well as the land." In other words the sailors are rapidly becoming imbued with the religious spirit. The battery station of the Seaman's Church Institute is now a mecca for the salts when they arrive in port. The sailors, for whom the institution began its first activities five years ago, hailed at the church for a time, but they found that it was managed on business principles and gradually accepted it. The building near Battery park will soon be supplanted by a great hotel to cost almost $700,000. This will be devoted exclusively to the use of the sailors, and Jack will call it his home. The proposed structure is to tower from Coenties slip and its plan calls for what is considered the most complete establishment of the kind in the world. In its original form the Seaman's Church Institute was known as the Protestant Episcopal Church Missionary Society for Seaman in the City and Port of New York, but at the last diocesan convention the 15-worded title, which was used for 60 years, was discontinued and the present one formally adopted. The situation in New York, so far as the treatment of sailors was concerned, was about as bad as well could be when five years ago the Institute's chaplain, Rev. Archibald R. Mansfield; moved in over a saloon at No. 1 State street. The house was the one in which Robert Fulton, the inventor of the steamboat, lived for many years, and where he died. It was kept as a memorial to him, however, and was, all in all, as forlorn a rookery as could be found in the lower town. In the basement was a saloon where frequently the men of the sea were robbed. The beer pumps were taken out by the society and the sailors were provided with a comfortable home



COPPER KING ADDS TO HIS SUPERB ART COLLECTION

WITH the recent purchase of Jules Breton's painting "Harvesting the Poppies," for which he paid $40,000, Senator Wm. A. Clark of Montana has added one more rare work of art to to superb collection which adorns his mansion at Fifth avenue and Fifty-seventh street.

His is now ranked as the finest private collection in the world, and even rivals some of the government collections abroad. There is a special public interest in it by reason of the fact that the Montana "Copper King" has planned his mansion so that on one day each week the general public will be permitted to view the art treasures with which he has surrounded his young and beautiful wife.



The purchase of "Harvesting the Poppies" marked Senator Clark's formal appearance, by the way, as an art connoisseur who judges and buys his trophies without the aid of artists and critics. The senator, having conceived a love for the fine arts, made a special study of them, both in this country and abroad.

Mrs. Clark is an accomplished musician, and an amateur art collector of note as well, and in her Fifth avenue home she has a fortune in priceless tapestries alone, besides costly paintings and bronzes from every capital of the Old World.

A PHILOSOPHER once said that in a great city, such as New York, each day has a distinctive odor. He began with Sunday, which, according to tradition, if not in fact, was perfumed with the odor of sanctity, and distributed among the other six days their peculiar smells. I don't remember the exact list, but if I was making a list appropriate to New York I know well enough what odor I would ascribe to Monday. I should call it the washday smell. Those whose days are spent in the congested districts of lower New York lost this most grateful of metropolitan odors, but the fortunate ones whose lines are cast in upper Manhattan and the outlying districts can testify that on Monday the fragrance of sun-dried clothes is abroad in the land. Of course, there are thousands of families that wash on other days of the week, but in the residence districts most housewives are so old-fashioned as to cling to Monday as washday, and if the amateur chemist about town will take the time to poke his head out of a back window or peep through the cracks in a wall in any uptown block he will see hundreds of clothes-lines sagging beneath their weight of clean-smelling white duds. So mighty is this odor of cleanliness that it permeates brick walls and floats over roofs, and so perceptibly modifies the stale, musty scents of the street that the passerby cry frequently: "The fates be praised for washday."

MONDAY EASILY TOLD BY IT'S WASH-DAY SMELL.

PRAISEWORTH WORK OF CARING FOR CRIPPLES

THE board of education is slowly taking up the important work of caring for the 10,000 or more crippled children in Greater New York who have hitherto been dependent for instruction upon private charity. The oldest and largest of the schools, founded by the Guild for Crippled Children, is in Montgomery street. Since last September teachers have been provided for this school by the board of education, and similar aid is to be afforded the school established under the same auspices in a large building in Madison avenue. Teachers and school supplies, however, are all that the board of education will be able to do for some time to come, and while a material reduction in expenditures on the part of the societies follows the impression has got out that the school authorities are hearing the entire expense, and as a result the Guild for Cripple Children finds itself hampered by lack of funds. The school is Montgomery street, soon to be moved into a new building in Water street, is to be the largest and oldest of the several controlled by the guild. On Manhattan alone there are 7,000 crippled children of school age, and of these 4,000 live below Fourteenth, and 1,500 are crowded into the lower East Side. This school was founded with two fundamental objects — to give the children an elementary education and to improve their physical condition. Incidentally, the effort is made to render them self-supporting through courses of manual training. Work begun in the Montgomery street school six years ago. Thousands have been benefited there and dozens completely restored to health.

DEATH OF JUROR'S WIFE HALTS TRIAL

JUSTICE ORDERS ADJOURNMENT OF THAW CASE UNTIL NEXT MONDAY MORNING.

Opposing Counsel Consents to Release Men from Confinement During Interval—Judge Requests Them Not to Read or Speak of Case.

New York, Feb. 15.—Owing to the death of the wife of Joseph H. Bolton, one of the jurors, the trial of Harry K. Thaw was Thursday afternoon postponed until next Monday morning. Mrs. Bolton had been ill for several days with double pneumonia. Her husband, Juror No. 11, who had been located by wire in Ohio, arrived here more than three weeks ago, was allowed to visit his home twice Wednesday and again early Thursday. He was accompanied on each occasion by two other jurymen and two court officers.

Mr. Bolton was in his place in the jury box when court convened in the morning, but it was known that his wife's condition was so critical that he might be called away at any moment. The session had been in progress less than 15 minutes with Dr. D. D. Evans, the alienist, continuing his direct testimony, when the summons to the juror came. His home is far up in the Bronx, and when Mr. Bolton got there he found his wife all but dead. She had been kept alive by oxygen until he arrived, but expired within an hour after he reached her bedside.

Other Jurors Released.

It was agreed on motion of District Attorney Jerome, Thaw's attorney consenting, that the other 11 jurors in the case should not be kept under lock and key longer, but should be allowed to return to their homes, pending the resumption of the trial Monday morning. It was 2:16 p. m. when Mr. Jerome made the formal announcement of the death of Juror Bolton's wife and moved for the adjournment until Monday morning. His motion followed a conference between Justice Fitzgerald and opposing counsel.

When the jury filed into court there were two members missing, Juror No. 5, Harry C. Hersey, having remained with Mr. Bolton. Thaw also was brought in to hear the order for adjournment. He seemed somewhat downcast at the turn of affairs, but in common with every one else in the case, declined to felt the deepest sympathy for the juror.

Mr. Jerome, in moving for the adjournment, declared that to keep the other jurymen away from their homes during the delay would be more of a hardship than had been contemplated when the rule of the beginning of the trial was invoked. He said it was with the consent of the defendant's counsel that he asked that they be allowed to return to their home life. Mr. Hartridge formally entered the consent of the defense.

Justice Fitzgerald then addressed the jurors, explaining to them that the rule keeping them together had not been adopted with the idea of casting the slightest reflection upon them in any way.

Asks Jurors Not to Read Papers.

"The action was not taken," he continued, "upon the suggestion or recommendation of either side, but upon the agreement of both sides, and for reasons which appeared to be sufficient and excellent alike to the interests to the defense and the people. It would have been well if the rule could have been adhered to until the end of the trial, but this unfortunate occurrence has prevented it. You will be allowed to return to your homes now, but let me appeal to your honor not to read any newspaper accounts of the case; not to speak to anyone about the case, and not allow anyone Speak to you. I trust you may not be submitted to any annoyance. Guido yourselves according to the dictates of your honor and your oaths. You will return here Monday morning, at which time I hope we may be able to continue the case."

After the jury left the room District Attorney Jerome announced to the court that the attorneys for both sides had agreed that the testimony of Dr. Deemar of Harrisburg, Pa., and Dr. Bingaman, of Pittsburg, should be taken in the form of depositions, that they might return to their homes. These doctors, it is said, will testify regarding insanity on both sides of the Thaw's family.

RAILROADS TO BE PROSECUTED.

Accused of Violating Law Relating to Shipment of Cattle.

Washington, Feb. 15.—The department of justice, through the United States attorneys in the several states, is about to begin proceedings against a number of railroads for violations of the law relating to the shipment of cattle. This law, which was approved June 29, 1906, provides that cattle shipped in interstate commerce shall not be confined on cars for more than 28 hours consecutively without their being unloaded for food, rest and water, except in cases where a request is previously made, the time may be extended to 36 hours.

In many of these cases it is alleged cattle have been confined to cars without rest, food or water for 50 hours, and in some cases 60 hours, and it is the purpose of the government to insist on the full maximum penalty of $500.

MR. SHONTS ON RAILWAYS

TELLS OF PREDICAMENT WHICH ROADS FIND THEMSELVES IN.

Hostile Legislation and Demands of Labor May Bring Great Crop of Receiverships.

New York, Feb. 16.—The second annual banquet of the Iowa Society of New York was held at the Waldorf-Astoria Friday night. The society had as its guests Secretary of the Treasury Leslie M. Shaw and Theodore P. Shonts, chairman of the Panama canal commission.

Secretary Shaw's address dealt chiefly with American industries.

Chairmen Shonts spoke on the general subject of railroads.

After telling why he doubted the wisdom and fairness of the purpose to limit profits to six per cent. on the capital invested in railways, Mr. Shonts said:

"The attitude of the present national administration on the question of rates has not been to secure their reduction, but to prevent unjust discrimination on them. Railroad rates to the United States are lower than anywhere else in the world, while the service, under normal conditions, is better.

"I do not think that the public is demanding cheaper transportation so much as it is demanding safe, reliable and adequate transportation.

"In the matter of improvements the railroads of the country, almost without exception, have been pursuing a hand-to-mouth policy which has proved costly to themselves and irritating to the public. Costly to themselves because, before improvements necessary to relieve existing conditions have been completed, their capacity has been exceeded by the growth of traffic; irritating to the public because of no time in recent years has the public been able to get free from the delays and annoyances of a continual state of congestion. The result is the railroads are confronted also with a state of public mind extremely hostile. So that the raising of money to provide facilities so urgently needed is, under present conditions, well-nigh impossible, although many of the corporations have sought to do so at the risk of almost imperiling their credit.

"The situation is a grave one. If the various states continue arbitrarily to reduce rates, as some of them are doing, and the various labor organizations continue to press their demands for increased wages and shorter hours, the next unprecedented crop harvested in this country will be a record-breaking crop of receiverships."

EXPRESS COMPANIES ACCUSED.

Investigation Asked of Their Practice of Dealing in Produce.

Washington, Feb. 16.—Representative Kennedy of Nebraska Friday introduced a concurrent resolution, at the instance of the Western Fruit Jobbers' association, in which the latter charges that the American Express company, Adams Express company, United States Express company, Pacific Express company and Wells-Fargo Express company are unlawfully engaged, especially in the west, in the business of produce distribution, as consignment, fruit, vegetables and oysters, thus coming into direct competition with merchants and jobbers engaged in such business. It is charged that the express companies mentioned are thus given opportunities for covering up discriminations and the payment of rebates.

The resolution calls upon the interstate commerce commission to immediately investigate and report to congress, or to the president, when congress is not in session, from time to time as the investigation proceeds, the facts in these charges, and whether the business complained of is sanctioned by the articles of incorporation of the companies or is in violation of the interstate commerce law.

DYNAMITE KILLS WOMAN.

Two Children Fatally Injured — Explosive in Stove to Thaw.

Lebanon, Pa., Feb. 16.—Mrs. Zeller, the wife of John Zeller, of Annville, near here, was instantly killed by an explosion of dynamite at her home Friday night. Two children, Lydia, aged 13 years, and Mery, aged five years, were so badly burned and lacerated that there is little hope of their recovery. The house was wrecked. Zeller placed three sticks of dynamite in the stove to thaw and went to work neglecting to tell his wife that the dynamite was in the oven. What occurred after Zeller's departure will probably never be known, as neither child has regained consciousness.

Walker, the treasurer, began misusing funds shortly after entering on his first term of office. He served for four years. The county is protected by bonding companies.

TWO MORE VICTIMS OF LARCHMONT DIE

SURVIVORS OF THE LONG ISLAND SOUND DISASTER ARE REDUCED TO 17.

Identification of Bodies Progresses Rapidly — Charges of Cowardice Against Captain and Crew Are Denied by the Company's Officials.

Providence, R. I., Feb. 16.—Another name was added to the list of victims of the wreck of the Joy line steamer Larchmont in Block Island sound last Monday night, when Jones Venn, a colored waiter, who was one of those saved, died at the East Side hospital in this city Friday. His death reduced the number of survivors of the 160 persons known to have been on the Larchmont to 17. Samuel L. La Combe of Manchester, N. H., died from the effects of exposure Thursday. The other survivors probably will recover.

The identification of the 76 bodies that have been recovered has so far progressed that at 10:45 o'clock Friday night only eight remained unclaimed at the morgue here.

Crew of Knowlton Released.

The United States authorities at New London have partly finished their investigation of the accident by taking the testimony of the captain and crew of the schooner Harry Knowlton, which rammed the ill-fated steamer and sent her to destruction. These men have been released and are now on their way to their homes. The inspectors have yet to hear Capt. McVey's account of the disaster, and it is expected that officer's deposition, as well as that of his quartermaster, James Stahles, will be obtained, or neither is able to travel to New London.

The names of Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Potter of Andover, N. Y., were added to the list of missing late Friday afternoon.

A meeting of the officials of the Joy line was held Friday, and et its conclusion the company gave out a statement denying the charges of cowardice made against Capt. McVey and the crew of the Larchmont in reference to their behavior by some of the survivors.

Another Cargo of Death.

Block Island, R. I., Feb. 15.—One more grim harvest of 23 victims of the ill-fated steamer Larchmont, which the Block Island fisherman gathered Wednesday, in nearby waters, was sent to the mainland Thursday. And as the death-laden boat left for Providence, still another body was brought in by the fishing schooner Theresa, making in all 76 bodies that have been recovered here from the disaster off Wetch Hill Monday night.

The body of Harry Eckels, a resident of this island, will be buried here, while that of an unknown negro waiter, which was brought in just before dark Thursday, will probably be sent to the mainland by the steamer Friday.

Miss Golob Accuses Officers.

One survivor, Miss Sadie Golob, of Boston, still remains on the island, where she is being cared for. Thursday afternoon she stated to several of the newspaper men that when she begged either Capt. McVey or Purser Young to take her in their boat, they pushed her back, and the lifeboat left the Larchmont with only six in it, although it would have held 20 more. When the steamer went down, she found herself on a piece of wreckage and remained on it until picked up ten hours later by the crew of the fishing schooner Elsie. Miss Golob said she will probably make a charge against Capt. McVey and the officers of the Larchmont.

Dies After Automobile Accident.

Denver, Feb. 15.—George J. Wendt died in a hospital here Thursday from injuries received in an automobile accident on Tuesday. He was 30 years old and until recently was engaged in the fur business in Chicago.

PLOT TO SLAY THE BLACKS

STARTLING TALE OF BROWNSVILLE BY WILLIAM MAPP.

Says Reservation Corral Boss Told Him of Plan to Massacre the Negro Soldiers.

Washington, Feb. 16.—Startling testimony concerning alleged plans to massacre colored soldiers at Brownsville, Texas, by men from the town firing over the barracks to stampede the soldiers, and challenges to them to come out of the barracks, was given by negro ex-soldiers Friday at the investigation before the senate committees on military affairs. The most sensational story told was that of William Mapp, who was a member of Company C, Twenty-fifth infantry. He was on the stand when the hearing adjourned for the day.

Mepp was asked if he had ever heard any discussion of the shooting which caused him to suspect any persons of complicity. He replied that at breakfast on the morning following the shooting he had heard Wilbert Voschelle, the reservation corral boss, and a white man who had been in charge of the corral prior to the arrival of a battalion of the Twenty-fifth infantry, discussing the case.

According to Mepp's story, Voschelle said:

"Well, it is a good thing it happened as it did. I was out in town last night and the crowd came in front of me—the plan was to catch a lot of you fellows in Allison's saloon and massacre you."

Mapp said that the remark was not addressed to him and that he did not question Voschelle. He said that Allison is the former soldier who had been ordered out of town for refusing to identify the negro soldier trade, the other saloons having barred the members of the negro battalion. Voschelle is now in Washington, having been subpoened as a witness.

Before giving this testimony Mepp said that on the night of the shooting he had been awakened by the firing and had gone to the window of his quarters, and from there he saw several gun flashes and the shots seemed to be directed over the parade ground. A man with a deep voice, he said, shouted: "Come out, you black —" (using the opprobrious epithet and making it applicable to the troops). Mepp said this challenge was repeated several times during the firing, but the call to arms was then sounded and he hurried to get dressed and fall in with his company. He said the shooting and the shouting were outside the wall at the end of Company B barracks. Mapp told of the confusion in quarters and said that he got his gun from the rack that was broken open and was one of the first to fall in.

BOY TRAIN-WRECKERS CONFESS.

Admit Crime in Georgia, Their Object Being Robbery.

Tallapoosa, Ga., Feb. 16.—Four boys, led by Carl Davis, the oldest 12 years, have confessed to attempting to wreck a Southern railway train just east of here Tuesday night. An accommodation train from Atlanta ran into an open switch. The engine was demolished and the engineer and fireman badly bruised, but the passengers escaped. The lock had been broken and the switch left open. The boys said their object was to rob the express car.

Drowned in Turkish Mutiny.

Smyrna, Feb. 16.—A serious mutiny occurred on a Turkish transport while the ship was passing through the canal. It ended by 300 soldiers jumping overboard. Two of them were drowned or shot and killed by loyal marines. The others reached shore and escaped.

Wants Special Tariff Session.

Madison, Wis., Feb. 16.—Assemblyman Miller of La Crosse, a Republican, presented a joint resolution in the legislature Friday memorializing the president to call a special session of congress for immediate revision of the tariff.

VOTE SATURDAY ON IMMIGRATION BILL

DEFEAT OF CONFERENCE AGREEMENT IN SENATE NOT UNLIKELY.

Debate Lasts All Day—Tillman's Remarks Bring Warning from Lodge —Naval Appropriation Bill Passed by the House.

Washington, Feb. 16.—An agreement to vote Saturday on the conference report on the immigration bill, which includes the provision intended to settle the California-Japanese question, was reached in the senate Friday as the result of an entire day of discussion on that measure.

The principal speeches were delivered by Senators Dolliver and Tillman in opposition to what they regarded as an effort to prevent the south from getting a desirable class of immigrants. Senator Tillmen's remarks on the Japanese situation brought a warning from Senator Lodge that if continued he should move that the discussion proceed behind closed doors. Interruptions and references were not made afterwards by Senator Tillman.

Senator Gallinger expressed surprise that the conferees should contend that they had not injected "new" matter into the conference report, and Senator Carter said he should vote against the report entirely on that ground, and predicted its defeat.

House Passes Naval Bill.

The naval appropriation bill, carrying in round numbers $95,000,000, passed the house Friday. An effort was made by Mr. Burton of Ohio to reduce the number of battleships authorized in the bill, but it was defeated by a vote of 114 to 140.

The post office appropriation bill was taken up and an agreement was made that general debate should cease at 12 o'clock noon Tuesday.

Filibuster Is Threatened.

Washington, Feb. 15.—The sudden development of a fati-fledged filibuster in the senate when the report with suspicion on other points, Senators Bacon and Tillman first endeavored to have action delayed until Friday when they might study the report. When this was refused the filibuster began. Mr. Bacon held the floor for two and a half hours. Mr. Tillman remarked that he was preparing to make a twenty-four hour speech against the bill. Mr. Bacon objected to being run over as with an automobile.

Mr. Bacon objected that the report changed existing law in respects which, he believed, on hurried examination, would endanger the chances of obtaining even the meager supply from abroad which was available under the immigration law.

A truce was declared until Friday at the suggestion of Senator Spooner, when the report will again come up for consideration.

Knox Defends Reed Smoot.

The session was begun with an extended address by Senator Knox in defense of the right of Reed Smoot to his seat as senator from Utah. Mr. Knox was received from his colleagues congratulations on his speech.

The agricultural appropriation bill was taken up for consideration. Difficulties arose over a proposed increase in the salary of the chief of the forestry bureau. Senator Heyburn facetiously noted the "towering importance" of the agricultural department in comparison with other departments of the government, and called attention to the $4,500 salary of the assistant secretary, saying it was proposed in the bill to increase that of the chiefs of several bureaus to $5,000.

Mapp the naval appropriation bill occupied the entire time of the house Thursday, and it was almost completed. The single remaining section is that increasing the navel establishment. It was allowed to go over until Friday, when it is expected an effort will be made to reduce the number of battleships provided for in the bill.

Plan to Aid Big Steel Industry.

Washington, Feb. 14.—The Japanese school controversy is settled in so far as Secretary Roosevelt, Meyer Schmitz and the members of the San Francisco school board are concerned. An amicable adjustment of the question now rests with congress. If the amendment to the immigration bill, proposed by Secretary Root, excluding foreigners who use their passports to secure admission to the United States "to the detriment of labor conditions in this country" is accepted by the senate and house, and the immigration bill is passed at the session of congress, the San Francisco board of education will rescind its order establishing the oriental schools unless the Japanese government agrees to a proposition for separate schools which will provide equal facilities for the Japanese children.

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 9—Interests at Thief River Falls and at Bemidji, both of which have had bills introduced in the legislature for normal schools, have reached a compromise and today had their special bills withdrawn by Senator A. I. Hansen, their author in the senate, and a new bill introduced which contains the terms of the compromise. That is, that a new normal school be established at some point on the Great Northern road between Bemidji and East Grand Forks, to be determined by the state normal board. The bill carries no appropriation but provides that the town getting the institution provide a five acre site for the building.

Senator Albert Schaller of Dakota county, introduced a bill unique in that it makes compulsary the teaching of physiology, hygiene and narcotics in the public schools from the third grade every year up through the high schools. The bill calls for special attention to the study of alcohol and its effects on the human body. Teachers to be granted certificates, must pass examinations on the same as well as the other usual subjects.

The event in the house today was the presentation of what is known in insurance circles as an "anti-compact" bill, that is, to prevent fire insurance companies combining in fixing and maintaining rates through boards of underwriters as in the present custom in the state. The bill is introduced by W. H. Putnam of Red Wing.

As a "follow" bill to the one introduced yesterday calling for a big exposition at the fair grounds in 1909, S. O. Morse of Blayton today introduced a bill to permit county commissioners to make special appropriations for county exhibits at such an exposition.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 13—By a vote of 65 to 46 the house today decided in favor of putting it up to the people at the polls, whether or not women shall be allowed the unlimited right to vote. A majority of the committee on elections and privileges and elections bills for a constitutional amendment to permit women to vote, for indefinite postponement, but the minority report recommended the bill for passage. After considerable debate the house voted with the minority of the committee.

The house considered as a special order this afternoon the W. A. Nolan bill for reciprocal demurrage. Its author asked for immediate action on the bill. A number of addresses followed showing many favored the principle expressed in the bill but thought some of its provisions too drastic. A motion by Ambrose Tighe of St. Paul finally prevailed, calling for appointment by the speaker of a special committee of five to redraft the measure and report it back to the house in four legislative days.

J. P. Cummings today introduced a bill aimed at the Standard Oil company. It prohibits any discrimination in prices in different sections of the state. W. H. Putnam introduced a bill to establish a state training school for girls within three miles of the boys school at Red Wing. As there is already a bill pending which says such an institution shall be established at a town not having an institution of the state, the Putnam bill will re-open an old fight which waged in the session of two years ago.

The session of the senate today was unusually uneventful. A bill was introduced by Manly Fasseen creating a college of education at the state university, appropriating $150,000 for a building, and $25,000 for maintenance for two years.

Senator C. F. Calhoun, the senate passed a resolution memorializing congress to appropriate sufficient money for the Minnesota-Alaska-Yukon exposition at Seattle in 1909.

The Sundberg committee of the senate is holding some interesting sessions investigating railroads. The committee had A. B. Stickney president of the Great Western road, for a witness. He told them no road could ever be constructed with out watering stock.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 14—The Stokes bill, creating a special commission of state officers to have charge of the old and new capitols, was indefinitely postponed by the house today. When the measure came up for consideration John G. Lennon of Minneapolis strongly opposed it, saying from the governor his old-time prerogative of custody of the state house, and declared "a man who votes for such a bill is too small to be a republican or a member of this house." Rackne and Wells spoke in favor of the bill, with an ultimate result the bill was indefinitely postponed by a rousing majority.

S. D. Peterson thinks it will be well to investigate the Minnesota Shippers' association records, is at the bottom of so many legislative investigations of railroad matters. He introduced a resolution to that effect in the house today but it went over on notice of debate given by W. A Nolan. Incidentally it is said the association opposed Mr. Peterson's election.

Representative P. O. Carlton introduced an "anti-capital" bill in the house today. It prohibits entry of judgement in divorce proceedings one year, which is aimed at preventing any remarriage of either party until a year after a divorce is virtually granted. H. O. Bjorge introduced a bill today to establish a Pasour institute in Minnesota, the board of control to expend $10,000 in so doing.

C. L. Case presented a measure to prevent railway employes in Minnesota from working over sixteen consecutive hours.

Lieut. Gov. A. O. Eberhart "roasted" employes of the senate today for being "late to business." He said reports of committees were much delayed thereby; that hereafter all employes must report daily for duty at 9 a. m.

Senator Canfield of Luverne today introduced a general appropriation bill for roads and bridges throughout the state, carrying an appropriation of $200,000. It will be apportioned among counties late in the session. The senate promised but few bills today the only one of importance being a measure by E. E. Smith of Minneapolis providing pensions of not to exceed $40 a month for disabled or retired firemen.

The senate committee on the state fair, recommended for passage, the senate bill of J. M. Hackney for a semi-centennial exposition at the fair grounds and appropriating $1,000,000 therefor.

J. J. Hill appeared before the Kenyon house committee today and explained his plan for more land in northern Minnesota. He said he secured the lands personally and then gave them to the stockholders of the Great Northern road, dollar for dollar of stock held.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 15—There will be no more "combines on state printing" if two measures introduced in the senate by Senator Pauly of Minneapolis today, become laws.

The two bills in question provide for establishment of a state printing plant in the basement of the old capitol. The board of control, in consultation with the state expert printer and state architect, is authorized to spend $10,000 in remodeling the basement as is necessary. The board is then granted $60,000 for the purchase of presses and other equipment. Provision is then made for operation of the plant under the state printing commission with a superintendent in charge who is to receive $2,500 a year.

Two "hurry" resolutions on the subject of two cent railroad fare, were introduced by Senator Moonan but were not acted on. One declared the sentiment of the senate to favor the passage of a 2-cent fare bill on this subject. Senator Geo. P. Wilson thought the resolution premature and said he would not give the railroads bills as well not giving the railroads any opportunity to be heard. He stated in behalf of Senator Moonan then introduced a resolution stating it to be the sentiment of the people of the state a two cent fare bill should be enacted. Senator J. F. Calhoun gave notice of debate on this resolution. The furore on the subject over till the next legislative day.

The "summer girl" found a friend in Senator Sedgwick who introduced a bill making it a misdemeanor to adulterate ice cream in any way, to manufacture or sell the article if it is colored or contains less than twelve per cent butter-fat. Senator Manly Fasseen of Minneapolis introduced an amendment to the present hotel inspection law, which provides for a state inspector at $2,000 and an inspector in each congressional district to receive $1,200 each per year. Hotels are to be charged $5 each for inspections.

In the house today, city and country clashed, the latter apparently winning to the tune of 77 to 31. The contest came when the redraft of the Zelch bill came in providing for a plant at the state prison for manufacture of binders rakes, and mowers. City members wanted it referred to the labor committee for a hearing. Country members insisted it should be advanced to the appropriations committee to get its financial aido adjusted and approved.

L. C. Spooner of Willmar even suggested it was the farm machinery trust and not labor, which wanted a further hearing. The bill is now in the hands of the appropriations committee with every prospect of passing when again reported on the floor.

The senate introduced today in the house to prevent corrupt practices at primary elections, to establish an industrial school for girls at Royalton to cost $100,000, to create additional inspectors of mines, to establish an industrial school at New Ulm to cost $100,000, to appropriate $43,000 for a new barn and stock pavilion at the state agricultural school.

Pretty Tough.

"I can't see," muttered Ragged Richard, turning in vain to find a comfortable position in the lumps of coal, "I can't for de life o' me see why day calls dis here car 'de tender.'"

NEWS OF MINNESOTA.

Not Swamp Lands.

Duluth—Claiming that the so-called swamp lands taken over by the state at the government land opening last fall are not swamp lands, twelve settlers have filed contests against the land in the local land office. About 1,280 acres are involved. The state authorities have been notified and will be given sixty days in which to give notice if they desire a hearing. The land opened last November is located near Beaver Bay, in what is known as township 57, range 8, township 58, range 9, and township 57, range 10. There was a considerable rush at the land office at the time of the opening.

Under the ruling on which the cases are brought up the settler going on the lands previous to the survey shall be allowed to enter those lands in the United States land office, provided he shall do so in good faith and shall have retained his residence there since, subject to the swamp land act. The notice of contest must be accompanied by an affidavit from two witnesses stating that the lands are high and dry, not subject to periodical floods and that it is good agricultural land.

Cruisers probably will be sent out by the state to investigate the land in question and if they report that it is fit for agricultural purposes the cases probably will be allowed to go by default.

Not Legally Dead.

Winona—An old murder mystery is recalled by the action begun in the probate court of this county to declare Charles Farnholz legally dead.

It was in May, 1893, that Mr. Farnholz left his home near Lewiston to visit for a couple of weeks with relatives near Pinnion City. He left word with neighbors to look after his stock until he returned. Two or three months later the neighbors wondered why he had not returned and wrote to his relatives at Pinnion City for information. They replied that they had not seen him and supposed that he was still at his farm. It was then recalled that some time after he had left his farm the nude body of a man, with the face cut off, had been found in a marsh near Pinnion City.

The man evidently had been murdered and every means of his identification removed. The friends and relatives of Farnholz then believed that the murdered man was he and that he had been murdered across the river from Winona for the little money he had on his person. But the murderer was never cleared. As nothing since has been heard of him, his relatives now have made application to the probate court for the appointment of a guardian for his estate so they can have the effect of declaring his father legally dead.

Mad Dog.

Minneapolis—A mad dog supposedly mad, that was shot at the corner of Ninth avenue and Fifth street south by Patrolman J. F. McDonald, is the only dog ever chased by an automobile.

This particular canine started operations at the corner of Third street and Nicollet avenue. It bit one or two several pedestrians and finally succeeded in biting a couple of women. The crowds on the streets at the time became panic stricken and Patrolman McDonald was summoned to kill the animal. He fired once and the bullet barely grazed the brute's head.

Suffering from the shock the dog tore down Nicollet avenue as fast as he could. The patrolman was quickly distanced. Seeing an automobile passing the officer asked the driver for a ride, and soon was speeding after the dog. Down Fifth street south the animal ran, with the automobile in pursuit in full pursuit, but it was not until ninth avenue was reached that the officer caught up. Patrolman McDonald jumped out at that place and with a single shot killed the fugitive.

To Make the Arms Beautiful

"There ought to be a Pretty Arm club," said a girl with elbow sleeves. "The arm is usually very well developed between the shoulder and the elbow, but it is the part between the elbow and the wrist that is out of shape. The forearm is thin, bony, blue and weak.

"To develop this part below the elbow there are three exercises. Open and close the hands rapidly. The hands should be limber and flexible and they should swing easily from the wrist. The second exercise is the wrist exercise. The arms should be lifted at the sides as a bird lifts its wings and the wrists should be flapped back and forth. That is the only way to express it—just flapped! Try it and see how easily they will work after a few minutes. The third arm exercise is a wavy one. The arms are lifted but the hands are dropped at the wrists. The arms are swayed and the hands are drawn gently from the elbow. The forefinger is the aggressive finger and the little finger is the ornamental one. They can both be used to balance the hand prettily. But the two middle fingers of the second and third, as they are called, are the fingers that dominate the hand.

"Bernhardt, on the other hand, curls the third finger. She holds the other fingers quite straight and flexible. But the third finger, which is the finger of love, is well curled into the palm of the hand. This is the approved French style. Bernhardt's arms are well wrapped with bracelets and, if there are defects of form or color, she does not allow them to show.

"And remember that with a good arm you can defy your friends and enemies alike. It is worth as much as a good face."

FOR A PLEASANT PARTY.

Suggestions for Afternoon and Evening Entertainments.

Hint for a Literary Club.

A correspondent asks for suggestions as to how a literary club of 20 young women may spend an afternoon in some up-to-date manner, yet the affair to be entirely informal.

Why not have a "Peter Pan" party? Decorate the rooms with greens, potted plants and gray moss if obtainable—that will make the forest. Call it "Never-Neverland;" then read parts from Barrie's "Little White Bird," on which the inimitable play of "Peter Pan" is founded.

For refreshments serve cider and gingerbread made in the form of Pan, and this n most delightful afternoon.

Many of the late magazines have had charming sketches of Maude Adams, which you can find and read in connection with "Peter Pan," as she created the character.

A Bag Party.

With the advent of Lent, society is supposed to take n much-needed rest, but in reality the hostess does just about as much entertaining. The nature of the functions change from large affairs to "small and earlies."

There are numerable sewing circles, which are usually prefaced by a simple luncheon or followed by light refreshments.

Here is a suggestion for a sewing circle, and an afternoon could be spent most pleasantly at a "bag party."

Ask each guest to bring enough pretty cretonne or nrt ticking to make a bag as long as long by 12 inches wide when finished.

In each bag put a sharpened pencil, a pad of paper, half a dozen envelopes stamped, six potato, a half dozen plain, laundered handkerchiefs, and a bottle of cologne. Give these bags to the matrons of hospitals to be distributed to patients who are unable to provide such comforts.

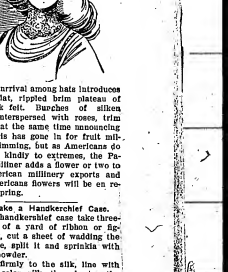
A patient in a ward passes many a lonely hour, and these bags will afford much solid comfort.

Making a "comfort" powder box is another scheme which will afford fascinating work for a "Lenten" circle. Get the regulation powder boxes and white squares of paper at a drug store. Then write a number of pretty, helpful quotations on these white slips, fold like powders and fill the boxes. On the outside mark; "Take one at breakfast time." This idea will be greatly appreciated by "shut ins" and by the occupants of the various "homes" and institutions.

Do You Know These Misses?

Invitations like the following dutifered into a number of houses last week: "The Misses George and Minnie Black will be pleased to have you meet 16 young "misses" at the residence of Mrs. George on February the 16th, at half after eight."

Here is the list of "Misses" the merry company found:



1. What misses the following dutifered into a number of houses last week: "The Misses George and Minnie Black will be pleased to have you meet 16 young "misses" at the residence of Mrs. George on February the 16th, at half after eight."

HAT ORNAMENTATION.

A late arrival among hats introduces n low, flat, rippled brim plateau of dark silk felt. Bunches of silken grapes are suspended with roses, trim the hat, at the same time announcing that Paris has gone in for fruit millinery trimming, but as Americans do not take kindly to extremes, the Parisian milliner adds a flower or two to her American millinery exports and tells Americans flowers will be an regel for spring.

To Make a Handkerchief Case.

For a handkerchief case take threequarters of a yard of ribbon or ruched silk, cut a sheet of wadding the same size, split it and sprinkle with hatchet powder.

Baste firmly to the silk, line with a plain color silk, then baste the edges together and featherstitch on the plain side.

Turn back a quarter of a yard for the pocket and tie with bows. This is easily made.

is Cremated in Jail

Virginia, Minn.—A Syrian or Arabian peddler, unknown was burned to death in the village jail at McKinley. The man had been disorderly about the railroad depot, and the agent turned him over to the police who locked him in the city jail. During the night the building took fire and was consumed, and the next morning the man's headless and charred trunk was found in the ruins.

St. Paul—Prof. F. M. Hodgman has taken charge at the Macalester college.

Going Insane Over Dead.

Duluth, Minn.—Daniel Aho, aged twenty years, the youth who shot and killed his mother at Tivoli, Minn., on Sunday, Feb. 3, while intoxicated is believed to be going insane in consequence of his grief over his dead. Aho's lamentations are pitiful to witness. He says that he does not care what the authorities do with him, as he could never be happy again. Aho had been drinking more than was good for him the day of the tragedy, and became involved in a quarrel with another young man near the Aho residence.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT.

Entered as Second-class matter August 30, 1906, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn. under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

Is Dunn to again be in the race? Says an exchange. We don't know, but do know he was not in the race the last time he ran for governor.

St. Paul wants the state to guarantee the interest, and probably afterwards pay the principal, on several millions to improve the appearance of that city. It also nuites with Minneapolis in asking the legislature for a million to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of Minnesota's admittance to the union. Aren't we country rubes an easy bunch?—St. Hilaire Spectator.

The Railroads have a strong lobby at St. Paul fighting the reduction of railroad fare to 2 cents a mile, but the people are also wide awake to the situation, and they will either ride for 2 cents a mile, or there will be an entire new set of representatives two years hence. Excuses and attempts to lay it onto the other fellow won't go. Its either 'get there", or get out of there.

We have read representative Sugstad, (of Polk county) bill to amend the primary election law, to include all state officers and United States Senators, and to have the election held on the first Tuesday, after the first Monday in June, and we most heartily indorse it. In fact it comes the nearest to giving the farmers of this state an opportunity to take part in choosing their officers of any law that has been proposed. It would not be at all surprising if the bill meets with strong opposition from the City politicians, who are of the opinion that about all a farmer is good for is to pay taxes, and to vote the ticket in November that they nominate for him in September, while he is busy harvesting and threshing his crop.

Steenerson Moved.

When the Presidents order of January 25th, holding up final proofs on all homestead lands was issued, it struck the north west like a thunder clap, as it meut ruin to the improvement of this part of the Country.

Against did the Ninth District of Minnesota discover that they had a representantive in congress that was looking after their in trest and had the ability to do the work. Congressman Steenerson see the necessity of making a more to get this order rescinded or modified at once, and he promptly took the matter up with president Roosevelt and on Feb. 12th the U.S. Land office at Crookston received the follow ing message,

Washington, D C, Feb. 12. 1907

Register and Receiver, Land Office, Crookston, Minn.

Pursuance to conference with President, executive order of January 25th, was to day modified by, excluding therfrom five year homestead proof and proofs on ceded Indian Lands.

H. STEENERSON.

This places the making of final proof the same as it was before so far as this land is concerned and we as one homesteader extend our thanks to Mr. Steenerson for his successful efforts in again placing the people, who bought their land of the government, in a position to get title to it.

A "Ringara" Jug.

A beer jug in a belfry is happily somewhat of a rarity in these days. At the beginning of the last century, however, people were not so particular. The ringers at Beeches, in Surrey, hold six gallons, a sufficiency to sustain the most weary ringers, though the weight of the bells did exceed six tons. The vessel is made of red earthenware and has three handles, one of which is concealed by the neck. It bears the following inscription in quaint spelling:

"When I am filld with liquer strong
Each Man drink soon and than ding dong.
Think not too much.Up Cloud your Knobs
Least you forget to make the Bobbs.

A gift of John Pattmen Beeches." On the reverse side is the maker's name, "Samuel Stringfellow, Potter."—London Strand.

The Scallop.

The scallop can anchor itself as well as any ship. It never fails to drop its anchor on the approach of rough weather. The scallop, lying in its bed of shoal water, foresees a storm in true sailor fashion and at once puts out a tough and elastic little cable from a point near its hinge. This cable is fastens firmly to the nearest rock. It is then secure in the wiest weather. He who wades through scallop hauntd shoals as a storm approaches may see this tiny craft mooring themselves on all sides with silent bustle.

Men-of-war on Paper.

Each man-of-war is built upon paper before a single plate of steel is forged. Not only are the length and breadth of a ship decided upon, but the naval constructor can tell to an inch how much water she will displace when her armor and guns are mounted upon her, how many times her propellers will revolve in a minute with a given pressure of steam and how many tons of coal an hour must be consumed to attain a certain rate of speed.—London Graphic.

His Giveny Life.

"What," asked the sweet girl, "was the happiest moment of your life?"

"The happiest moment of my life," answered the old bachelor, "was when the jeweler took back an engagement ring and gave me eleven dollars in exchange."

Luck and Reputations.

"Nobody gifted with a sense of humor can fail to be diverted by the Puck-like manner in which luck makes and unmakes reputations for capability," says Will Payne in Everybody's. "Years ago a celebrated man Jennings was an extensive owner of downtown real estate in Chicago. He was the first, I believe, to develop on a large scale the modern system of the ninety-nine year lease, whereby the owner insures to himself and his heirs for a century an absolutely fixed rental, free and clear of all charges. After Mr. Jennings had leased a lot of his lands for ninety-nine years a depression came on. Other people's incomes were curtailed, but his was stable. 'What foresight and the town. 'What sagacity!' 'What superb business judgment!' Mr. Jennings' views on the business situation and outlook were eagerly sought. The depression passed. Realty prices advanced immensely. The Jennings lots would have been leased at twice the rental named in the old indenture. The town shook its head sympathetically over poor Mr. Jennings' deplorable shortsightedness."

The Adder.

A full grown adder may measure two feet in length, about six inches around the thickest part of its body. Its movements are sluggish, and of course the idea that it is capable of transferring its head from one extremity to the other every few months is due to mere superstition. The fact is that the tail of this snake does not terminate in a point, as with ophidians generally, but is stumpy and resembles the head so much that it is difficult for an observer situated at a distance of a few yards to distinguish the one from the other; hence the story of its being two headed, the fallacy of which no intelligent observer could fail to detect.—Pioneer.

Shadow Etiquette.

"I salsted the Kaffir chief respectfully and hearty," said the sailor. "Can you imagine my surprise when he give me a kick?

"'Get off my shadder,' he says.

"'Get off my shadder.'

"I was standing, by crimus, on his shadder, the shadder of his stomach. I skipped from there to the face. He groaned. When I got on to sunlit ground he was up to par.

"'Didn't you never have no bringin' up? Look at you now, laugheain' out your shadow keepers mine. Crench, consarn you, or I'll warm your hide with this here club.'

The sailor gave a loud laugh and emptied his glass of milk.

"Them Kaffirs," he said, "regards their shadders as part of themselves. A polite Kaffir would no more walk on another's shadder than a polite American would hit a lady. They have a regular shadder etiquette. You mustn't on no account let your shadder be longer than a superior's. You must crouch to make it smaller, and that there crouch for the purpose of diminishin' the shadder is thought by the Spencerian philosophers—I don't say I think so, mind—to be the origin of the bow."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Much Law, Poor Case.

Among lawyers there is a saying that in the trial of a case an attorney of little or no facts must be heavy on law. The other day an attorney was preparing to leave his office in one of the big office buildings to go to the courthouse to try a case. From the shelves of his library he had taken many large law books containing decisions and opinions of higher courts. At intervals a boy went in and out of the door, and each time he bore in his arms a stack of the books, which he carried to an express wagon that stood in the street below. The attorney was to use the books in the courtroom. Another lawyer, who is of southern birth and who always addresses his friends with some army title, watched the boy as he went in and out carrying the law books. Then he dug his hands deep into his trousers pockets and said to the lawyer:

"Well, Ah'll swash, kunnel, you must have an easy at all."—Kansas City Times.

Woes of a Drummer.

"I'm just a little discouraged with my work," said the tall New York boy who has started out on the road. "I was making my second trip west when I met an old drummer who has been on the road for more than thirty years. He sat with grip between his knees and talked to me.

"'Chuck it, my boy,' he said. 'If there is anything else in the world you can do, do it. Look at my gray hairs. I don't know what it is to have a home. For thirty years I have seen my wife about once in five weeks. I know that I've a wife and children in a flat in New York, but that's all I do know about them. The children have grown up and married, but I have not had time to attend their weddings. My wife has grown gray, too, but I have had the best of it. She has had a home and the children. If there is anything else in the world you can do, my boy,' he repeated, 'quit drumming, and do it.'"

Curious Blunders.

Some remarkable mistakes in memorials have totally escaped notice until it was too late to rectify them. The figure on the boots of Cromwell's statue at Westminster abbey, London, are the most interesting feature of the monument, although they generally get no attention at all from sightseers. They are worn upside down. In a painted window on the staircase which leads from the floor of Westminster palace to the committee rooms an inscription on a sword wielded by the "Black Prince" has the world "Prince of Wales." Again, in the fresco depicting the embarkation of the pilgrim fathers in the corridor leading from the outer lobby at St. Stephen's to the house of lords the Mayflower is shown to be hoisting the union jack, a flag which did not come into existence until 256 years after the days of this historic Mayflower.

THE DETECTIVE STORY

Origin and Growth of the Clever Amateur Sleuth.

VOLTAIRE WAS HIS CREATOR.

The Great French Writer Introduced Him to the World of Fiction—The Genius of Poe and Gaboriau and Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes.

Most persons who read detective stories, and most literary critics, believe that this very popular form of fiction was invented by Edgar Allan Poe. They point to his story of "The Purloined Letter" as being the first of its kind—the first in which is introduced the man of keen mind, of close reasoning and of constructive imagination, who is able to piece together certain facts that are known and then by brilliant deduction to pass from them to other facts which are not known, but the truth of which he is able to establish beyond a doubt.

Poe himself had a mind precisely of this character—the mind of a mathematician, subtle, logical and capable of searching analysis. He once gave a remarkable illustration of what he could do as an investigator of mysterious crime. A young shopgirl named Mary Rogers was found murdered under circumstances which excited great public interest in New York. The police were completely baffled, though they advanced a theory which was plausible in part. Poe, taking the facts that were admitted, wove them into a story, the scene of which he laid in Paris and which he called "The Mystery of Marie Roget." Then from what was known he passed by deductive reasoning to what was quite unknown and worked out a solution to the puzzle which no professional detective had been able to explain. Years afterward the confession of a dying man afforded proof that Poe was right and that he had reconstructed accurately the whole series of events which led to the death of Mary Rogers.

This remarkable achievement fixed in the public mind the notion that the art of logic blended with imagination was original with Poe. As a matter of fact, it is almost certain that Poe, who was deeply versed in French literature, got the suggestion of the method from reading certain passages in the oriental tale called "Zadig," by Voltaire, in this book a young man is questioned as to whether he had seen a stray dog and horse that might have passed him on his journey. In reply he describes very accurately the peculiarities of both, though he had not seen them. He had deduced his knowledge from observing certain indications along the way—the nature of the footprints and many other signs which the ordinary person would either not have noticed or would have been too dull to understand. Here is really the germ of the complicated method which he so brilliantly elaborated in the story of "The Purloined Letter," where we find exhibited the striking contrast between the working of a usual mind and the achievements of a mind of exceptional power and training.

Poe's central figure, the amateur detective, was afterward caught up and elaborated with great effect by several French writers, of whom the elder was Emile Gaboriau. Gaboriau gave the world the character of M. Lecoq in the remarkable novel of that name. Lecoq is a professional detective, but appears in that book as a novice, inexperienced, but full of intelligence and enthusiasm and obliged to work out his clews against the secret opposition of his official chief, Gevrot, who is jealous of the young detective. In the background are the interesting figures of the real amateur detective, old Father Tire-au-Clair ("Bring-to-light"), a retired magistrate, and his student son from sheer love of the intellectual puzzle which it affords him and which he solves by purely scientific deduction.

Sir Conan Doyle in creating Sherlock Holmes openly acknowledged his great indebtedness to Poe. Like Poe's hero, Holmes works apart from the official police and is consulted by them when they are at their wits' end. Many of the incidents in the Holmes cycle of stories were suggested by the investigations of Poe. Yet it is only fair to say that Doyle has gone one step further than his master. Poe's characters are characteristic. There is no attempt on the board and exciting interest only because of the complexity of the problem with which they are made to deal. They entertain us by their whims and individual traits no less than by the mysteries which they help to solve. Thus Holmes' addiction to the cocaine habit, his trick of smoking great quantities of strong tobacco when thinking out a problem, his dislike of women, his skill as a boxer—in fact, a score of traits all give him individuality and make us think of him as a fascinating character quite apart from his powers as a deductive reasoner. And it is as with the minor personages—his wife Watson, the somewhat obtuse chronicler of the adventures; Lestrade and Gregson of the official police and Moriarty, the arch criminal.

But, however brilliant Poe may have been, or however ingeniously Gaboriau may have spun tangled plots, of however ably Conan Doyle may have given life and reality to the central figure of his stories, they all derive their inspiration, whether consciously or not, from the clever tale told by the famous Frenchman before Poe saw the light.—Argonaut.

Where the Audience Was.

A London actor appearing at a cheap theater in Salford found so small an audience that he sought out the manager for an explanation. "You see," the manager told him, "my people are at the Hulle concert." "Oh," the actor said, surprised, "I should hardly have thought your patrons would care much for high class music." "No," the other explained; "it's all the truth, they go to pick pockets."

Size of Heads.

The average adult head has a circumference of fifty twenty-two inches. The average adult hat is fifty six and three-quarters size. The sizes of men's hats are six and three-fourths and six and seven-eighths generally. "Sevens" hats are common in Aberdeen, and the professors of our colleges generally wear seven and one-eighth to eight size. Heads wearing hats of the sizes six and three-eighths and smaller or being less than twenty-one inches in circumference are held never be powerful. Between nineteen and twenty inches in circumference heads are invariably very weak and, according to this authority, "no lady should think of marrying a man with a head less than twenty inches in circumference." People with heads under nineteen inches are mentally deficient and with heads under eighteen inches invariably imbecile.—London Young Woman.

DEFECTIVE PAGE

VALLEY FORGE!

Perhaps no spot in all America has a sig-nificance to Americans such as attaches to that little vale to the hills of Chester county, Pen-nsyl-va-nia. Plymouth Rock has its halo of history, but without Valley Forge the landing of the Pilgrims would have been a forgotten incident. It was at Valley Forge that the young nation was tried to bitterness and defeat, only to come out of it steeled for the work that in that long, dreadful winter was replanc for it.

Through it all Washington, as commander-in-chief, os soldier, and os so individual sufferer with his men, was the colossal figure that emphasizes this supreme test of patriotism.

Defeat at Germantown on Oct. 2, 1777, had sent Washington in retreat. Fort Mifflin and Fort Mercer to quick succession had been abandoned by the continental army. At Whitemarsh Washington had made a stand so unexpected and determined as to cause the British general, Howe, to return to his comfortable winter quarters in Philadelphia. There, on Dec. 11, Gen. Washington, with his suffering army of 17,000 men, took up the weary march to Valley Forge, a sleepy depression to the north and 22 miles from Philadelphia. Oo one side was the Schuylkill river and on the north was Valley creek.

Snow lay deep on the ground when, on Dec. 19, the patriot army reached the site of the winter camp. Tents were stretched for as many as could be housed, hundreds slept in the snow, already reddened by their bleeding hero feet. At once Gen. Washington directed that work begin on log huts, previously designed. To do this, there were divided loto squads of 12, furnished with rude tools, and directed to build huts large enough to house each squad. According to specifications these huts were 14 by 16 feet, with sides, ends and roofs made of logs. The roofs were made watertight with bark, split slabs, or other material. The cracks in the sides were filled with clay. lo the rear of each but was a fireplace made of wood, protected by clay. The door was in the end next to the camp street and was made of oak slabs.

In the rear of each line of huts for troops were the huts for officers. Each grocral officer got a hut to himself; each field officer of a regiment got one; the staff of each brigade shared another; the staff of each regiment was assigned one; commissioned officers for two regiments had ooe, while for the noo-commissioned officers and moo of the army 13 persons were allotted to each but.

The winter of 1777-78 was remarkable for its severity and its deep snows, and when work was bogun at making camp, nearly 3,000 men were unfit for duty. British sympathizers populated the surrounding country and food and bedding were hard to get, even when the soldiers had the depreciated currecoy of the country to offer in exchaoge. As an incentive to hut building, Gen. Washington offered a purse of $100 to the officer or man who would suggest the best substitute for boards as a roofing material, having especial reference to cheapness and celerity in building. Then, to the squad in each regiment which built the hut quickest and in the best manner he gave a purse of $12. So encouraged, the tattered, emaciated army was bonsed into la January.

Twenty-two miles away was Howe's army of 19,500 men in Philadelphia, paying British gold and silver for supplies. Washington's starveling army had only the continental currency, worth $25 to the $100 of face valne. Even with the spirit of Toryism abroad, the army at Valley Forge was not to have been handicapped. As it was they found farmers defeoding their cattle, grain and straw at the musket's end.

With reference to these uncomfortable quarters for the men, it may be said that Washington shared them with his men until all had been housed in huts. Then only did he take up quarters with the old Quaker preacher near the mouth of Valley creek. Around his headquarters were stationed the members of his life guard.

Allegiance Waldo's Diary.

Somewhere in this chilled, starved, ill-naked camp was a genius who may have added mirth to its cheerless gloom. His name was Allegience Waldo, a surgeon, and in addition to his official duties he kept a diary which, efter a hundred years, is strangely interesting. This diary came to light to 1861 in the old Pennsylvania Magazine, and read through from the first entry on Nov. 19 it indicates, as nothing else could, the wearing effect of the illness and circumstances. On Dec. 11 the herdships of Valley Forge bave begun to tell on this surgeoo to the continental army. He writes:

"I am prodigious sick and cannot get anything comfortable. What in the name of providence can I..do with a fit of sickness in this place, where nothing appears pleasant to the sickened eye and nauseating stomech? But I doubt not providence will find a way for my relief, only I cannot eat beef if I starve; for my stomach positively refuses such company, and how can I help that?"

Next day he is worse, and to a worse mood he scribbles:

"Dec. 12.—Sunset. We are ordered to march over the river. It snows—I'm sick—est nothing—no whisky—no baggage—Lord—Lord—Lord!"

Twelve days later he begins with a tributs to the endurance and patience of the soldiery, followed with loud protestotion for himself and his condition, and winds up his memoranda by taking it all back:

"Dec. 24.—Prisoners and deserters are continually coming in. The army, who have been surprisingly healthy hitherto, have now begun to grow sickly from the continued fatigues they have suffered in this campaign Yet they still show spirit and alacrity and contentment not to ha expected from so young troops. Why am we seot here to starve and freeze? What severe fecilities have I left at home—a charming wife, pretty children, good beds, good food, and the comforts of agreeable—all harmonious. Here all confusion—cold, smoke, hunger, and filthiness. Here comes a bowl of soup —full of burnt coroe and dirt. Away with it, boys—I'll live like a chameleon upon air!

"Poh, poh,' cries Patience within me; 'you talk like a fool! Your being sick covers your mind with a cloud of sullen gloom, which makes everything about you appear gloomy. See the poor soldier when in health—with what cheerfulness he mounts his foes and cocounters every hardship. If barefoot, he labors through the mire, and cold with a song in his mouth, extolling war and Washington.

"But hearken, Patience, a moment. There comes a soldier. His bara feet are seen through his worn-ont shoes; his legs nearly naked from the tatered remains of an only pair of stockings—his shirt hanging in strings—his hair disheveled—his face meager his whole appearance picturing a person forsaken and discouraged. He comes and cries with an air of wretchedness: 'I am sick—my feet lame—my legs are sore—my clothes worn out—my constitutioo broken—I fall fast—I shall soon be no more.' And all the reward I shall get will be: Poor Will is no more.'"

Humor in Some Entries.

That Surgeon Waldo was a humorist in no mean degree is shown by an extract following one in which he gives a dissertation on "fire-cake" as an article of steady diet. He writes:

"Dec. 22.—Lay excessive cold and uncomfortable last night. My eyes are started out from their orbits like a rabbit's eye, occasioned by a great cold—and smoke!

"What have you for breakfast, lads?

"'Fire-cake and water, sir.'

"The Lord send that our commissary of purchases may live on fire-cake and water till their glutted stomachs are turned to pasteboard!"

To this comprehensive picture of life at Valley Forge is that memorable entry: Surgeon Waldo added an out of his last memoranda a little tribnte of his own to the general who had come with them so far afield.

"So much talk about the generals," he writes, "and so many discharged, that Mr.—— lately expressed fears of being left alone with the soldiers only. Strange that our country will not exert themselves for his support and save so good—so great—a man from entertaining the least anxiety on behalf of their virtue and perseverance in supporting a cause of such unparalleled importance."

But when May came the army was eager to meet the British in the field in retreat from Philadelphia.

There is a man who fancies he is the head of the house. This particular man has several small children, and it pleases him to discourse a great deal on the training of the young.

A few days ago he had friends visiting him. His two little sons began to play about noisily. It is one of his theories that children should obey implicitly, and he wanted his friends to see how he carried it ont in the training of his own family.

"Eerlie," he said eterally, "stop that noise instantly!"

Match Twins with Twins, Was the Fond Mother's Idea.

A little woman entered a drug store and asked the proprietor if he had "another picture."

"What kind of a picture do you mean?" the druggist asked.

"Ond like, this," said tha woman, holding up an attractive advertising print.

"I may have one or two of them left," the proprietor said, "but I haven't many of them."

The woman said she only wanted one, but from the tone indicated that she was anxious for that one. She explained that the one she had with-her had been given to another of her children. Another child, she stated, was sick, and wee crying for a picture such as his brother had.

"That's a bad way to bring up your children," ventured a woman customer in the store. "Do you try to get a child everything he cries for just because his brother is more fortunate?"

"Buh," said the mother of the children, "you don't know. The children are twins and what one has the other wants."

"Suppose," objected tha moralist, "when your children get older, they fall in love with the same girl, what will they do?"

But the mother was ready. Sha promptly replied:

"Find twine and fall in love with them."

BABY TORTURED BY ITCHING.

Rash Covered Face and Feet—Would Cry Until Tired Out—Speedy Cure by Cuticura.

"My baby was about nine months old when she had rash on her face and body. Her face seemed to irritate her most, especially nights. They would cause her to be broken in her rest, and sometimes she would cry until she was tired out. I had always used Cuticura Soap myself, and had heard of so many cures by the Cuticura Remedies that I thought I would give them a trial. The improvement was noticed after a few hours, and before I had used one box of the Cuticura Ointment her feet were well and her face nearly so. Before I also used it to remova what is known as "cradla cap" from her head, and it worked like a charm, as it cleaned and healed the scalp at the same time. Now I keep Cuticura Ointment in the house at all times for any little rash or insect bites, as it takes out tha inflammation at once. I always use the Cuticura means of helping other suffering babies. Mrs. Hettie Currier, Thomaston, Me., June 9, 1906."

Two Rules for Good Carriage.

If you are walking along the street and wish up to the fact that you are carrying yourself poorly take the mental attitude of standing straight, as well as the physical one. Look at the men you meet and imagine that each of them owes you a dollar. Put aveni expression of arrogence into your position. Hold your head well back; look people squarely in the face. This will not only give the impreselon to others that you poeeeee the power you want, but it will actually tend to bring that power. Keep the neck against the collar.—World's Work.

HOME-MADE CATARRH CURE.

Sufferers Should Make This Up and Try It Anyway.

Any one can mix right at home the best remedy of its kind known. The name "Cyclona" is given to the following prescription, it is supposed, because of its promptness in driving from the blood and system every vestige of catarrhal poison, relieving the foul and dread' disease, no matter where located. To prepara the mixture: Get from any good pharmacy one half-ounce Fluid Extract Dendelion, one ounce Compound Kargon and one ounce Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Shaka well and use in teaspoonful dosee after each meal and at bedtime.

Tbie is a harmless, inexpensive mixture, which has a peculiar action upon the alimentative tissues of the blood, assisting them to filter and strain from the blood and system all catarrhal poisons, which, if not eradicated, are absorbed by the mucous membrane, and an open sora or catarrh is the result.

Prepare some and try it, as it is the prescription of an eminent catarrh specialist of national reputation.

The "Thunderer."

Judge Rentoul's reference on the bench to the Times as tha "Thunderer" reminds us how remarkably the nickname has persisted. Tha Morning Poet is no longer "Jeamee;" tha Standard has not been "Mr. Gamp" since tha decease of tha Morning Herald—tha "Mrs. Harris" to whom it would allude as an independent authority, and the two represented tha same proprietor. But tha Times is still tha "Thunderer." It owes that name to Captain Edward Sterling, who is said to have begun a Times article with the words: "We thundered forth the other day an article on the subject of social and political reform."—London Chronicle.

SOME NEW FRENCH KNIGHTS.

Queen of Holland Has Agreed to Recognize Vatican Titles.

Among the lucrative sources of revenue of the pope before the separation of church and state in France was the toll or tax on titles of nobility and decorations. Since the rupture the French government no longer recognizes tha ennobling titles and decorations of the holy father. To have the right to wear tha Vatican ribbon, or to be called count, it was necessary to obtain a confirmation of title. This gave much perplexity to tha candidates.

The question has just been settled. Queen Wilhelmina has consented to validata such titles and distinctions. The result has been an amusing pilgrimage to The Hague—and also in an increase in the price of these political favors.

In tha last few weeks the French Knights of the Golden Spur, of the Holy Sepulcher, of Christ, of Gregory the Great, of Pius IX. have greatly increased.

The revelations regarding fraudulent paint materiale which have been made by the Agricultural Experiment Station of Fargo, N. D., and published by Prof. E. F. Ladd, state commissioner, have occasioned almost as much of a sensation as the exposura of adulteration in food products did when the latter first began to appear. It has been shown thet kegs marked "Pure White Lead" often contain other substances such as chalk, barytes, silica, etc., and that oil supposed to be linseed often contains petroleum oildturanta, to say nothing of water in large proportioos. Sometimes, so-called "White Leads" contain not an iota of genuine White Lead.

The farmer is a large user of paint. No one is more interested than he in that the label should enable him to get what he supposes he is paying for. There should be a law in every state requiring that all packages should be labeled exactly according to their contents. That would enable every painbuyer to buy intelligently.

Almost Too Methodical.

"You must keep methodical and careful bookkeeping all you want to," said a Boston man, "but a case came under my observation a Sunday or two ago which I think le without parallel. I wee attending a service at tha Mount Vernon church. When the contribution box wee passed the worshiper sitting next to me put in a coin, and immediately took from his pocket a memobook and a pencil and meda a memorandum of the amount which I could not help seeing without turning my head around, as it wae done right under my eye. His cash account will foot up all right."

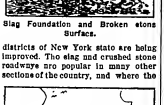
ROAD AND FARM IMPROVEMENT

PRACTICAL ROAD MAKING.



How Many Highways Through the Country Are Being Improved.

Our two illustrations taken from the New York Times show how numbers of miles of roadway in the rural districts of New York state are being improved. The slag and crushed stone roadways are popular in many other sections of the country, and where the materiale are not too expensive is the cheapest in the long run as they make a permanent road bed which will last for years with slight repairs.

A CHEAP FARM POWER.

Gasoline Engines Coming Into More General Use.

An engine is a time and labor saver on a farm. With a 24-inch buzz saw, wood enough can be sawed in one day to last several months. An engine will grind feed enough in one day to last several weeks, and save toil, wear of harness and vehicles going to mill. In the busy time and strength will do saved running the separator and churn with power.

Gasoline engines are used to quite an extent by farmers and the time saved in starting them is to their favor. You can get first-class steam engines now that will be ready to run in 15 to 20 minutes after fire is started, and if in good repair are apt to run all day without stopping. Whether to get steam or gasoline, must be decided by everyone for himself. If you have a wood lot, a buzz saw and a steam engine, you have the fuel problem settled.

So sure to get an engine that is large enough. I first bought a small steam engine, using kerosene for fuel. I found it too small for some of my work and fuel too expensive, so I exchanged for a larger size. This lowered my pocketbook some. I now use a three-horse power boiler and two-horse engine on a small farm. I run a bone cutter, emory wheels, grindstone, buzz saw and a small farm feed mill. I can saw two cords polo wood per hour, grind two bags feed per hour, cut 100 pounds bones per hour, gum saws and grind axes in a prompt and vigorous manner. I have found my workshop and engine a very satisfactory investment.

FARM NOTES.

Buy a good file and keep your tools sharp. It will lighten work wonderfully.

Quality is more important than quantity in any kind of stock raising. The extra price more than makes up for the deficiency in numbers.

It is no greater hardship for a boy to provide dry wood for his mother to cook his meals than it is to beat all the old liars at the crossrode store at their own game.

Little pigs should have a separate trough from their mother and the other hogs during the weaning period. In that way they are taught to eat and root for themselves.

Agriculture is one of the oldest vocations known, but there is no other business about which so little is known and which affords such unlimited possibilities for improvement.

Winter Time.

Winter is the farmer's vacation time, but he can improve it to good advantage by posting himself on the innovations in agriculture. Following old methods is not the road to fortune in this age of progression.

Start That Set of Books.

Have you started that set of books yet? Unless you keep an account of your expenditures and receipts during the year you will never know what your profits and losses were.

Plow Deep.

Improvements on the farm should be, better farming by plowing deeper and using more farm-made manure, more thorough cultivation, better drainage, and more scientific balancing of the live stock.

PINE TREE BREAD.

KAMSCHATKANS USE THE INNER BARK OF PINE TREES.

Macerats It in Water and Bake Good, Wholesome Bread—The Pine Keeps the Blood Pure and This Body Healthy.

In Kamschatka the people live in earth-covered pits. Mr. Kennan compares the sound of their language to that of cows standing out of a narrow mouth jug. Their bread is made from the inner bark of the Pine Tree, macerated in water and baked without flour. They are a hardy race, the Pine keeping the blood pure and the various organs of the body in a healthy condition. Consumption is unknown among them.

A noted specialist in throat and lung trouble, who established a camp for consumptives in the Pine Woods of Maine, and whose remarkable cures there have attracted great attention from the medical world, says that one-half ounce of the Pure Virgin Oil of Pine, mixed with two ounces of Glycerine and one-half pint of good Whiskey and used in teaspoonful doses, will heal and strengthen the lungs, break up a cold in twenty-four hours, and cure any cough that is curable. The ingredients can be secured from any prescription druggist at small cost.

Inquiry at the prescription department of a leading local druggist elicited the information that the Pure Virgin Oil of Pine is put up only in half-ounce vials for dispensing. Each vial is securely sealed in a round wooden case, with engraved wrapper, showing the name—Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) guaranteed under the Food and Drug act, June 30, 1906. Prepared only by the Leach Chemical Co., Cincinnati, O. —plainly printed thereon. There are many rank imitations of Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure), which are being put out under various names, such as Concentrated Oil of Pine, Pine Balsam, etc. Never accept these as a substitute for the Pure Virgin Oil of Pine, as they will invariably produce nausea and never effect the desired results.

EARLY NORTHWEST VOYAGES.

Some Account of the Arctic Trips That Have Been Made.

Beginning with the American discoveries of John Cabot in 1497, the search for the northwest passage was for many years the object of rival expeditions from Denmark, England, France and Portugal, says A. W. Greely, in the Century. It was Frobisher, however, who in 1576-78 first gave a distinct national character to the quest. John Davis of Davis' strait followed in three voyages, 1585-88, and then, in 1613, came the illustrious and hapless Henry Hudson, whose motto was that explorers should "achieve what they had undertaken or else give reasons wherefore it will not be."

The search for the Atlantic side closed for two centuries with the voyage of a great seaman, William Baffin, who, in a tiny boat of 55 tons, with a miserable equipment, but an undaunted heart, attained, in 1616, the highest north in the western hemisphere, 77 degrees 45 minutes N., and discovered three sounding sounds, Jones, Smith and Lancaster, the last being the eastern entrance to the long sought passage.

Treasures of Methodism.

The Derbyshire (Eng.) Wesleyans have become possessed of some almost priceless Methodist treasures, including the minutes of the first Wesleyan conference, from which the original preachers' books were derived; a copy of a letter given by John Wesley to John Bennett, with founder's note and signature attached, being dated 1752; and also original letters written by Mrs. John Wesley, Mrs. Charles Wesley, Mrs. George Whitefield, and John Bennett's diary from 1748 to 1752. These valuable documents have had their home in the Peak district for more than 150 years.

DREADED TO EAT.

A Quaker Couple's Experience.

How many persons dread to eat their meals, although naturally hungry nearly all the time!

Nature never intended this should be so, for we are given a thing called appetite that should guide us as to what the system needs at any time and in what quantities.

But we get in a hurry, swallow our food very much as we shovel coal into the furnace, and our sense of appetite becomes unnatural and perverted. Then we eat the wrong kind of food or eat too much, and there you are—indigestion and its accompanying miseries.

A Phila. lady said, the other day:

"My husband and I have been sick and nervous for 15 or 20 years from drinking coffee—feverish, indigestion, totally unfit, a good part of the time, for work or pleasure. We actually dreaded to eat our meals.

"We tried doctors and patent medicines that counted up into hundreds of dollars, with little if any benefit.

"Accidently, a small package of Postum came into my hands. I made some according to directions, with surprising results. We both liked it and have not used any coffee since.

"The dreading after meals has left us and we feel better every way. We are so well satisfied with Postum that we recommend it to our friends who have been made sick and nervous and miserable by coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Fire Record for Last Year.

The fact that when a servant becomes master a cruel foe is suddenly developed is attested by the dreadful havoc and loss of life occasioned by fire in the United States within the 12 months covered by a summing up of those losses for 1906. This record shows that nearly 7,000 lives were lost and more than $500,000,000 worth of property was destroyed by fire during that period. In no other country in the world is the fire loss, in bulk or pro rata, anywhere near our own. Last year, owing to the devastating fire that followed the earthquake in San Francisco, this loss was in great excess of the average, but the average for some years past has been $200,000,000 a year.

ON SECRET SERVICE

True Stories of Experiences in the State, War, Treasury and Postoffice Departments.

By COL. JASPER EWING BRADY
(Late Censor of Telegraphs and Chief Signal Officer, U. S. A., Santiago de Cuba.)

THE TELEPHONE CASE

Dr. Phillip Jedsen sat in his comfortable den at home smoking a long black cigar and ruminating over certain events long past and almost forgotten. In his hand he held a letter typed on a plain white sheet of paper. A bright fire was crackling merrily in the open grate, and Dr. Jensen would read the letter and then gaze into the leaping flames and under his breath mutter:

"Hmm hm!"

The letter had neither heading nor signature, there was no writing to identify the sender, the post mark on the envelope was from a remote substation away out in the northern suburbs of the great city; but Dr. Jensen knew, as well as he knew his own name, just who had sent that letter. Knew it because it referred to a certain event in the past life, spoke of a compromising photograph and other things; only one man knew these things, the knowledge which would be very disastrous to Dr. Jensen's domestic and financial affairs. The writer of this letter hinted that a money consideration, if sufficiently large, might purchase the incriminating evidence. Only one man knew these facts, therefore he must have sent the missive.

To go back a little: When Jensen was graduated from an important eastern medical school and had had two well fitted years of practice. But he had financial ambition. All his life he had been poor; he worked his way through college, with the heel of poverty ever pressing his neck. He wanted money, but the pathway to money through practice of medicine was an a rule slow and uncertain. "Many (doctors) are called but few are chosen," was only too true and Phillip Jensen studied the subject of his future very seriously. The ethical way for him to have done at this time would be to open an office, for a plush hoodwink, put a pretty gold sign reading: "Philip Jensen, Physician and Surgeon" on the door, and then sit down in any easy chair and wait—wait for some person to come along and be suddenly stricken with stomach ache. He must wait for his patients—wait perhaps like the "Hon. Peter Stirling" for two years before a client came along. In doing this he would be strictly ethical, but two years of heling clinical wasn't pleasant, especially when the doctor needed food and raiment during that time. If he were reasonably successful in building up a practice he might effect about ten years bo able to pay his office rent and support himself. But he didn't propose to be poor that long; in ten years he wanted to accumulate a goodly amount of money; in 20 he wanted to be independent. He studied carefully over these questions and finally became an "advertising specialist." He departed from the hewn lines of medicine; through the papers he told of his skill in his chosen specialty; his charges were reasonable, and before very long the credit side of his ledger was getting larger than the debit. What Dr. Jensen did he did well; he was not an impecunious quack, but a skilled and expert physician. A year later his practice had so increased he needed help in his accounts and office work. A bright, intelligent young O'Brica was secured as Dr. Jensen's secretary. O'Brien was about the same age as the doctor and the two soon became fast friends. O'Brien was a lawyer and was trying to get on his feet by the old ethical way but his funds ran out before clients began to come in and he was perforce obliged to seek work. Jensen was glad to get him; his keen perception of business affairs and his rugged Irish wit were valuable assets for a private secretary, and that is what he was.

With the coming of money Dr. Jensen branched out. From the comforts of life he went on to luxuries. His rooms were beautifully furnished, and he and O'Brien lived together. It was said these bachelors were chums of more than one little dinner where wine, women and song were the order of the day. Jensen was enjoying life to the full and Harold O'Brien was helping him along. A number of wild oats was being sown by both men.

For three years life flowed on uneventfully for the doctor and his secretary, when one evening Dr. Jensen said:

"Harry, I'm going to surprise you."

"How, Phil?"

"I'm going to get married."

"Married? Ha, ha! Well, that's a good one, Phil. Who's the lucky lady? and how about all our friends here?"

A dull red color suffused Jensen's face as he replied:

"Never mind who the lady is. I haven't spoken to her yet and don't know if she would have me; but I'm getting sick of living as we do. I want a home; the money question is easy now and I'm going to have one."

"You don't suppose the future Mrs. Jensen would be proud of the life we have been leading, do you?"

"No, and that's just it. To-night is our farewell. After that I quit."

"So do I, then. Since coming with you, Phil, I've had a devil of a good time, and I'm sorry to see my well and I bave a few thousand of my own laid by. You know I like the few and I'm going back to it."

"But I don't want to leave you."

"There, Phil, you and I know too much of each other to be together after you're married. You can get another secretary."

"Maybe you say is probably true, O'Brien, but I bete to see you go. Well, say way, we'll have one last night of it," and out they went.

Dr. Jensen would have given a great deal not to have had that "one last night." Certain things had happened which were dangerous. Neither man referred to these events, but each knew the other knew. A few months later Dr. Jensen married and O'Brien opened up a law office at his own hometown. In a way O'Brien prospered. He became a political lawyer and some of his clients bordered on to the underworld. He made money, but his standing wasn't very high. After Jensen's marriage the two men seldom saw each other. The doctor built a beautiful house and was living a very respectable life. O'Brien gained entry into a good political club.

Dr. Jensen thought of all these things as he sat in his den on the day this story opened.

"Damn him," he muttered, "he's playing the cinch on me. He hasn't written for a long time, according to gain. I wonder how much he wants."

The next day Dr. Jensea dropped into O'Brien's office.

"Hello, Phil," said O'Brien, with a show of cordiality. "What on earth brings you here? Any of your patients who won't pay up, and you want me to sea them, eh?"

Jensen looked hard at O'Brica, but the lawyer never quailed. He wasn't the most pleasant looking man in the world. Unlike Dr. Jensen, he had not quit sowing his wild oats, and his affiliations with political gangs did not tend to help him personally. He was a "shyster" lawyer, pure and simple.

"Cut out all that, O'Brien," said the doctor. "How much money do you want?"

"Bless my soul, you're getting generous! How much money do I want? And for what, pray?"

"Your insolence doesn't set well on you, O'Brien. How much money do you want for that?" said Jensen with a great deal of vehemence as he threw the anonymous letter on the table.

"Oh, that," said O'Brien, with an exasperating smile. He dropped his tone of raillery as he leaned toward the doctor and continued: "You've got plenty of money, Phil, bunches of it, and I've been hard hit lately in the street. In looking over my assets I found a photograph and a negative. Both are very interesting. I think they would look well in that rat gallery of yours. O'Brien liked to grill his man. He waited a minute and then said quietly: "Have a cigar, and let us talk it over."

"I don't want a cigar, but I do want to get this interview over with as soon as how much do you want?"

"Fifteen thousand dollars, doctor; just fifteen thousand, that's all."

"Fifteen thousand blackmailer!" said Jensen, a step forward, with uplifted clenched fist. "Fifteen thousand dollars. Why—"

"Steady, doctor," said O'Brien, quickly drawing in his desk drawer and taking from thence a revolver. "Steady now, my friend, you are getting unduly excited. My request is modest, and you'll be glad enough to grant it before I'm through with you. Fifteen thousand dollars in money—no checks—to me, or those few little documents go to Mrs. Jensen. Wait, he continued, as he saw Jensen was about to interrupt him. "I know what is going on in your mind right now, Jensen: 'Blackmail!' Well, that's an ugly name; if you could prove it, which you can't, you'd come under. But you can't prove it. You receive a typewritten and addressed letter, and this letter contains reference to an incident which would not look well to your friends, and you have quite a few. As only one man knew of these events in your life, naturally the inference is correct. I admit I sent that letter. I admit it to you—but no one else knows it, there is no one near to hear this conversation, so I am playing the cinch, my dear doctor," and the garrulous Irishman smiled as he contemplated the physician.

Jensen knew the lawyer stated the truth: he couldn't convict him of blackmail on the anonymous letter and the doctor's testimony. It needed corroboration, and there was none. But $15,000! He didn't have that amount of ready cash in hand, and he didn't want to mortgage his house for dispose of any securities. His mind acted quickly.

"You've done a clever bit of crooked work, O'Brien. Is fifteen thousand the least you will take?"

"The very least," replied O'Brien, rising and laying the revolver where he could readily reach it. "I know you haven't that much cash, but you have two weeks from to-day to produce that amount. If it's not on hand then I'll extend the time 11 days, but each day's extension will cost you $1,000 additional. When $25,000 is reached I give the documents to Mrs. Jensen, or if she should not be here, to some of your most important competitors. They will know how to use this evidence. Do I make myself plain, my dear doctor?"

"Perfectly, O'Brien, perfectly. I never imagined an Irishman could be such a blackguard. I'll see you in 15 days and give you an answer one way or another. Good morning."

"So long, Jensen. You won't miss the $15,000 and it will do me a heap of good."

Jensen was sorely troubled. It looked as if the Irishman did have a cinch. If he could only be made to make his threats in the presence of witnesses, the charge of blackmail would be laid and proven. But the lawyer was too shrewd to permit any witnesses.

Mr. Luther M. Miller, a very prominent attorney, was a firm friend of Dr. Jensen's, and to him he went and told him his troubles. It hurt the doctor considerably to confess his past, but he did it, covering up nothing. Mr. Miller listened attentively.

"Pretty ugly mess, doctor," he said when Jensen had finished. "I know O'Brien. He's one of those shrewd lawyers who will commit any crime for money, but he will go fearfully and cover his tricks that conviction becomes impossible. Looks bad. But wait," here a happy thought seemed to strike Mr. Miller, and after a moment he muttered: "By Jove, he's just the men!"

"Who? What do you mean, Mr. Miller?"

"Here's a card of introduction to a gentleman," said Miller, writing. "Take it to him, and if anyone can help you out, he can. He will probably tell me to go and we will consult about it. Do just what he tells you to do."

"Thank you, Mr. Miller," said Jensen, taking the card and bowing himself out. The card read: "Col. Longergan, Monad building: Help my friend, Dr. Jensen. He's in trouble. (Signed) Luther M. Miller."

In due time Jensen appeared in Cheney's office. The colonel was just finishing up the odds and ends of a very busy day when the doctor was announced.

"How do you do, Dr. Jensen," said Cheney, extending his hand. "What's the horrible trouble Mr. Miller speaks about in this card of introduction?" Jensen in a few words as possible told the colonel the entire trouble from beginning to end. Cheney smoked as the doctor talked, and when he paused the colonel said:

"You've got a very clever estag oaist, Dr. Jensen. Mr. O'Brien is unknown to me. I presume Mr. Miller told you as much. The principal thing in this case is to get him to produce the letter himself by asking for this money in the presence of a witness." Cheney had been studying the letter very carefully. He noted the long, stylish frock coat, the gray trousers, perfectly creased, and the doctor's hand his shiny silk hat.

"Do you always dress this way, doctor?" asked Cheney.

"Yes, generally," replied the doctor, amazed at the question. He even smiled as he replied to Cheney. The colonel, too, smiled and continued:

"Queer question, isn't it, doctor? But let me assure you it's not a idle one. The case is not as hard as it would seem, and I think before we get through with Mr. O'Brien he will wish he hadn't asked for $15,000. Now you, doctor, will go about your daily work until you hear from me. I promise you it won't be long. Good evening, doctor."

Dr. Jensen was just a little nonplussed over the meaner of the cool Cheney, but he would "have faith in him.

The next morning Cheney sent for Lonergan. "Ed," he said, "Harold O'Brien is a lawyer over here in the Rook building. I want a perfect description of the lay of his offices and adjoining rooms. I don't care anything about the man, because I know enough now, but I am particularly anxious to get the information about his rooms. You understand, Ed?"

"Sure, colonel, I do," and Lonergan went out. That afternoon he came back and reported the result of his investigation.

"Three rooms en suite, colonel. The first two are occupied by a loan shark named Elliott, and the third is O'Brien's office. You have to pass through the loan society's rooms to reach lawyer. He's a pretty well barricaded. He pays the rent and sublets to the loan company."

"What color are the carpets, Ed?"

"Carpets? Let's see. They are a rather dark green."

"How dark?" asked Cheney, producing a bundle of different colored green yarns and laying them before Lonergan. Ed looked them over carefully and picked out one strand. "That's about it, colonel."

Cheney took the strand and placed it carefully in his pocketbook. "That's all, thank you, Ed, save that I wish you would send one of the men out to this address," handing Lonergan a card, "and ask Mr. Elliott to step here on his way downtown to-morrow morning."

"Yes, sir," and Lonergan was gone. Cheney chuckled to himself. "By, George, there's going to be one very much surprised lawyer before many days go by."

The next morning some time Mr. James Elliott, a rising young electrical engineer, came in to the colonel's office. Cheney was a great believer in young men and Elliott was one of his favorites.

"Morning, Jimmie," he said, cheerfully; "smoke?"

"No, colonel," replied Elliott, taking the profered cigar. "What's up that you want me? Have I been reported for doing something criminal?" This with a smile.

"No, Jimmie. I want to consult you about something serious." Then for 15 minutes they talked and when Elliott went out he was smiling heartily. He also had with him the green strand of yarn Cheney had placed in his pocketbook.

The colonel sent for Jensen at 10 o'clock that morning. He came on time and was introduced to Mr. Elliott.

"The time has come, doctor, when we can round up your friend O'Brien. You will please go with Mr. Elliott here and be guided by what he tells you to do. When finished with you, come back here and we will complete arrangements for our conquest."

Dr. Jensen and Elliott left and about three-quarter of an hour later Jensen returned. A broad smile was on his face as he greeted Cheney.

"Grent, colonel, great—if we can pull it off."

"Oh, we'll do that all right. O'Brien thinks he's playing the cinch, but his pipe will soon go out. You will write him a note to-night arranging for a meeting at his office at 5:30 to-morrow evening. It will be dark then and news will be on the prement but you and O'Brien. The loan company people leave at five o'clock. The janitor will be attending something and will be armed. All I want you to do is to get him to report his blackmailing proposition. I know a firm to which he owes about $2,000. I've got the account right here. After you have made him come out fair and square for the $15,000, tell him you have the money in the office and are ready to pay for it. He will of coures refuse it. Then you arrange to bring it around the next evening. That's all, Jensen."

"All right, colonel, I'll do my part."

The next day at noon Jensen got a "phone message that O'Brien had communicted with him by 'phone and that he would meet Jensen at 5:45 instead of 5:30.

"Good," said Cheney; "so much the better. You will be fully protected." Jensen was notified and promised to do hie share.

Dr. Jensen kept his appointment and that evening during that interview can best be told by reiating the following day's happenings:

At 9:30 in the morning Lonergan came in sweuer to a request.

"Morning, Ed," said Cheney. "Go over to O'Brien's office and tell him I have sent for him to meet me here at 11:30 o'clock this morning. Tell him it's about the McGarry matter. Here's the note. If he won't come, bring him."

"He'll sure come, colonel," smiled Lonergan. He did come promptly at 11:30.

"Good morning, Mr. O'Brien. You see I have never met him before, though of course I've heard of you. Sit down, won't you, please."

"Thank you, Col. Cheney," replied the lawyer. "Your man tells me you want to see me about the McGarry affair."

"Yes, they say you owe them some $2,000 for goods delivered. (McGarry was a wholesale liquor dealer.) Before taking any action on claims of this kind I always try and effect a compromise amicably."

"Sure, Col. Cheney, there need be no trouble here. I do owe them a bill that's true, and it's just due. I got in pretty deep not long ago and have had hard luck since. I'm going over in here to-morrow morning or you can call around over after it."

"Well, that is good news, I'm sure," Cheney went on in a fatherly, complacent manner. "Your ship's coming in to-day, eh, O'Brien?"

"Yes," replied the lawyer, laughing heartily, "I'm going to cut a melon this afternoon and it's a good one, colonel, that's a fact."

"What's it's name?" asked Cheney. "Jensen?"

Everybody laugh froze on his face; his color faded to white. "Jensen?" he gasped, "Jensen?"

"Yes, Jensen, Dr. Philip Jensen. Is he the 'melon you are going to cut' this afternoon? Fifteen thousand I believe is the figure, O'Brien."

O'Brien was thunderstruck but he had a ready and active wit. Jensen had evidently told Cheney and now this clever detective was going to try and trap him. But he wouldn't be caught.

"I don't know what you mean, colonel," he replied, with a show of indignation.

"Oh, yes you do, O'Brien. You are to meet Dr. Philip Jensen at your office this afternoon in jar to pay him $15,000. In return you are to turn over to him a photograph and a number of letters described in part in this letter —you recognize it, I see from your eyes."

"That's what Jensen has told you," said the Irishman, fighting hard.

"That's the bargain made last evening when at 5:45 Jensen met you in your office by appointment and I was a witness—I heard every word of the conversation."

The detective was trying to trap the lawyer, but the Celtic wit was too ready. If it was a trap, he wouldn't fall into it.

"My brother, colonel, you're a good actor. Jensen was at my office last evening. Sure, I admit that. But you were not there. No one heard what was said."

"You damned, sneaking blackguard," thundered Cheney, "I've a mind to thrash the kids off of your head that," and he threw a type-written document on the table in front of the Irishman. O'Brien did read, and as the words slipped through his mind, he began to realize that this was a report written of a statement of the conversetion which took place between him and Dr. Philip Jensen the evening before. Of course Jensen may have had such a good memory that he could remember every word that was said, but Cheney said he was a witness, and his word on the stand in corroboretion of a charge made by Dr. Jensen would be mighty convincing to a jury. But the Irishman wasn't beaten yet. The trump card would have to be played, Cheney saw it.

"Wait a minute, O'Brien. I'm going to give you the proof now. You're caught, and you know it; but I'm going to show you how it was done. Just hold this to your ear a minute," handing him a gutta percha phone receiver, one very similar to half than those in general use. O'Brien did as he was told, wondering what was coming. Then Cheney touched a button, and O'Brien heerd a voice say: "Good morning, O'Brien. Expecting any funds to-day?" It was Jensen's voice.

"Confound you!" said O'Brien angrily.

"Just a moment, Mr. O'Brien. Dr. Jensen can't hear you. You see you only have a receiver, not a transmitter. Dr. Jensen has one in the other room. He'll bring it in presently, and you can see how you were trapped."

O'Brien began to feel clemmy. This man's methedo were a bit uncanny. This telephoning from seemingly nowhere wasn't pleasant. The idea was steeling over him that he wes. cornered. The door opened and in walked Dr. Jensen, followed by Jimmie Elliott. Dr. Jensen was garbed as usual, and in his hend he held his silk hat. Introductions were needless, said Cheney said:

"O'Brien, ever hear of a man talking through his hat? Sure you have. Well, you didn't exactly do that, but you did talk through Jensen's hat, didn't you, Ed?" and Cheney reeched out and took Dr. Jensen's silk tile and held it on O'Brien could see that it was. Elliott grinned approvingly as Cheney went on: "You will see a perfect telephone transmitter concealed in the top of this hat. Now look at the outside. Theee four email air holese are right over the transmitter. Dr. Jensen held thie het in hie left hand towerde you. You talked right into it. A very slender copper wire from a piete held inside the doctor's hand under his coat sleeve down to his back, and the last connection led along the floor to the receiver you just held to your ear. Only it was a double receiver, for I held one to my ear and a court stenographer held the other stretped around his head so that he could see the every word of the conversation. You still look incredulous. The wires? Oh, yes, the wire was on a reel in my office, and I was in the first office when Dr. Jensen went to yours. We arranged matters before he went in, and I unwound it as he walked eway from me: Oh, I was in a closet when he came in, but I removed all that incroehend. The wire was wound with green silk the color of your carpet, and I was concealed behind the outer door, seeing it. Just a moment ago you had a dechonstration as to how this phone worked between the outer office. You see was there, and when I reng he said a few words to you. Now, Mr. O'Brien, what have you to say?"

O'Brien looked like the thoroughly beaten man he was. From one to the other he glanced and then stepped fairly and squarely. But the Irish in him was strong, he wouldn't squeal. "Gentlemen, you have me fair enough. Seve, perhaps, that the telephone is a damned clever invention."

"Well, that's up to you, now," drawled Cheney.

Jensen looked hard at O'Brien. Perhaps twenty-four odd days when they had been boon companions flitted before him. He pitied the man.

"Get out of this, O'Brien, and try, for God's sake, to lead an honest life. You've got a chance now. Take it!"

O'Brien stood not on the order of going, but went. As he closed the door he muttered: "Greet thing, that telephone!"

U. S. Doesn't Believe in Signs.

According to the official of the local weather bureau a bulletin recently issued from the government office in Washington has been published for the purpose of combating and overcoming superstition—something which the government has undertaken in an official way. The bulletin in question is concerned with the belief among a large number of people in the prediction of the weather by the behavior of animals, birds, or plants are valueless and without foundation. It is said to have been made necessary by the large number of inquiries concerning forecasts received by the department. "The belief of many farmers in the power of the ground hog as a weather prophet of the winter season is as firmly fixed as their religion," said the local official referred to. "Another sure sign to the farmer is the moon."

They Will Peep Out.

Full many a gem of purest ray serene—
The dark, unfathomed caves of ocean bear;
But dainty feet will manage to be seen.
Despite the trailing skirts their owners wear.

Sporting Gossip.

Baseball may be a faster game in some particulars than it was in the '80s or '90s, but it is undeniably true that in two important departments running and returning the ball from the outfield—it hee slowed up wofully. There is no Harry Stovey, no Arley Evans in the game now. Many present day fans remember Stovey of the old Athletics. Not quite so many recall Evans of the old Cleveland team, when the elder Wesley, Charles Bulkley, and George W. Howe were the owners. Season after season Evans, who played in right field, held the record for outfield assists, and always a big percentage of these assists were made in throwing batters out at first. Judge now the batters of that period hetter then eny outfielder—excepting possibly Fielder Jones, Jack McCarthy and Billy Keeler—know them to-day, and laid for them with an intuition of where the ball would be that was marvelous. Nowadays it heppens once or twies a season that a batter is thrown out at first by the right fielder after an apparently safe hit. Evane once made three such assists in a single series. And all the time, from the beginning to the end of the ceason, he was whipping the ball to second, third, and home with a speed and accuracy that has never been equaled or approeched. Harry Stover scored 153 runs in the American association in 1889. He led all the feet bese runners of the Brotherhood in 1890. His record as champion base runner of the world in 1887, 1888, and 1889. He etole second base almost as easily as the modern player goes down from first on a sacrifice hit. No, it's a mighty fest game we see in these days of speed, but there are no Jake Evansee nor Harry Stoveys in the game to-day.

Robert W. Forbes.

Robert W. Forbes, end and tackle for two years on the Yale eleven, hee signed a contract as head coach at West Point. This is the army's first venture into the head coech system, and it hes been led to edopt the eyetem because the navy beat the army last fall with Jack Cates as head coach. Forbes played guard at Wesleyen in his freshman year, wes elected captain there by his classmates, but came to Yale, where he played tackle last season end end this fall. He lives at Dalton, Mass.

Arthur E. Bartlett, a student at Worcester academy, is a young giant, and possesses a strength which, when developed, will make him the strongest college man in the country, and this is a prediction made when the college Samsone of to-day are reckoned with. Prof. R. McMillan of the Worcester academy has broken all other sfrength records of the neademy. The record of the ecedemy was held by Bartlett's cousin, Chester V. Young, of Aylesford, N. S. This record wes 1,050 poiinte.

A Cleveland men tells of an incident at the West Point-Annapolis football game lately. He got enthusiastic and the navy began to win, and remarked to a man seated next to him: "This is the most enjoyable time I have had since I saw the Chicago Cubs do up the New York Nationals for the championship last summer." On the Polo grounds the man looked at him serenely, and taking out a cigar, bit off about two-thirds of it and stuck the wrong end in his mouth. "Are you from Philadelphia or Boston?" he asked. Later the Cleveland man asked the gentleman who had been now puffing away at the stubby cigar was, "Oh, that," came the reply, "is McGraw, the manager of the New York Giants."

SOUTH CAROLINA SENATOR A DIAMOND IN THE ROUGH

WASHINGTON.—The senate galleries are always filled when Senator Tillman is announced to speak. No other senator since the days of the acrid and dauntless Ingalls has been able to draw such crowds as he.

Yet Senator Tillman isn't a great orator. In the first place, his voice is a bit shrill and unpleasant, until he gets warmed up to the shouting point, and then it takes on a deeper and more sonorous timbre.

Again, he speaks somewhat disconnectedly, sometimes losing the thread of his argument altogether. But, like a creek or river diverted from its path, he always gets back to the main bed of his progress in time.

He sometimes makes his sentences so long that he has to pull up short and begin again. When he reads from a prepared manuscript—this is not often—the monotony of his delivery is tiresome.

When he is making a speech from data scattered about his desk he has prodigious difficulty in finding his references at critical junctures. He gropes all over the littered desk and the desks of his senatorial neighbors on either hand for the missing piece of paper, flounders around underneath the desks and on the floor, becomes red in the face and flustered and mad all through.

The neighboring senators make a great show of helping him to find what he is looking for, but they really don't try very hard, for they are smiling all the time and apparently enjoying the spectacle of wrath which the South Carolinian presents in these circumstances.

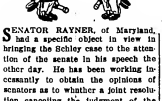
But always he succeeds in finding the lost bit of paper in time. His simply will not proceed until he does find it, and he has searched for as long as ten minutes, while senate and audience waited. Then he goes ahead with his argument.

His gestures are those of a man who is untrained in the art of oratory, but somehow the flailing gestures seem to belong to and to suit the flow of words when the senator becomes thoroughly wrought up. For all that he is a very well read man, the senator is still a rough diamond.

STRIKING RESEMBLANCE OF MEN IN PUBLIC LIFE

STRIKING facial resemblances of men in public life and in official circles in this city are frequently commented upon. There are three men widely known whose similarity of face and form is so striking that queer mistakes of identity are experienced every now and then. The resemblance of the president to his distinguished secretary of the navy and attorney general, Mr. Moody, has always been the subject of remark and now and then of humorous mistakes. Now that Mr. Moody has been elevated, or at least transferred, to the supreme court of the United States, he has come across another double in the person of James Maher, clerk of the supreme court.

When Justice Moody first met Mr Maher it was as a member of the house of representatives, when the resemblance between the two was first remarked. Again when as attorney general he had occasion to go to the courtroom he occasionally saw his double, and now as a justice on the bench he can look over the edge of his judicial gown any time and practically see himself as others see him. Mr. Meher's resemblance to the president is striking when in repose, but when he speaks or smiles he is obliged to acknowledge that owing either to the subduing atmosphere of the court or to the lack of dentel qualifications, he cannot vie with the chief executive at the other end of the avenue.



The resemblance of Senators Aldrich and Forsker is also striking, although the distinguished senator from Rhode Island plays the role of a retirent general mencuvering his forces on the floor of the senate, while the senator from Ohio acts the more striking part of a dashing officer with standard upliffed ready for the fray, regardless of the disturbing of forces. If Mr. Forsker's well-covered head were matched by the hirsute adornment of Mr. Aldrich the resemblance would be complete. But standing side by side they are as brothers and their similarity is frequently commented upon.

SENORA CREEL HEIRESS TO FORTUNE OF MILLIONS

SENOR ENRIQUE C. CREEL, the new Mexican ambassador, will rank James Bryce, the new British ambassador. Rumor has it that as soon as President Diaz heard that Sir Henry Mortimor Durand was to be recalled by King Edward he urged Senor Creel to make all haste to Washington in order that a representative of a republic might precede at the United States capital the representitive of the greatest monarchy on earth.

It is Senora Creel who is the real Rockefeller, although her husband, with his $24,000,000, is in no sense pinched for pocket money. Every cent of his millions, it is declared in Washington, was amassed by his individual exertion, a statement that is taken to mean he made his money without wringing rascal counters from the hard hands of peasants, as Mr. Shakespeare came pretty near putting it.

ATTEMPT TO RESURRECT SAMPSON-SCHLEY CASE.

SENATOR RAYNER, of Maryland, had a specific object in view in bringing the Schley case to the attention of the senate in his speech the other day. He has been working incessantly to obtain the opinions of senators as to whether a joint resolution canceling the judgment of the president and that of the court of inquiry in relation to the command at Santiago could be carried through the senate. Senator Rayner is anxious to secure an overturn of both these judgments by act of congress, as was done in the Fitzjohn Porter case.

The Maryland senator believes he has a sufficient number of votes pledged to enable him to adopt his resolution. Admiral Schley is now considering the matter to determine whether he is willing to risk a violation of the president's semi-official order or demand that naval officers refrain from agitating this famous controversy. Senator Rayner will offer no resolution unless Admiral Schley gives his approval and unless he is absolutely certain there is sufficient strength back of it to insure its adoption.

If such a resolution should be introduced it would simply deal with the proposition as to who was in command at Santiago. No other specification will be taken up. The judgment of the court and the judgment of the president leave it in absolute doubt as to who was in command and, as a matter of history, right and justice, it is claimed by the friends of Admiral Schley that congress sought to put itself on record that Admiral Schley was in command in the battle.

People Talked About

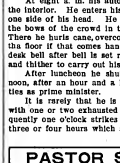
PROF. HOLDEN—"CORN WIZARD"

Perry G. Holden, of the Iowa Agricultural college, is the "corn wizard" of the world. He has added $15,000,000 a year to the wealth of Iowa. He is professor of agronomy—the science of the field and of the crop. He has made three blades of corn grow where one grew before. By following his teachings the farmers of Iowa have increased their corn output by 50,000,000 bushels.

Though born in Minnesota, 41 years ago, Prof. Holden grew up on a 400-acre farm in Benzie county, Michigan. He attended the Michigan agricultural college and at 23 he was a professor of agronomy in that institution. He afterward went to Bloomington, Ill. While manager of a 25,000-acre farm there he began his experiments with corn. Several seasons' experiments convinced him that the secret of big corn lay in the use of proper seed. He then invented the "germination box."

Before it is time to plant the corn Prof. Holden takes a kernel from each ear to be used as seed and plants them in the "germination box," which contains moistened sawdust. The seed-ears whose kernels fail to sprout properly are thrown away. The productive ears are used as seed and there is an uncertainty as to the kind of crop the farmer will get. It is simple, but certain.

Prof. Holden originated the "corn gospel" train. In this train he tours the state annually and the Iowa farmers flock to it when it reaches their locality and listen to Holden's lectures.



DARING YOUNG CHICAGO JURIST

McKenzie Cleland, a young Chicago lawyer, who was elected municipal court judge last fall, has shocked Chicago by his daring and originality. He began his duties by fining and sentencing to jail a number of saloon keepers for violations of the law. This startling procedure created a ripple of surprise—but that was all. For Mayor Dunne promptly pardoned the liquor men. Judge Cleland then subpoenaed the mayor and certain aldermen for contempt of court. Prosecuting Attorney Alexander, whom he accused with the aldermen of influencing the mayor to pardon the offenders, he ordered from his office. It was shown that the mayor had the right to pardon, and the affair was settled, but not until Judge Cleland had clearly shown that the interference of political influences with the administration of justice in his court would not be tolerated.

Every two weeks a review of the ghette's unfortunetes is held in Judge Cleland's court. Those husbands and wives who take the pledge are allowed to go under suspended sentences and fines of $15 to $50 are remitted. Out of 61 culprits at the last review only one failed to reform. He was sent to jail. Men and women wept as they listened to the judge's parting admonition to live in peace and sobriety. When the last fine had been remitted and the last lectura delivered, it was a happy crowd of husbends and wives and smiling children that fled out of the court room.

STRENUOUS FRENCH PREMIER

Clemenceau, the statesman and perty chief, Clemenceau the orator and thinker, Clemenceau the guide for the nation—this is the man who is wall known nw in America. But Clemenceau the man, as he lives in his rising up and lying down, is scarcely known to any one, whether in France or abroad.

Even in the midst of his intense activity, journalistic and political, when he was thundering for justice to Dreyfus, unmaking presidents and cabinets, he still managed to keep his private life a secret from his contemporaries.

Clemenceau is a very early riser, is never abed after five a. m.; often is up in summer time to watch the sun rise. His morning prayers are practical prayers for health in the form of calisthenics, followed by a scientifically riculous course in hydropathy.

His breakfast at seven a. m. is his chief meel, end he sometimes makes six eggs disappear at this meal, followed by a little cold meat. His only drink at any meal is water.

At eight a. m. his automobile tekes him to his office in the ministry of the interior. He enters his office like a blast of wind, his silk hat stuck on one side of his head. His acknowledges with a quick mechanical gesture the bows of the crowd in the ante-chambers end plunges into his sanctum. There he hurls cane, overcoat and hat on the first piece of furniture, or on the floor if that comes handiest. Then the minister seats himself at his desk bell after bell is set ringing, and the whole force is hastening hither and thither to carry out his peremptory orders.

After luncheon he shuts himself in his library. The whole afternoon, after an hour and a half in the Hellenic bath, is given up to his duties as prime minister.

It is rarely that he is not back again at night in the ministry to work with one or two exhausted secretaries in the empty, quiet building. Frequently one o'clock strikes before he is whirling home again to sleep the three or four hours which suffices to keep him at the top of his energy.

PASTOR STARTLES LONDON

Rev. Reginald J. Campbell is again the most-talked-of cleric in London. His denial of the "virgin birth," miracles, inspiration and other time-honored beliefs, fell like a bombshell among English churchmen.

At the age of 36 he took the pulpit of the City Temple, occupied for 20 years by the famous Dr. Joseph Parker, and his brilliant and eloqnent address, took his predecessor's place at a single bound. His opposition to the established church and advocacy of pastoral visiting and education bill have brought him frequently into prominence.

Dr. Campbell's latest bid for fame is his "new theology," which has made London gasp. He has been roundly denounced as a heretic and atheist. He is, said to have stripped religion of all romance, poetry and sentiment in order to get down to "brass tacks." His "compromise" with science, it is said, looks like complete surrender.

No protest has yet been made by Rev. Mr. Campbell's congregation. It is said, however, that he has gradually and logically led up to his present position during the three years that he has been pastor of the temple, and it is therefore predicted that there will be no serious disagreement.

Dr. Campbell's personal charm is said to be almost magical. In the pulpit he seems to fairly fascinate his audience. Whitish gray hair surmounts a handsome, mobile face. Wrinkles that melt into a gentle smile mark his countenance.

GIVES COSTLY GIFTS AT BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION

NEW YORK.—With gold and diamond sleeve buttons and pearl necklaces as souvenirs for his men and women friends, Nathaniel F. Moore, son of one of the chief owners of the Rock Island railroad system, gave a dinner the other night that cost in the neighborhood of $20,000, and takes rank with repasts that have gained attention in the past. It was in celebration of his birthday that young Mr. Moore made his friends his guests.

In spite of the spender of the gifts and the eleborateness of the menu, the dinner had an informal atmesphere, and in consenance with the wishes of their host the guests did not lay too great stress upon the conventions.

There were about 15 couples present when the dinner was begun after a visit of most of the party to a play-house in Broadway. Some were on the stage and joined the others after the performance. For the most part the men were intimate friends of Mr. Moore. The young women, with few exceptions, ere playing in theaters. The party was held in a private room in Rector's, and lasted until nearly five o'clock the next morning. Then automobiles took the diners to Church-Hill's, where coffee and liquors were served.

In addition to a full orchestra, several vaudsville numbers were provided for the entertainment of the gathering, many of whom had attended a similar dinner last year when Mr. Moore celebrated his birthday and the acquisition of a fortune said to have been nearly $750,000 from his father, James H. Moore, formerly of Chicago.

It was without ostentation that the favors were presented. Each guest found under his or her sarvietta a little leather box, in which the jewels lay. The necklaces consisted of single strands of unusually pure pearls, made up for Mr. Moore. It is said each cost about $1,000. Other favers, too, were presented to the women.

James H. Moore started the financial world net long ago when, with his brother, W. H. Moore, and Daniel G. Reid and William B. Leeds, he put through the Rock Island combination, merging 18,000 miles of railroad into one system. Only a few years ago the Moore brothers were heavily in debt, through the embarrassment of the Diamond Match company, and to-day they are rated as having millions.

THE RELATION OF HIGH FINANCE AND SOCIETY

EDWARD HARRIMAN did more than deprive Stuyvesant Fish of an income when he deposed that gentleman from the presidency of the Illinois Central railroad. He dealt a body blow at the social supremacy of Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, from which she has been devoting all her talents to recover herself.

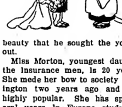
What is said to have been the conclusive test of Mrs. Fish's standing in the smart set came the other night, when she gave a dinner. Sixty persons were present, but not an Astor, not a Vanderbilt, not a Goelet, not a Rhinelander, not a Schermerhorn, not a Wilson. All of these stand in the front rank of New York's smart set, but they were not among the guests.

Edward H. Harriman himself is not socially inspiring. But he is intensely interested in having his daughters "break into" the "400." It was a simple enough matter. Stuyvesant Fish was president of the Illinois Central, in which Harriman was a director. Mrs. Fish was an undoubted leader in society. What more easy than to have Mrs. Fish take the Misses Harriman under her wing and bring them within the charmed circle?

But, Mrs. Fish flatly refused. She put her foot down hard and said that the Misses Harrimen must stay outside, so Harriman gave up the attempt in behalf of his daughters and bided his time. That came in November when he deposed Fish as president of the Illinois Central.

In the Illinois Central directorate are some men socially powerful in society circles. There are Cornelius Vanderbilt, John Jacob Astor and Robert Walton Goelet. It was through Mrs. Fish's influence that these three men were placed on the Illinois Central board. Mrs. Fish was excluded that they would be helpful to her socially.

When the fight in the Illinois Central came in November of lest year and Harriman decided that Fish must go, how did these friends of Mrs. Fish line up?



The three voted against Fish and for Harnhan. Harriman had a dis revenge and Mrs. Fish's social supremacy began to wane. Since then her stock has declined steadily.

Mrs. Fish's one great ambition, it is seid, has been to succeed Mrs. Astor as the leader of the "400."

The one thing that Mrs. Fish lacked was tact. Diplomecy is not one of her accomplishments. When she became confronted with the task of taking up the daughters of Harriman, who held her husband's fate in his hands, she blundered.

The Harrimans have been very active socially this season. Persons high in society have been hidden in the Harriman affairs and society has responded. At some of the recent affairs which were especially notable for the number of society leaders in attendance the name of Mrs. Fish was not included.

ROMANCE BEGUN at WHITE HOUSE ENDS AT ALTAR

MISS PAULINE MORTON, the second daughter of Paul Morton, president of the Equitable Life Assurance society and formerly secretary of the navy and vice president of the Santa Fe railroad, has become the bride of J. Hopkins Smith, Jr. The wedding took place at St. Thomas' church and was a notable incident both in social and diplomatic circles, for the guest list included many names of New York and Washington society.

Out of the formal acquaintance made in the brilliance and crush of a White House reception grew the romance that resulted in the marriege of Miss Morton to J. Hopkins Smith, Jr., Harvard graduate and society man. Though it was only a fleeting glimpse that Smith got of Miss Morton, he was so attracted by her vivacity and beauty that he sought the young girl out.

Miss Morton, youngest daughter of the insurance men, is 20 years old. She made her bow to society in Washington two years ago and became highly popular. She has spent several years in Europe studying languages, music and painting, and then had gone to one of Boston's fashionable schools. To that culture she joined a touch of western breeziness and a fondness for outdoor sports.

Mr. Smith, who was graduated from Harvard in 1896, won the German emperor's cup at the Kiel regatta the same year that he closed his studies. He is a member of an electrical engineering firm and is 25 years of age. Mr. Smith's father, a millionaire, lives at 17 East Forty-seventh street.

SPECIAL AGENTS ARE WELL SCORED

POWER OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT MEN LIMITED BY CONGRESS.

House Goes on Record—Restricts Use of $250,000 for Salaries—Investigation Ordered if President Are Severely Criticised.

Washington, Feb. 22.—The house in committee of the whole placed itself squarely on record Friday in favor of limiting the power of special agents of the department of the interior, by a vote restricting the use of the appropriation of $250,000 covered to pay sundry civil appropriation bill to pay the salaries of such agents.

By a vote of 104 to 17 the committee adopted the amendment, which was offered by Mr. Mondell of Wyoming, and chased for two hours by Messrs. Cushman of Washington, Lacey of Iowa, Mann of Illinois, Burke of South Dakota, Kreider of Kansas, Bonnago of Colorado, Groana of North Dakota, Steneerson of Minnesota, Gaines of Tennessee and Smith of Iowa.

During the debate the work of the special agents was severely condemned and the orders of the presidecat regarding final proof on homestead entries as working unnecessary hardships upon settlers.

Before resuming consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill the house, as in committee of the whole, passed 360 senate private pension bills in 20 minutes.

The sundry civil bill was still in the process of reading when the house adjourned at 6:45 p. m., and the consideration will be concluded Saturday.

For the Military Academy.

The senate at Friday night's session passed the bill making appropriations for the support of the military academy. The bill, carrying $1,947,363, was passed just as it came from the committee, only ten minutes being consumed in the consideration of the measure.

A discussion lasting throughout the entire day, to which was added a futile night session, failed to secure final action in the senate on the amendments to the agricultural appropriation bill proposing to make an increase of $1,000,000 in the item for the support of the forest reserve. Forceful speeches were made by Senators Burkett, Depew and Beveridge in defense of the work of Chief Forester Pinchot, and opposed to the extension of the forest service by Senator Heyburn, who went into the entire subject.

Grazing Lease to Go.

Woshington, Feb. 22.—It was concluded Thursday by senators in charge of the agricultural appropriation bill to the sooote that the grozing lease provision will be eliminated from the bill on a point of order.

The reading of the agricultural bill was completed after most of the day had been spent in debate on the forestry system and the measure will be considered Friday for final action. There is to be decided opposition, according to Senator Lodge, to several provisions relating to the bureau of chemistry of the department of agriculture, and these were passed over. An amendment was agreed to at the suggestion of Senator Nelson which will add $5,000 each year to the appropriation for agricultural colleges until the total amount for each state for these colleges shall be $50,000 annually, instead of $30,000, as at present.

Grazing Lease Opposed.

Senator Patterson has given notice of an amendment to section 24 of the reserve lands according to their adaptability as forest lands, mining lands and agricultural lands. After the defense of the forest reserve system by Senator Spooner, Scantor Patterson spoke in opposition to the proposed grozing lease proposition. Senator Warren, saying he was aware the provision would go out on a point of order, nevertheless advocated it. Senator Warren rather warmly resented the charge which he said had been made in the press and by one of the government departments that certain senators had feaced in public domain. Personnly, he said, he did not have an acre of illegally fenced lands.

The farewell address of George Washington will be read in the senate Friday by Senator Burkett of Nebraska.

Sundry Civil Bill in House.

Smarting under what they considered unfair treatment, the Democrats resorted to a systematic series of objections against provisions in the sundry civil bill Thursday in the house. They compelled the Republicans to maintain 100 members, a quorum of the committee of the whole. The house passed a number of bills and resolutions, including one calling upon the secretary of the navy for information regarding repairs being made on the battleship Louisiana, and as to whether the contractor had refused to make the repairs necessary, and another enlarging the act relating to shanghaiing. Both the rivers and harbors bill and the naval appropriation bill were sent to conference.

Tug Sinks with Four Men.

Cuxhaven, Germany, Feb. 22.—The tug Neufahrwasser, of Bremerhaven, went down Thursday after colliding with the German cruiser Medusa. The captain, the first mate, the second engineer and a fireman of the tug were drowned. Four of the crew were rescued.

Dubuque, Ia., Feb. 23.—A combination coach and a loaded coal car of a train on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul narrow gauge between Bellevue and Cascade jumped the rails at a curve on a trestle over a small stream near Washington Mills, and fell a distance of 40 feet, Friday, landing with the coal car on top of the coach in which were ten passengers. The coach was completely wrecked, and one passenger was killed, two fatally injured and seven seriously injured. Mrs. John Rohan, of Fillmore, Ia., was the one killed.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 23.—Thirteen persons were hurt, one probably fatally and four seriously, by a collision on the Chicago Great Western road about six miles south of Hayfield, Minn. The train which was wrecked was the Chicago bound night express, which left this city at 11:30 Thursday night. A freight train broke down and the passenger train ran, helping it on to a siding. A flagman who had been sent back returned before the train was stopped and crashed into the rear end of the passenger train. Every coach and the baggage car were overturned. No one was killed, but 15 were injured.

VAST SHIPMENT OF DYNAMITE.

Nine Hundred Thousand Pounds Going to Panama on One Ship.

Washington, Feb. 22.—Some idea of the enormity of the task which confronts the government in the matter of taking out dirt, rock and other material in the construction of the Panama canal may be gathered from the fact that starting the first 12 months there will be consumed $900,000 pounds of dynamite. The contract for this vast quantity of explosive will be let shortly, and when it is put aboard a vessel and sent to Colon it will form the largest shipment of that kind which ever left an American port.

In addition, there will go along with it 4,000 electric exploders, 4,000 tons of 70 pound rails, 2,500 steel splice bars, 22,500 tie plates, 90,000 pounds of track bolts, 200,000 pounds of track spikes and 150,000 cross ties. EVELYN NESBIT THAW UNDER CROSS-EXAMINATION BY DISTRICT ATTORNEY JEROME.

MRS. THAW VISITS HUSBAND IN PRISON

SHE WAS ALMOST MADE ILL BY THURSDAY'S ORDEAL ON THE STAND.

Much More of It to Come — Delmas Ready to Counteract Jerome's Work by Her Redirect Examination —Halds White's Letters.

New York, Feb. 23.—The principals in the Thaw trial spent Friday in such a way as apparently relishing the respite from the scenes which marked this week's proceedings. By the time the hearing is resumed next Monday morning it is expected that Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw will have entirely recovered her composure and be prepared again to take her place in the witness chair.

On Thursday it was said the young woman was on the verge of illness, and that a cup of broth had been her only sustenance for two days. She was so weakened as the result of her day's experience that she retired immediately upon reaching her apartments and did not arise until late Friday. The only reason which took her from her bed even then was the call she had promised to make upon her husband in the Tombs prison. Only family visitors are not allowed in the big gray building on holidays, but an exception was made with regard to Harry Thaw's wife and counsel.

Mrs. Thaw Visits Husband.

It was well after noon when Mrs. Thaw arrived at the prison. She was accompanied by Daniel O'Reilly, one of her husband's counsel, and was shown at once into the consultation room. There had been reports in some of the earlier editions of the papers to the effect that Thaw was himself in bad physical condition, but when he appeared to greet his wife he declared that he was feeling exceptionally well and was enjoying his usual vigorous health. As Thaw rushed into the conference room he clasped his wife in his arms, crying "My dear, brave little wife." The two talked together for a long while, and then Mr. O'Reilly was called into conference.

Mrs. Thaw was pale and worn, but when approached by newspaper men smiled and tried to appear cheerful in reply to questions she said she was "feeling pretty well."

District Attorney Jerome went to Lake Ville, Conn., to spend the holiday recess with his family. Nearly all of Thaw's counsel remained at their homes.

Days More of Her Ordeal.

The district attorney will keep Mrs. Thaw on the stand at least a day and a half more and may even stretch his searching cross-examination through twice that length of time. It will depend on how Mrs. Thaw stands at the end of this period as to whether or not Thaw's counsel will go ahead with their redirect examination. Mr. Delmes has been making copious notes during Mr. Jerome's questioning of the witness, and he will likely endeavor to place a different light upon some of the incidents which have been disclosed.

With the cross-examination only half completed and with the redirect and recross-examination still in view, there seems no way to approximate the number of days in the witness chair Mrs. Thaw has before her. If she is much fatigued at the end of Mr. Jerome's first cross-examination she may be released for a time, subject to recall. In view of the fact, however, that the defense probably forced the district attorney to proceed with the cross-examination against his will, he will very likely insist in return that they shall also conclude with the witness before she is excused from the stand.

May Be a New Surprise.

Mrs. Thaw on direct examination identified 42 letters as being in the handwriting of Stanford White. The letters were not written to her, but to another girl. Mr. Delmas is holding these letters for introduction during the redirect examination and evidently hopes to have them admitted as offsetting something Mr. Jerome was expected to bring out on cross-examination.

No intimation has been given as to what the letters contain or to whom they were written. They may constitute a new element of surprise which is yet to be injected into a case which has already been so prolific of astounding incidents.

Jerome's Ruthless Probing.

New York, Feb. 22.—Under the stress of a cross-examination in which District Attorney Jerome gave no quarter, Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw broke down Thursday upon the witness stand. With blinding tears burning their wey down cheeks which from ashen white had flushed to crimson, she admitted that after her first experience with Stanford White her relations with the architect continued for several months.

But this was not all. There were other confessions, which, while designed to lay on own character, accentuated all the more the terrible personal sacrifice she is making in the effort to save her husband from death in the electric chair. The case has progressed to the point where the defense has been all but lost sight of. His girl-like wife is the figure about whom the storm bathes its fury. She it is upon whom is being searched out and who is being held up to scorn by the prosecuting officer.

At the close of the most eventful day of the trial Mr. Jerome announced that he probably would keep Mrs. Thaw under fire for two more days.

Adjournment was taken until Monday morning, although at one time Justice Fitzgerald said that to accommodate out-of-town witnesses he would hold court both Friday, a holiday, and Saturday.

Examination is Merciless.

There was no subject affecting the witness of so intimate a nature that the district attorney hesitated to bare it to the jury, the hiding place and hold it before the gaze of the world, all the while requiring that she should recognize and own the fact in her own words.

After bringing out that her relations with White continued for somo time, Mr. Jerome went deeper. Mrs. Thaw admitted that in 1903, after the return from Europe, she spent the night at Thaw's apartments in New York and that a few weeks later he and she occupied connecting apartments at the Grand hotel in this city.

Champagne Not Drugged.

Mrs. Thaw admitted freely that the champagne which she had declared Thaw drugged the night she lost consciousness in the mirrored bedroom was no more bitter than any other champagne she had drunk. In fact, she declared it tasted like all the rest. She denied that she had intended for the jury to assume otherwise.

Mrs. Thaw made whet was considered perhaps her most damaging statement in the defensive when she said he had showed 'her copies of cablegrams that were being sent to Stanford White from Europe asking him to use his influence with a certain man in London to prevent Mrs. Nesbit from "taking a fuss," and interfering with Evelyn's continuing in the company of Thaw.

Mrs. Thaw also was forced to admit that when she and her mother went abroad with Thaw in 1903 they were still drawing upon the bounty of Stanford White. She declared that she had a letter of credit for $400 or $500 which was given to her by White and which she later turned over to Thaw. There was still a balance in the Mercantile Trust company to her order, also.

"But mamma got all of that," said the witness.

SURVIVORS CLUNG TO STEAMER WRECK

ELEVEN PERSONS ARE RESCUED FROM THE BERLIN AT THE HOOK OF HOLLAND.

Pass a Terrible Night—Prince Consort Supervises the Efforts of Life Savers—Crowds Cheer Those Brought Safely Ashore.

Hook of Holland, Feb. 23.—Eleven survivors of the disaster to the steamer Berlin, from Harwich to Rotterdam, which was wrecked off the Hook of Holland Thursday morning, who could be seen clinging to the aft part of the steamer all night, were saved Friday afternoon. The efforts to rescue them were continued throughout the night and morning, but proved futile before 3:30 owing to the furious seas and the heavy snowstorm which raged all night long, rendering it impossible for the tugs or lifeboats to approach the wreck, over which mountainous seas continued to dash.

So intense was the cold that it was believed that those who were still on the wreckage must have been frozen to death, but the rescued persons survived the terrible experiences of the 24 hours. The stern of the Berlin is so firmly imbedded in the sand bank on which she went ashore that it does not seem to have moved during the night. At high water Friday morning the poop deck houses were the only portions of the steamer visible, and there the few survivors huddled.

Must Be Saved, Said Prince.

The prince consort, after his first visit to the wreck when he saw with his own eyes that there were still some survivors on board, declared:

"We won't return to The Hague before we save them; we must get them ashore."

The news that this determination had been fulfilled reached the crowds in the streets in the shape of a rumor shortly before three o'clock in the afternoon, and a pilot later confirmed the tidings. There was then a wild rush of the people to the various points of vantage overlooking the harbor.

In the meantime, every preparation was being made at the harbor to take care of the individuals rescued. Six ambulances, including that belonging to the prince consort, were drawn up in readiness to convey the survivors to the Amerika hotel, where a staff of medical men, especially summoned, was waiting to give succor.

The small lifeboat was the first to reach the harbor and Capt. Jansen, its skipper, received round upon round of applause as he came ashore. He reported that two women and a child, who had refused to jump, were still aboard the stern part of the Berlin.

Cheers Are Hushed.

Capt. Jansen had been told his story when the steam pilot boat, the Helvoetsluis, with the rescued on board drew in sight. As she was moored the ringing cheer of the assembled crowd was succeeded by a painful hush as the first of the survivors was borne ashore on a stretcher by six stalwart Dutchmen and slowly carried up the steps to one of the waiting motor cars. The men was swathed in blankets and made no sign of life.

A steward was the next man to be brought ashore. He was quite cheerful, and showed no signs of pain in reply to the inquiries: "My name is Fisher." He seems to have stood the terrible ordeal better than any of them. Then came a woman, her face covered with a blanket, but her long dark hair streaming over her left shoulder, and a terribly frostbitten hand hanging limply over the side of the stretcher.

Eventually the survivors so narrowly snatched from death were removed to the Amerika hotel.

Only eleven of the three hundred and more who left on the wreck are saved, as is unlikely, the number of victims of the disaster will be 132.

FAST TRAIN IS WRECKED.

Cars Hurled into River—Many Hurt, None Killed.

Altoona, Pa., Feb. 23.—The 18-hour flyer, known as the Pennsylvania limited, crashed into a freight train at midnight about five miles east of Johnstown. The train was composed of a combination baggage and mail car and two sleepers. The accident occurred on a sharp curve. The locomotive and combination car remained on the roadbed, but the three cars following plunged into the south fork branch of the Conemaugh river.

When the train left this city there were only 54 passengers on board. The first train-master who came upon the scene of the wreck, hearing all available help and relief preparations are now being made to dispatch a relief train from this city.

Philadelphia, Feb. 23, 2:30 a. m.—A dispatch just received in this city states that no one was killed in the wreck of the 18-hour flyer. Eight of the injured were taken to Altoona and several were taken to Johnstown. Many of the injured, it is said, are seriously hurt.

HARDSHIPS OF ARMY LIFE.

Laft Thousands of Veterans with Kidney Troubles.

The experience of David W. Martin, a retired merchent of Bolivar, Mo., is but one thousands of others. Mr. Martin says: "I think I have had kidney disease ever since the war. During an engagement my horse fell on me, straining my back and injuring the kidneys. I have been told I had a floating kidney. I had intensely pain in the back, headeches and dizzy spells and the action of the bladder was very irregular. About three years ago I tried Doan's Kidney Pills, and found such great relief that I continued, and inside a comparatively short time was entirely rid of kidney trouble."

The tenth down the bicycle foot, the clergyman's sore throat and all manner of disabilities that come from modern conveniences are familiar to us. The motor-omnibus voice was discovered by a young woman who was riding outside a motor-omnibus, and trying (as is her habit) to talk. And the horrible truth suddenly flashed on her mind, and from her lips came "I-c-c-can't keep-pip-pip my voice sut-tut-till."—The Reader.

SOME POINTS ABOUT NEEDLES.

The Evolved Product of Centuries of Invention.

The point of a needle is a very important part of that useful little instrument, and there are many points about needles calculated to interest the observer. The daily consumption of needles all over the world is something like 5,000,000, and in the United States alone, less and use some 300,000,000 of those tiny tools. Few people while threading a needle have ever given a thought to the various processes through which the eye and point before it comes out a needle. Yet the manufacture of needles involves no fewer than 21 different processes from cutting the wire and threading the double needles by the eyes to separate them. The needle is the one length of wire, beading, hardening in oil, cleaning out the sides of the eye, tempering, grinding and polishing. For wrapping purple paper is used, since it prevents rusting. There are many sorts of needles, for savageens', cooks', glovemakers', weavers', sailmakers', broommakers', milliners' and embroiderers'. The needle is the evolved product of centuries of invention. In its primitive form it was made of bone, horn or wood. Point by point its menufacture has improved, until this little but not insignificant instrument is now one of the highly-finished products of twentieth century machinery and skill.—Zion's Herald.

A FRIEND'S TIP.

70-Year-Old Man Not too Old to Accept a Good Pointer.

"For the last 20 years," writes a Maine man, "I've been troubled with Dyspepsia and liver complaint, and have tried about every kind of remedy without much in the way of results until I took up the food question.

"I had used several seasons of Grape-Nuts food, after I had taken all sorts of medicines with only occasional, temporary relief.

"This was about nine months ago, and I began the Grape-Nuts for breakfast, with cream and a little sugar. Since then I have had the food for at least one meal a day, usually for breakfast.

"Words fail to express the benefit I received from the use of Grape-Nuts. I have gained in almost every way, free from pain and my liver complaint in about cured, I have gained flesh, sleep well can eat nearly any kind of food except greasy, starchy things and am strong and healthy at the age of 70 years.

Interesting Items Gathered in the Gopher State

Fangs Are Not Drawn.

St. Paul—"Sam" Fullerton is not a dead one yet, and certain dealers in contraband game who held a banquet recently in St. Paul to rejoice over the game protector's downfall find that their jubilation was premature. Mr. Fullerton is no longer executive agent but he has been retained by the game and fish commission with the title of "superintendent of fisheries." He will have charge of the St. Paul and Glenwood fish hatcheries, will superintend the taking of fish eggs and fry, and will assist in the executive department when needed. This means that during the duck and chicken season Fullerton will be just as perniciously active as ever.

The new commission organized as follows: O. J. Johnson of Glenwood, was elected president; J. H. Grill of Sherburne, vice-president; Robert H. Hanna of Fergus Falls, secretary, and Carlos Avery of Hutchinson, executive agent. The commission settled the disputed claim of Tanner Brothers for fish ponds at the Glenwood hatchery on the basis of $1,300.

Taxes.

St Paul—The abstract of tax lists of all counties of Minnesota, just issued by State Auditor Iverson, shows that the average rate of taxation in Minnesota has fallen from 26.20 mills in 1905, to 25.60 mills in 1906.

The total amount of taxes paid by the people of Minnesota for all purposes, state, county, city, village and school districts, amounts to $23,472,577.06, an increase of over $1,100,000 over the previous year.

The rate of taxation in Hennepin county is 25.33 mills, slightly below the average in the state. Hennepin's total taxes amount to $5,253,264.75, nearly one-fourth of all taxes paid in the state.

The total value of all property in Minnesota for taxation purposes is $917,617,413, compared to $853,033,535 in 1905. Of the total amount personal property constitutes $163,432,357.

City and village taxes show a substantial increase throughout. The taxes for state revenue purposes have decreased from $1,538,801 in 1905 to $1,421,387 in 1906.

Kieth, first vice-president, Mrs. Ed. McGrath of St. Peter, second vice-president; E. C. Willard, treasurer; J. W. Kollman, secretary; C. H. Kieth, superintendent.

Totes Dog to St. Paul.

Moorhead—A man who claims to be traveling from Havre, Mont., to St. Paul, was picked up and brought to this city by a Great Northern section crew. The man, who says his name is Hawley, was found about two miles southeast of Moorhead. He was walking along the tracks and carried a dead dog over his shoulder. He wanted to sell the carcass for $200, but insisted that he must keep the skin, which he had to take to St. Paul. He is being held pending an inquiry as to his sanity.

Fire at Kasota.

Mankato—Kasota was visited by one of the worst fires in its history. Babcock & Buell's three two-story brick store buildings burned to the ground with their entire contents. They were occupied by M. A. Ostrander, who conducted a general merchandise store in one, a dry goods store in the second and a hardware store in the third. The loss on the buildings is about $12,000, only one-third covered by insurance, and the loss to the stock is $20,000, one-half covered by insurance.

Is Given 35 Years.

Minneapolis—Thirty-five years of imprisonment at the state penitentiary is the penalty imposed by Judge Simpson upon John Wilson, recently convicted in the Hennepin county court of the crime of highway robbery. The reason for the heavy sentence lies in the fact that Wilson has been convicted of similar crimes three times before.

News Notes.

Mankato—The public school at Cleveland is closed for two weeks on account of an epidemic of measles.

Milaca—John Hanks, an Indian, was found dead in the road near Page. Coroner Bacon decided that the man had been frozen to death. Several bottles of whisky were found on the body, and it is supposed that the Indian had become intoxicated and lay down in the road to sleep and was frozen to death.

Fierce Drive.

McIntosh.—Driving thirty miles through deep snow, the journey occupying three days, with a sick child in her arms for the entire distance, Mrs. Albert Oefstos aptly illustrated the pluck and hardihood of Minnesota women. Mrs. Oefstos lives on a claim near Lillo, and this winter her husband has been working in the woods, leaving his wife and child alone. Two weeks ago the little one was taken violently ill with croup, and then came a fight for its life. The mother treated the little one with such home remedies as she had, but finding that the disease did not yield, she determined to bring it here to a doctor. She harnessed a horse to a cutter and wrapping herself and the little one as warmly as possible and taking along a supply of cooked food, started on the thirty-mile drive. So deep was the snow that not more than ten miles a day could be accomplished. The nights were spent with friendly settlers, and with the first break of dawn the anxious mother again started on her quest for relief for the child. The journey ended and the mother felt well repaid for her hardships by the recovery of the child.

Wound Likely to Kill.

Browns Valley.—Ole Aspesletten was shot here with a 32 calibre revolver in the hands of Peter Branden, a well-known farmer, living over the line in Roberts county, South Dakota. The shooting is supposed to have been accidental, although Branden is being held to see if the result proves fatal. Aspesletten is still alive, but the doctors say his chances for recovery are small. Four ragged holes in his intestines mark the path of the bullet. He is 24 years old and came from Norway a year ago. The men had been fishing and indulged in alcohol. Careless handling of a loaded revolver is given as the cause of the affair, although there is rumor of a previous quarrel.

Log Kills "Top-Loader."

Tower—Axel Anderson, a woodsman, 23 years old, while engaged in "top-loading" at a lumber camp near here, was instantly killed. While the logs were being hoisted to the top of the load, one of them broke loose and dropped back. Anderson was struck on the head and was instantly killed.

Fire at State Park.

Mankato—The residence and store of J. B. Hodge, the Omaha railway agent and superintendent of the new state park at Minneopa, burned to the ground there, entailing a loss of nearly $3,000. He carried $1,900 insurance. Mr. Hodge and his family barely escaped with their lives, and were unable to save even their clothing.

Jasper's Mill Burned.

Pipestone—A destructive fire visited Jasper, the flour mill at that place being entirely consumed. The manager and all employed were at supper, and the origin of the fire is a mystery. The total loss is estimated at from $10,000 to $12,000, which is only partly covered by insurance. Flour, feed and wheat were destroyed.

The little girl was alone in the house, and out of curiosity picked up a dynamite cap which her father had made for using in some blasting that he intended to do. While she was examining it the cap exploded, tearing a hole through her hand.

Faribault.—Wolves in this county are more numerous than in former years and many are being shot. It is reported that a hunter shot a large timber wolf inside of the city limits the other day. A woman living on the outskirts of the city a few evenings ago heard a disturbance in her hen house, and upon investigation she found a wolf trying to get at her poultry. She attempted to chase the beast away, but it showed fight. When she returned with help, the animal had disappeared.

Mankato.—Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Barnes, well known residents of Vernon Center, celebrated the fiftieth birthday anniversary of their wedding a day or so ago. Eighty of their old friends and neighbors from Vernon Center, Lake Crystal and vicinity assembled to do them honor, and a bountiful luncheon was served. MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 19—Can the state of Minnesota afford to appropriate $10,000 for the purchase of a silver service for the new battleship Minnesota? This question was debated for an hour in the senate this morning, the subject coming up when the bill of Senator J. F. Calhoun of Minneapolis to purchase the silver service, was considered in committee of the whole. Ole O. Sageng of Otter Tail objected to the whole proposition. Ole is the lone populist in the legislature and has been objecting a great deal of late to important republican measures. He though the appropriation a waste of money. If Minnesota must give a silver service, in his opinion, residents of the state who are in the habit of using silver service every day should chip in and buy the stuff for the battleship; it should not be shoved on the poor taxpayers of the state.

Senator Calhoun objected. "If the legislature and people of this state have grown so parsimonious," he said, "that their patriotism is all down in the cellar, then don't vote for this bill. But I don't think they have." The bill was finally referred to the finance committee to take action on placing the money needed on the general appropriation bill.

But one bill of much importance put in an appearance in the senate. It was by Senator Dar Hall, and provides for the establishment of a state hospital for criminal insane, to be located by the state board of control either at the state prison or in connection with some state asylum. The measure carries an appropriation of $50,000.

This afternoon the Senate railroad commission gave the railroad men a final hearing on pending legislation affecting the roads, then held an executive session after which the Peterson anti-pass bill, prohibiting passes, and the Peterson two cent railroad bill were reported out for passage.

In the house today, the W. A. Nolan reciprocal demurrage bill, materially amended, was reported out by the special committee of five having it in hand, and made a special order for consideration of the house Wednesday afternoon. One of the amendments provides that half of the penalty demanded of roads for failure to supply cars demanded, shall be paid to the state instead of all of it to the shipper who suffers. The penalty is changed to comply with a special schedule according to the number of cars ordered by one party and the length of time that party is made to wait.

George W. Rodenburg of St. Paul today introduced a bill providing for a constitutional amendment to exempt from taxation bonds of counties school districts, towns and cities.

The house adopted a resolution by W. L. Case of Cloquet calling for an investigation by a special committee of the feasibility of adopting a plan of indeterminate sentences for punishment of crime in Minnesota.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 20—The house today passed the reciprocal demurrage bill, by W. A. Nolan of Grand Meadow, by a vote of 113 to 1. The one lone man to vote against it was Thomas Brady of St. Paul, who comes from the district in which the head offices of the various railroads are located. There were one or two minor amendments adopted. Though a large number of changes were suggested by Ambrose Tighe of St. Paul, the house was not in a mood to make them. Several lawyers among the members doubted if the bill in its present form is constitutional, but the house passed this question up to the senate. The most important change in the bill compared to its original form is that half the demurrage which the railroads have to pay in default of supplying cars, goes into the treasury of the town where the cars are demanded, and but half to would-be shipper who suffers. The bill was considered as a special order today, and when it came to a vote everybody voted for it in view of the general demand that has gone up from the public for the measure.

Another important action today on the subject of railroad legislation, was the reporting into the senate by its railroad committee of two bills by Senator Peterson of Owatonna. One calls for prohibition of all passes, and the other makes two cents per mile the maximum charge which may be made for carrying passengers in Minnesota. The committee recommended both bills to pass. On the reading of the report, the senate burst into applause. Senator Peterson requested that both bills be made a special order for the following afternoon. Considerable debate followed, the discussion showing that two senate committees are going on junketing trips tomorrow. It was finally decided for this reason, to hold the special order over until next Tuesday afternoon. Both the Peterson bills seem sure to pass.

The senate listened to an eloquent address today by Senator J. M. Hackney of Hamline who took opportunity to explain his bill for a semi-centennial exposition in 1908, the state's anniversary of admission into the Union. The bill was reported in for passage by the state fair committee. Senator Hackney explained that the the bill asks for $1,000,000 for the exposition, not one cent is really to be appropriated. The plan is to raise the entire sum by selling certificates of indebtedness, which are to be paid off by proceeds of the exposition, and future state fairs. He further stated that the bill calls for $850,000 to be invested in permanent improvements, new main building, new grand-stand, new sewer and lighting system, etc., which improvements will have to be made very soon anyway for future state fairs, whether or not the exposition is held.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 21—Senate and house both received the bill to establish a farm implement plant at the state prison from respective committees today, and in spite of strenuous objections from certain members, passed the bill under suspension of the rules. It now but awaits the signature of the governor to become a law.

The argument used in both houses for the bill was that the establishment of the plant would give a "knock-out" blow to the farm machinery trust so far as Minnesota is concerned, and save the farmers of the state annually thousands of dollars.

In the senate the bill came up in commitee of the whole with Senator Peterson of Owatonna in the chair. Senator Geo. P. Wilson of Minneapolis presented two amendments. The first demanded that the board of control instead of establishing a plant, simply investigate its feasibility and report to the next legislature. This was voted down after a long debate. He then presented an amendment limiting the amount that could be spent for machinery to $5,000, the amount for material to $26,000, limiting the output and providing that the quality of the machines must be approved by the dean of the agricultural school. This resolution went to its death without any debate. The bill was than reported for passage by committee of the whole, and a little later, on a motion to suspend the rules by its author, Senator Sullivan of Stillwater, passed 37 to 9.

During the discussion Senator J. F. Calhoun of Minneapolis made a charge that the bill was simply a plan to foster an old "dead" machinery plant at Stillwater on the state. This was sharply denied by Senator Sullivan. Senator Ole O. Sageng of Otter Tall, in a speech favoring the bill, charged that the cities were lining up against the country to defeat the measure and made an insinuation that the country would get back by trying to defeat the exposition bill.

In the house, the Zelch bill was the duplicate of the Sullivan measure, was passed in less than thirty minutes after it came up for discussion. R. J. Wells, A. J. Rockne, and John Zelch are the men who were prominent in working it through the house today and insisting it be put to a vote.

In addition, the house today has to its credit the passage of the railroad committee 2-cent fare bill. Though passed under the name of the committee, the bill is really the Burdette Thayer measure. There was some talk of making the bill a special order.

"There's no need to select a day to act. We are ready to put it on passage now," was the cry of S. J. Wells. The house took him in good faith. The bill passed with 115 votes in its favor, and but one, that of W. L. Hollester of Austin against it.

The senate committee on public health today recommended the Sundberg anti-cigarot bill for passage. The senate agricultural committee recommended the bill to appropriate money for seed grain loans to farmers, for passage with an amendment cutting down the appropriation from $70,000 to $25,000.

In the Senate, Dar Hall introduced a bill to repeal the corrupt practice act, which requiring filing of expense accounts by political candidates. Frank Clague introduced three bills aimed at abolishing the special board of directors for the state public school at Owatonna, and the trustees for the institutions for defectives at Faribault, leaving them entirely under the board of control.

In the house, Representative Jefferson introduced a bill all ore docks to be public docks in charge of the railroad commission. Representative Libbey presented a bill to compel railroads to employ only competent engineers. Adjourned till Monday.

Hogs Attack Farmer.

Mankato—William Woodburn, an Independence farmer, aged 71 years, was attacked and probably fatally injured by a vicious hog, but his faithful collie dog saved him from being killed outright. Woodburn was alone on the farm at the time, but his cries of pain and fright brought the dog to his rescue. The collie fought off the hog and killed it, and then stood guard over his master for two hours, when human help arrived.

Car Breaks in Two

Faribault—An expensive mash-up occurred at the coal docks of the Chicago Great Western railway in Kenyon while a freight train crew were putting up coal cars on the trestle. One car was shoved over the bumper and broke in two, the forward part of the car falling to the ground, while the other part remained on the trestle. Several other cars were also derailed upon the trestle. A wrecking crew soon cleared the track. No one was injured.

First Aid Outfit

St. Paul—The state labor department is sending out one thousand outfits for mills, workshops and other factories throughout the state to be used for giving "first aid to the injured." Each case sent out contains an anatomical chart, bandages absorbent cotton, olive oil and limewater, bichloride of mercury tablets, ammonia and adhesive plaster. It also contains the Red Cross rules for aiding victims of accidents. The will be a great protection for the workers of the state.

SHORT LESSONS IN MODERN ETIQUETTE.

In making love to another man's wife it is no longer good form to do it secretly. It is quite proper now to go to the man and advise him beforehand of your action. Thus there will be no misunderstanding and nothing to fear. You will be doing the manly thing. The man himself will be pleased. And his wife will be grateful to both of you.

To eat asparagus gracefully take lessons from some good sword swallower. Raise the stalk in your right hand very slowly until your audience is with you, then lean back your head, open your mouth to its fullest extent and push the stalk down as far as it will go. Then remove it with a nail-puller.

When the friend you are calling on in the evening offers you a cigar, and you light it and discover at the first puff that it is made up of equal parts of cabbage and oakum, it is no longer correct to tell him it is one of the best you have ever smoked. Instead of this, first throw it out of the window calmly before his face, and then throw him after it. Unless his nature is too hardened, he will understand and treat you better next time.

If you are paying for a pew in church and find it already occupied just because you were late on account of your wife not being able to fit her hat on, leave the church quietly and without fuss—only saving the time after you are once out for praise and thanksgiving over the fact that a woman's hat is, after all, of some use. —Tom Masson, in Judge.

Been There Before.

Guest (at Mrs. De Fashion's musicale)—Mercy! What are all these washboilers and flatirons and things in the parlor for?

Mrs. De Fashion (helplessly)—I had to get them. The leader of the orchestra came here at the last minute and refused to play unless I furnished those things for the anvil chorus. He said he was bound to have one selection heard above the conversation.—N. Y. Weekly.

Peculiarly Unfortunate.

"Darn that bore!" exclaimed Sallery, after the caller had gone. "I was just beginning to write an article when he came in and began to talk, and he made me lose my train of thought."

"That's too bad," said Spacer, who was hammering away on a typewriting machine at the next desk. "Your next train, you know, may not come along for a week."—Chicago Tribune.

The Most Audible Dialogue.

"The theater is not so entertaining as it might be," said one critical person.

"No," answered the other, "it would be much better if box-parties would arrange to have playwrights prepare their conversation instead of trying to make it up as they go along."—Washington Star.

He Loaned Money to Papa.

She—Have you ever loaned papa any money?

He—Once or twice.

She—That must be the reason he has forbidden me to marry you. He says anybody that parts with his money as easily as you do will end in the poorhouse.—Judge.

That they'd best be put behind us,

If the 2 cent millage bill should fail to pass at this session of the legislature, it would be advisable for the members to return to their homes in the dark of the moon, and sneak up the back alley, for the people willbe "laying" in wait for them with a stuffed club.

North Da'kotains are begining to pass resolutions that it has not been very cold and stormy this winter, but they had better fill up the coal bin and not raise false hopes. We were thinking of drawing up a set of resolutions to the affect that it had been nice and warm in this part of Minnesota this winter but were affraid we could not get any one to sign them, until they were sure spring had come.

There is very little prospect of this session of the legislature being a short one, and it will undoubtly run to the limit and stop the clock. It any bill fail to pass for lack of time it will undoubtly be those that the people want passed in fact. It begins to look now as if the sanate would not reach the 2 cent millage law, as they have so much other buasiness on hand don't cher no.

Congressman Steenerson spoke in the House Tuesday in support of his amendments to decrease the rate of compensation allowed railroads for carrying the mails. For several years he has opposed the present rates, but was never able to secure sufficient backing. Last season when he fought the subsidy for the Southern railroad fast mail he was defeated by a single vote. But at last the waves of reform have overtaken the railway mail pay, and it looks as if Steenerson would win his great fight.—Norman County Index.

What Puzzled Her.

A woman whose religious education had been received in the plain edifice erected by an unassuming New England congregation was persuaded, much against her will, to attend divine service in one of New York's most showy churches. She showed from the start that, notwithstanding her puritanical training, she was interested in the proceedings. She studied the elaborate ceremony, the architecture, the richly tinted windows, and the altar decorations closely. By and by her eyes became fixed on the ceiling. Her friend wondered what particular feature of those lofty heights held her attention for so long a time. During a lull in the chanting of the choir she tried to find out.

"Oh," said the New England woman in tones of infinite concern, "I was just wondering how on earth they get away up there to dust the rafters!" —New York Post.

What Is "All Wool?"

I have met a county magnate, a wealthy man who would not be put off with anything but the best, if he knew it, clad in a handsome "homespun" suit, the delicate blue gray mixture of which I happened to know was produced by the judicious blending of old blue stockings, such as navvies wear with old white stockings. I have seen a "society" lady in a stylish "blanket tweed" motor coat, the composition of which I knew to be of such a nature that it might very easily owe its existence in part to the cast-off hosiery of her own scullery maid, collected [illegible] the judge trying a case of "misrepresentation of goods" may, as likely as not, be unconsciously sitting in somebody else's thrown away rags that he has bought for "all wool."—A Woolen Manufacturer in Grand Magazine.

Snow and Rain.

The first man to whom it ever occurred to find out how much rain was represented by a given fall of snow was Alexander Brice of Kirknewton, who in March, 1765, made a simple experiment with the contents of a stone jug driven face downward into over six inches of snow. What he learned was that a greater or less degree of cold or of wind when the snow falls and its "lying a longer or shorter time on the ground" will occasion a difference in the weight and in the quantity of water produced, "but if," he added, "I may trust to the above trials, which I endeavored to perform with care, snow newly fallen, with a moderate gale of wind, freezing cold, will produce a quantity of water equal to one-tenth part of its bulk." So that a fall of snow of ten inches represents a rainfall of one inch.—London Chronicle.

His Modest Claim.

A claim for damages against a railroad company is so often a license for exorbitant charges that a simple bill, such as was received by an American railroad company many years ago, even apart from its humorous aspect, is refreshing. It ran as follows:

The — and — Railroad company to John Smith, Dr,

July 19, 1837.—To running your Locomotive into my wife: as per Doctor's bill for curing her	$10.00
To smashing her box and spilling her hat	3.87
To upsetting my dear born (wagon) and breaking it	35.00
To hurting me	5.00
	$53.87

There is authority for stating that the claim was paid immediately. —Scrap Book.

Her Chilly Retort.

The late Dr. — of Malden, after pouring forth the story of his undying love in the most touching manner for over an hour to a young woman who he hoped would become his fourth wife, was refused the second time. He started for the door; but, looking around, he said in a most thunderous tone, "By heavens, you are the coldest woman I ever saw!"

The young woman looked up and answered sweetly:

"Oh, no, doctor; you have seen three colder than I!"—Boston Herald.

A Curious Notice.

This curious official notice was once published in Germany: "At the request of Herr Wilhelm Leigson of Innsbruck the seaman, Johan Leigson, who was drowned in May, 1860, on a journey from Stockholm to Hamburg in the Kaiser Friedrich, is hereby called upon by the courts to appear and report himself on or before April 1, 1881, under pain of being declared dead."

Financial Note.

Jerrold—Could you pay me that 10 shillings you owe me? I owe Johnson some money and want to pay him.
Hobart—Well, I'll tell you what. You pay Johnson what you owe him, and then I'll borrow 10 shillings off Johnson and pay you.

How Woxall Was Named.

Near Schwenksville, Pa., is a village that bears the name of Woxall. This wonderful name was the result of an error upon the part of the postoffice department in Washington. The place was known many years ago as "Croppestettel," or "Crowtown," and later as Mechanicsville, but when a postoffice was established there in 1888 neither of these names was satisfactory, and it was decided to choose a new cognomen. Many were the suggestions submitted to the postoffice department, but all were found to be too nearly like the name of some other postoffice to be acceptable. One day the village storekeeper saw the word "Noxall" upon a piece of calico and called the attention of several friends to it. At once all agreed that "Noxall" would be a fine name for their town. So the postoffice authorities were notified. Soon a letter came from Washington approving the name that had been chosen, but in the letter it was spelled "Woxall." So Woxall became the name of the village.—Philadelphia Record.

Too Serious.

While a great many persons probably take themselves too seriously, entertaining an altogether exaggerated opinion of their ability and worth, not many nowadays go to the extreme length of the German whom the English poet Coleridge met at Frankfort. He always took off his hat when he ventured to speak of himself. Were this practice to become general what a number of people would be permanently bareheaded!

Some time ago it was stated to us that a certain party living in our town, (of Deer Park) got on his ear because he did not have any personal taxes to pay. He even felt so bad about it, that he wanted to put the assessor into trouble, thinking this would be the means of making a hero of himself on a new plan, and thus gain the confidence of the rest of the tax payers. But somehow he started his game "in the wrong of the moon and it did not get time to hatch." For the information of the tax payers of our town we took a shot at the bravery and this is what we got.

Dear Sir;

B H Costello was assessed $16 by your assessor, the county board raised it to $18 and the state board to $50. Mrs. B H Costello was assessed for $48 by your assessor, the county board raised to $60 and the state board to $76 taking off the exemption from each and neither one is paying any taxes If Mr Costello is not assessed a fit is because he didn't have much property listed, being levided between B H Costello and Mrs. B H. Costello Hoping his explains matters as stated I remain, Yours Truly Fortunately we have got on Mr. Costello at this time in our town: Just think of how it would be if the rest of our taxpayers should follow Mr. Costello's example and let our wife help us "skin" our town and the county out of our shares of the taxes and then go "blatherround wanting to put our asses or into trouble, and to top the thing off, Mr. Costello stated to a certain party, that he would have had at least eight dollar per day according to the receipt he received from the assessor (viz: $40.00 as assessment as stated in the County auditors letter) How many mills would that be on the dollar? Will someone please answer this in a hurry However we are sorry that we was obliged to publish this explanation but we done this to satisfy our tax payers of the fact.

UMBRELLA AND SHOES.

Their Importance in the Eyes of the Indian Native.

India is so vast that different etiquettes prevail in different districts. We have no standard etiquette, no Bengalese, speaks in English for a few minutes and then breaks forth into the vernacular. We shake hands with a European on parting, but by mistake again touch the hand to the brow in a salaam, so we both shake hands, salaam and do the like, and no sober minded European ever cured for the assembly.

The umbrella is the emblem of royalty, the sign of a rajah, so natives generally fold their umbrellas before a rajah and not before anybody else, however great. It is not a part of the dress, but a protection from the rain or sun a necessary appendage, just like the watch and chain. You might as well ask a European to take off his waterproof coat. A cooly is not bound to fold his umbrella when a befriender reared rides past. But a man of generally closes down his umbrella in seeing, his master, whom he considers his king. But no Indian, however humble ought to fold up the umbrella, even before a rajah if he be master he is neither the master of the humble peasantry nor the servant or officer, nor is he bound to salaam him. But if he does, no harm. In a word, natives generally fold the umbrella before a master or a superior officer and not any other citizen, however great, and this is no insult.

While going to see a native chief in his palace the native visitor or official takes off his shoes if the reception room has a carpet and the rajah is sitting on his musnud. But if he is received in the drawing room, furnished after the European style, the shoes are allowed. In some states no natives can go to a rajah without a present. In others the purree is taken off and loosed at the feet of a rajah.

It is different in a European from the Hindoo point of view in order a native to take off his shoes. This is what we see our price to do, so that we may touch the dust of his feet. A mussulman when mildly rebuke by his sahib has not the shoes but proceeds to the window close to his better half, saying, "Sala thinks me his cur's body mortality, cause he's only two wives to the other of my 72 Hindustan Military Generals.

"Checkmate," as fencers "shall inform," shall be dead." Shall," in fact, is one of the many fine old words in his and did French, keeping in the form of "check." Check" in Early English meanings, and the cry or "check" issued your king is in danger, beside the verb and substantive "check" which was originally the counterfoil of a bill carried in respect of the chessboard, and "exchequer," from the checkered pattern of the tablecloth on which the king's accounts were kept with counters. The Bobbing Roasting Jack.

A curious variety of the old fashioned roasting jack is used by the peasants of Bosnia and Herzegovina for roasting sheep whole as on the occasion of a wedding ceremony. One brim sees near a running stream and by its side erects a tripod, carrying long pole, at the extremity of which is a sackcloth bag, while the other, overhanging the water, is loaded with stones, pebbles, and mud. Each of the animal's legs is then tied with a cord of bast fibers, and the same fastens every joint in each of the five extremities, viz., three hinder and one forepaw. The animal is then roasted whole, the cords are consecutively "cut," "cut," "cut," "cut," "Lo!" and "live."

Her Little Brown Boy

BY L. B. MOBERLY

(Copyright, 1907, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

He sat in the front row. It was the first time that he had ever been to a military tournament, and he thought it was the most wonderful sight he had ever seen in all his nine years of life. He scarcely took his eyes off the soldiers and horses, and each answer in turn he watched with absorbed interest.

"My goodness!" he exclaimed breathlessly, as the men and horses went through each wonderful performance. "I'll have to be a soldier, mother. I couldn't be anything else, could I?"

"No, sonny," she answered softly; and if she sighed, well, nobody noticed it; and if her eyes grew dim with tears, no one saw them, because they were fixed on the little brown boy, and his were glued to the arena.

It happened that on the day when his mother and he were at the military tournament, a very great and distinguished commander was also there. He was so great a man that when the audience realized his presence they rose to their feet as one man, and cheered him until the place rang with the sound again and again. The little brown boy clambered upon his chair to get a good view of the hero, and the eyes of the small, eager-faced boy and the stalwart keen-faced man met. The little boy was waving his cap in his small brown hands, and a smile rippled over the great soldier's face and a light sprang into his blue eyes as he met those adoring brown ones.

He smiled at me, mother. I say, wasn't I a lucky chap? My goodness! I'd like to shake hands with him, only, of course, he wouldn't shake hands with a little chap like me."

Wait a bit, little brown boy, the time may come!

A boy—like a cat—has nine lives, I fancy; and this boy, in spite of a variety of accidents sufficiently alarming to turn grey the hair of the most hardened mother, did escape with life and limb, and grew from a little brown boy into a big one.

But though he altered in size, he remained the same in nature—loving, tender-hearted, straight and strong, a boy to make his mother's heart swell with pride very often.

His care for his "little mother," as he called her when he shot up to be a head and shoulders taller than she was as chivalrous and thoughtful as ever, and I think that if she had ever pressed the least shadow of dislike to his entering the army he would have given up what was the ambition and ideal of his life—to be a great soldier. But Mrs. Liddell had not been a soldier's daughter and a soldier's wife for nothing.

She quite counted the hours when the order went forth that Denis Liddell was to join his regiment in Egypt; and she went with him to Southampton with a smiling face and a breaking heart. Her little brown boy was all the world to her, and he was going away, perhaps for ever!

A wild stretch of desert sand.

Away in the west the sun was blood red hall, was sinking to rest in a clear, brilliant sky, throwing long, level rays across the battlefield, the most famous charge was over. The battle had raged fiercely. On every hand lay the dead and the dying, and the fight above their heads did not cease. In the midst of the fiercest fighting rode a brown-faced boy, his grey clothing, his lips set hard, his face grim with the stern elation and excitement of this his first taste of war; and when the great charge was over his features relaxed a little, but his eyes shone still.

Suddenly a voice beside him exclaimed: "Good heavens! where is Renton? He was with—just now—here there—amongst those fiends. Good Heavens!"

Without a word or syllable the brown-faced boy turned his horse. He looked at the man, whose words had been spoken gaspingly, breathlessly, because of a wound received in that great onslaught. He beat a little from the saddle and touched the other man's hand, his eyes fixed on the white face, where pain was already carving deep lines.

"I'm going back for Reuton," he said, quietly.

"Great Heavens, man! It's a sheer impossibility. Why—Liddell, it's riding back—into—hell—"

His lips were more tightly set than ever, but his brown eyes still shone, though verily it seemed as though he had ridden into hell itself. Evil-faced Dervishes closed round him, the groans of the dying, the cries of the wounded mingled in his ears with the fierce shouts of the foe. A gash across the cheek sent the blood rushing down his face, blinding him for a moment.

He literally hewed his way onwards, one thought only surging through his brain—Renton must be found and rescued. To find him at all in the fearful melee seemed at first a sheer impossibility; but at last—at last he uttered a little exclamation of thankfulness, for there lying at his feet, was the man he sought.

How he did he could never tell, but he flung himself from his horse and lifted the wounded man upon it.

"Better leave me," Renton whispered feebly, "we shall never both get through—splendid of—you to—come."

"Oh, it's all right," the boy answered, as he swung himself into the saddle behind his companion and held the almost unconscious form close to him. The deadly moments that followed brought grey hairs upon Denis Liddell's head.

Whilst his left hand gripped the wounded man firmly, he warded off with his right hand, as well as he could, the blows that fell upon him from all sides. A scalp wound made him dizzy and sick; a spear thrust in the leg sent a thrill of agony through him; but he never loosed his hold of the man he held, and his faithful horse went forward with no human guidance than his own wisdom and steadfastness, which he seemed to share with his young master.

Then the world rocked red waved round him, but the dark fiends were gone, and in their stead English faces looked into his; eager hands took his unconscious burden from his arm, and other eager hands lifted him from the saddle. There was a hum of voices round him and cheer after cheer rang out again and again from the crowd of soldiers clustering round.

Then he was next conscious of easy external matters. Denis found himself in bed, and, as he expressed it, "like a mummy for bendages. He was very stiff and sore. As he watched some one parted the door of the tent and let in a broad pathway of blazing white sunbeams from outside.

Denis heard a clear, decided voice say, softly:

"One moment, Dale, I want to see how the boy is," and then a shadow fell across the strip of sunlight on the bed, and a tall man stood beside it.

A strange, bewildered recollection came back to Denis and a certain smile hovered, years ago, and a great commander for whose sake the audience had risen to its feet and cheered, and a little brown-faced boy who had said, eagerly: "My goodness! I'd like to shake hands with him; only, of course, he wouldn't shake hands with a little chap like me."

"Getting on, my boy?" a clear, decided voice said in a curiously softened tone. "This is the first time you have known me."

"I knew you—long ago—sir," he whispered, "when I was—a little chap —I wanted to shake hands with you —ever thought should."

His eyes closed. The great general looked at him silently. He fancied the boy was wandering, and beckoned to the doctor who had entered the tent quietly.

"How is he?" the general asked, "I thought at first he was better, but he seems to be wandering. We can't afford to lose him."

"I hope we shan't do that, sir," the doctor said, cheerily. "He's had a hard fight, and so have we, for his life; but he and we have won. He'll do now."

And the next morning, when the general again entered the tent, Denis' brown eyes met his in full recognition, and a flush crept over the boy's face as again the strong man's hand soldiers for valor," a day when his mother knew that others beside herself recognised as a hero her "little brown boy."

POULTRY AND BEES

HEN HOUSE FOR WINTER LAYERS

It Must Be Constructed With Special Idea of Warmth and Ventilation.

A poultry house to afford warmth, comfort and convenience for fowls maintained for winter egg production must be specially designed for that purpose. It must be located upon slightly elevated ground to afford perfect drainage. The building itself must be spacious, affording plenty of room on the floor for each individual fowl.

It should be located to afford a southern exposure, so that during the winter months plenty of warm sunlight can be reflected into the building. The structure itself should be so designed to eliminate as much exposure to cold wind as possible so that the temperature can be maintained as even as practicable.

The maintainance of poultry during the winter months has proven a very profitable enterprise from the standpoint of winter egg production. Upon the farm where there is unlimited range for rearing a large number of young, healthy pullets, winter egg production affords the farmer a most profitable adjunct to his farming. For several years past I have been giving this particular line special attention along with my farm work and feel that I am able to make more clear profit from the amount of capital invested in a hundred or so strong, healthy pullets then from any other farm stock stock.

To make winter egg production profitable, attention must be directed toward providing comfortable conditions for the fowls, says Farm and Home. It is not possible to obtain anything like encouraging results from poorly arranged accommodations. Profitable winter egg production depends largely upon proper facilities and attention directed toward supplying the fowls with proper food.

A great many carry the impression that winter egg production involves a considerable expenditure of money to coastruct a properly arranged building and labor to make this industry profitable. This is erroneous. Any farmer who will give a little attention to rearing a few strong, healthy fowls during the previous season and supply comfortable conditions to the fowls during the cold winter months can get winter eggs.

The plans herewith show one of the poultry houses I have had in use for a number of years. It was one of the first buildings I constructed and I have been so well pleased with the design that I have coostructed others on the same principle. One of the great features in favor of this plan of a poultry house is that it affords a large amount of floor space at reasonable cost, and as the same time supplies all the requirements necessary for the comfort of the fowls.

The building herewith shown is 18x 30, with seven-foot posts in front and three-foot posts in the rear. Before the construction of the building was begun, a foundation was laid by excavating a small trench 18 inches wide and 20 inches deep. This trench was filled with small cobble stone for the foundation for the building. Upon this foundation a concrete wall was constructed ten inches high and eight inches wide.

The main frame work was constructed of 2x4 material with the exception of the sills which were of 3x4 stuff. For siding, matched pine was used of excellent quality as it was desirable to make the building warm as possible. The roofing is shingles laid five inches to the weather. Two large windows were put in on the south side to give plenty of sunlight. The inside of the building was sealed with matched material with felt paper between. This building is so well constructed that the weather must get pretty low in order to freeze water during the night.

Fig. 2 shows the ground plan. The west end is taken up with roosts which are partitioned off from the rest of the building. The roosts are constructed about three feet up from the floor. Along the south side under the windows is a dusting place where the sunlight falls directly upon the floor. Nests are provided to accommodate about 100 fowls. P is a drinking fountain. B B are feed bins where sufficient feed is kept at hand to eliminate labor in caring for the fowls.

Uncleanliness and overcrowding are two mistakes most common in the poultry business.

GETTING EGGS IN WINTER.

How One Farmer Manages to Make His Hens Return a Profit.

I always sow some rye near the house for the hens. I feed corn and wheat, say one-half gallon, mixed, for morning feed and half that much for evening. Get 4 hens. When the weather is frosty, give a warm glop of bran and meal mixed in old skillet. Give them all the meat scraps and old cracklings and house them in warm house. Pullets that are well grown in October ought to lay all winter and will with care.

The brown leghorn will lay more eggs than any kind I have ever tried, continues this correspondent of an exchange. Chickens should have a large range if you expect the best results. I have no patience with a gang of old hens at the back door that expect to be fed everything they eat. Better sell them off and get industrious hens like the Leghorn and Game. Half Game and Leghorn make fine layers. I never keep hens longer then two seasons under the chickens are the best paying property on my farm. I have increased my flock to 100 and expect to double it next year.

WATER FOR THE FOWLS.

How it May Be Kept From Freezing in Winter.

The drinking fountain is a great convenience, but when the weather is real cold the water will freeze unless you can supply some heat. I made a heater which serves well and is not costly or troublesome, says a writer in Farm and Home. I procured from the grocer a small box, just the right height for a lamp which I took from a brooder. I bored a hole in the top three inches in diameter and on both sides I bored two holes for air to supply the lamps and two more near the top for the smoke to escape. I set another hole directly in front of the lamp so I could see the flame, then lined the box with tin. The door is also shown. A tiey flame will keep the water from freezing.

FOR PROTECTION OF BEES.

How to Convert a Ventilated Cover Into a Chaff-Packed Cover.

The ventilated gable cover, having only a three-eighth-inch board over the bees, with cold air passing through, is not warm enough in winter; the space between upper and lower boards also affords ideal homes for spiders which cover over the bees. These objections can be easily overcome by filling in the space with chaff or other packing. When the covers are already nailed together it is a problem to get the chaff into them through the opening at the sides. I managed mine in the following way, explains a correspondent of Bee Culture: First I split a narrow strip of wood over the opening on one side. Then, with a little trough made to fit the mouth of the cover, proceed to sift in the chaff; and as it chokes in the narrow opening press it through with a thin board. A sheet about one inch. When one half is full, slide the trough along and fill the other parts with. Nail a strip of wood over the opening, and the operation is complete.

POULTRY NOTES.

Pullets that are forced to lay early seldom make good layers.

Cull and breed constantly; general doers an egg-laying breed of hens.

Nest boxes should be so constructed that hens can not roost in them.

In feeding meat and bone to poultry, the fresher it is when given them the better.

A good preventive of roup is to scatter air-slacked lime around the poultry house.

A scratching pen on the south side of the poultry house will pay for itself in time.

Chopped clover and sweet hay are excellent substitutes for green food, and the poultry will relish it.

Only mature birds should be used for breeding purposes. The use of young fowls is risky and unprofitable.

Millet seed is not only a nourishing food for hens, but it makes them scratch. Every farmer should raise some.

Use for Hot Potatoes.

Dr. Herbert Claiborne of New York, something of an inventive genius and noted for good looks as well as for medical skill, suffers from cold hands in winter. And nothing will warm his fingers except hot water, a hot fire or a hot potato. He can be seen almost any frosty morning marching along at five miles an hour with a hot potato in each overcoat pocket and his hands grasping the tubers. He has two big potatoes piping hot wrapped in silk handkerchiefs for this purpose. "They will keep your hands warm for hours unless you heppen to sit on 'em," he says. "They are great for a football match or when you go sleigh riding."

Disease Puzzles Doctors.

A mysterious disease is troubling the Dutch medical profession. It has broken out in the district of Oudtorn, not far from Utrecht, and Prof. Stroonck, of Utrecht, after all the best efforts ho can devise, has had to confess himself perplexed. The disease is a contagious affection of the head, and the peticuts invariably develop high fever. There have been more than 100 cases. Prof Stroonck has made a careful anlysis of blood taken from patients, but has utterly failed to find a cause or an origin for the epidemic.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Destruction of Fleas.

The Agricultural Research institute of Beagal has concluded a series of scientific experiments to determine the best method of destroying fleas, the investigation having special reference to checking the ravages of the plague.

The formula recommended is the free use of crude oil emulsion—80 per cent. of crude petroleum mixed with 20 per cent. of whale oil soap. This combination makes a jelly which mixes freely with water, and is generally used at three per cent. solution, while at 16 per cent. it destroys all fleas with perfect certainty. It is applied to floors and walls with a sprayer.

It is said that an animal washed with it will be entirely relieved of the pests.

Pure White Lead is the Natural Paint Pigment

Numerous cheap substitutes are being offered to take the place of white lead as paint, but the real substitute has yet to be found. Pure White Lead has a peculiar property of amalgamating with the wood, which it is used—added to this it has an elasticity which permits the paint to follow the natural expansion and contraction of the wood. Pure White Lead also has a wonderful tenacity and elasticity, unimpaired by adulterants, since fadills all the requirements and is a lasting paint. Every keg which bears the Dutch Boy trade mark is positively guaranteed to be absolutely Pure White Lead and made by the Old Dutch Process.

U. S. DISPENSATORY

Describes the Principal Ingredients Contained in Pe-ru-na.

Are we claiming too much for Peruna when we claim it to be an effective remedy for chronic catarrh? Have we abundant proof that Peruna is in reality such a catarrh remedy? Let us see what the United States Dispensatory says of the principal ingredients of Peruna.

Take, for instance, the ingredient hydrastis canadensis, or golden seal. The United States Dispensatory says of this herbal remedy, that it is largely employed in the treatment of depraved mucous membranes, chronic rhinitis (nasal catarrh), atonic dyspepsia (catarrh of the stomach), chronic intestinal catarrh, catarrhal jaundice, (catarrh of the liver) and in diseased mucous membranes of the pelvic organs. It is also recommended for the treatment of various forms of diseases peculiar to women.

Another ingredient of Peruna, corydalis formosa, is classed in the United States Dispensatory as a tonic. So also is cubebs classed as a stomachic and as a tonic for the mucous membranes.

Cedron seeds is another ingredient of Peruna, an excellent drug that has been very largely overlooked by the medical profession for the past fifty years. The seeds are to be found in very few drug stores. The United States Dispensatory says of the action of cedron that it is used as a bitter tonic and in the treatment of dysentery, and in intermittent diseases as a substitute for quinine.

Oil of copaiba, another ingredient of Peruna, is classed by the United States Dispensatory as a mild stimulant and diuretic. It acts on the stomach and intestinal tract. It acts as a stimulant on the genito-urinary membranes. Useful in chronic cystitis, chronic dysentery and diarrhea, and some chronic diseases of the liver and kidneys.

Send to us for a free book of testimonials of what the people think of Peruna as a catarrh remedy. The best evidence is the testimony of those who have tried it.

AWFUL NEURALGIA

Pain Turned This Woman's Hair White but She Was Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Do not seek relief from suffering simply, but free your system from the disease which is the cause of your suffering. That is the message which a former victim of neuralgia sends to those who are still in its grasp. Hot applications, powders that deaden the senses and others that reduce the heart action may cause temporary relief but the pain is sure to return with greater intensity.

Mrs. Evelyn Crensere, who has a beautiful home at 811 Boulevard West, Detroit, Mich., suffered for years with neuralgia until she tried this tonic treatment. She says: "My trouble began about six years ago and I did not rest as I should have, but kept up about my many duties. After a time I became so weak I could not do any work at all. I had severe backaches and such dreadful headaches in the back part and top of my head. My eyes were easily tired and at times I saw black spots before them. I consulted several doctors but without the slightest benefit. The pains were so intense that my hair turned white.

"I lost continually in weight and strength and was almost in despair when a friend recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I tried them according to directions and soon began to feel relief. At the end of three months I had gained ten pounds in weight and had no more trouble with my nerves. I have been in perfect health ever since and can heartily commend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

WOULD SHUT SCHOOLS

MINNESOTA IRON RANGES EXCITED OVER LAW.

FEAR THE TONNAGE TAX

Towns and School Districts on the Ranges Protest Against Proposed Law That Would Destroy the School System.

Hibbing, Minn., Feb. 13.—Threatened by legislation which would be totally destructive of the public school system of the iron ranges of Minnesota, the people of the mining country in St. Louis and Itasca counties have combined to make an appeal to the legislature and the state at large. The excited state of public feeling here is not comprehensible to the people of the state generally, for in urban and rural communities questions affecting taxation have not the vital interest for people of every condition that the same topic has here. Confronted by the proposition now before the legislature that a tonnage tax be imposed on iron ore, the people of the ranges are aroused because by the operation of such a tax system practically the entire source of revenue for the maintenance of the public schools would be removed from the local assessment rolls.

There is no difference of opinion on the ranges regarding this tax proposition and its effect. The range towns have been wrought to the pitch of holding mass meetings—not perfunctary affairs attended by a few taxpayers, but gatherings in which hundreds of people take part and speeches and resolutions setting forth the sentiments of the participants are indulged. There is a good deal of bitterness shown in some of the speeches, but most of them deplore the ignorance of conditions here which is responsible for the proposed taxation. The protest that has taken form in these meetings comes altogether from the people. The mining companies have no material interest in the proposed law, for it makes no difference to them whether they pay their taxes to the county or to the state. They are but incidentally interested in the matter by reason of the fact that the maintenance of the public schools contributes to the betterment of living conditions and promotes the progress in intelligence of the mining population. It is everywhere observable that the resolutions passed do not complain about the evident desire of the members of the legislature to secure a larger state revenue from the iron mining industry, but they do object to a change in the manner of collecting the taxes. The contention is made that if a tonnage tax is imposed it will necessarily carry with it the exemption of the mines from the realty assessment, and thus take away from St. Louis county 95 per cent of the assessed valuation outside of the city of Duluth.

The towns on the ranges do not represent any very considerable assessed valuation, while some of the school districts have an enormous assessed value. Here at Hibbing is a case in point. In the school district here the mines are down on the assessment roll for nearly $27,000,000, while the total assessment, including the village of Hibbing, is but $700,000 more. The schools are centered at the town here and the school population is out of all proportion to the taxable value of the property, with the mines excepted.

Same Conditions Everywhere.

The situation at Hibbing fairly typifies that on the ranges generally. At Eveleth $58,000 is raised annually for school purposes. Taking the mines out of the assessment, the property left subject to taxation would yield $540 annually for school purposes. At Ely, on the Vermillion range, the oldest mining community in the iron district, and where property values outside of the mines might be expected to have attained a maximum of value, 88 per cent of the assessment is represented by the mines. At Virginia 86 per cent of the assessed valuation is in the mines; at Chisholm 96 per cent. One-third of the entire assessed valuation of Itasca county—which is not generally regarded as a great iron county—is in the mines, and there is one school district in that county where there is an $85,000 house, and only 6 per cent of the assessed valuation is outside of the mines.

With these conditions, it is not to be wondered at that the people on the ranges are protesting and making preparation to assail the legislature by means of delegations and appeal to the fair-mindedness of the people of the state to help them to avert the impending calamity. There is everywhere the feeling that the enactment of such a measure as the proposed tonnage tax would not be possible if the conditions were understood of the people at large. There is no attempt at tax dodging, no disposition to say that the state is not entitled to the revenue it wants from the mines; everybody is willing to subscribe to the proposition that the assessment on the mines might be increased and a larger revenue had for state purposes. The valuation of the mines in St. Louis county was raised to $75,000,000 last year, and the mining companies would interpose no serious abjection to a further raise. The people would not lift a hand to prevent such an increase as the authorities might propose. But there is a profound feeling of indignation here over the possibility of the legislature passing a law that will be destructive of these communities—for the range communities must fall if the schools are closed, and the schools must close if the revenue from the mines is taken by the state. There is no wealth on the ranges except that in the mines; there is no hope of agricultural development, and there is a laboring population that is held in check and is fast being brought to the point of assimilation by the education of the children. To stop the work of education would throw this vast body of ignorant foreigners back to the state in which they lived in Austria, Hungary, Italy and other countries of central Europe. That would inevitably bring about a condition of anarchy.

The people interested in the schools, the district officials and superintendents, have undertaken the enlightenment of the people of the rest of the state as to conditions here. These men represent the best citizenship on the ranges. They have created a remarkably efficient and modern system of schools. They have builded largely and well, and the schools are of the best modern type. Now confronted by the probability that their schools may be destroyed they have gone actively to work to show the people of Minnesota that the proposed legislation would be as perniciously tyrannical as any ever framed for the destruction of a people. Their appeal will be to the people through the press, supplementing the efforts of the committees that have been appointed to labor with the legislature directly.

Charles E. Young who was widely known in southern and western Minnesota in educational work before coming to the range, is superintendent of the Hibbing schools. He has sent out an appeal and protest to the press of the state in which he says:

Hibbing's Protest.

"Apart from Duluth we have on the iron ranges of this county four high school towns, which employ 158 teachers and enroll over 5,000 pupils; also eight graded school towns employing 63 teachers and enrolling over 2,500 pupils; also 58 rural districts. In size and conditions this district of Hibbing is a fair sample of the high school districts. We contain a territory of 270 square miles, maintaining two brick and six frame schools with 41 instructors and enrolling this year 1,350 pupils. The school building erected during the past ten years cost $190,000 and of this $65,000 are still due to the State of Minnesota on building loans.

"The children in the schools represent over twenty nations, are in a great majority of foreign birth and the enrollment has been growing at the rate of 35 per cent per annum. Within the district practically all of the assessable property is in the mines, except in the village of Hibbing where there is some value in the form of frame buildings and personal property. The town has no other industry than mining; the timber has all been removed from the adjacent land and to-day more than 92 per cent of the taxes are paid on the mines. If all of the mining property should be exempt from the school taxes, as under the proposed law, the schools of the Hibbing district will have to be closed next year. Under the conditions that will follow the proposed law the district will be left burdened with a bonded debt to meet which will require all the available school revenue. If the board levies the maximum rate of school tax we will receive too little to pay the state claims for interest and payment on the principal of the debt due the state funds.

"It is the educational and not the political question that is alarming this region. To turn loose upon the streets of these mining towns the children of nearly 100,000 people, mostly foreigners, who have more than the average eagerness for an American education, is an act that is fraught with future disgrace and peril for the entire State of Minnesota."

At the first of a series of meetings to be held here to give expression to the feeling of the people and take such steps as may be necessary to preserve the schools, 200 people were present and committees to meet the junketing committee from the legislature, to draw resolutions, to solicit funds for carrying on the work to go to St. Paul were appointed. The delegation that will go to St. Paul from St. Louis county will include five prominent citizens of Hibbing. At the meeting $553 were collected in small sums and this has been increased to nearly $800.

Chisholm Is Wrought Up.

Chisholm, Minn., Feb.—A defense fund of $550 has been raised to pay the expenses of a committee to go to St. Paul and protest to the legislature against the passage of the proposed tonnage tax which would destroy the schools of Chisholm. The excitement that was caused by the discussion at the mass meeting on the tax question is somewhat abated by the belief that the legislature will not exercise its power to confiscate the revenues of this school district by imposing a tonnage tax when it is informed of what the local conditions are. School Superintendent Minch is preparing a statement of the conditions which will show how utterly this district is dependent on the mines for the maintenance of the schools. W. G. Shane, village recorder says:

"We have nothing to tax but the mines. The population is almost wholly foreign. If we lose the revenues from the mines bankruptcy is sure and anarchy will follow the closing of the schools. Life would be impossible here without the schools. We will send a strong delegation to St. Paul and will make such a showing to the legislature as must avert this impending evil."

The assessed valuation of Chisholm, including the mines in the village is $4,103,166. Without the mines there would be a valuation of about 3 per cent of this sum.

Means Death to Ely.

Ely, Minn., Feb.—Following the appointment of a committee to go to St. Paul to protest against a return to the tonnage tax system of securing revenue for the state from the mines, School Superintendent C. L. Newberry has sent out an appeal to the state. Mr. Newberry says:

"Any attempt to withdraw iron properties from taxation by ordinary methods, or any attempt to divert monies raised by taxation on iron properties for the support of schools and local government, cannot be regarded as other than sounding the death-knell of our public schools and public improvements in the great mining region of Northern Minnesota.

"In withdrawing the iron mines from local taxation, or the taxes on iron properties from local use, eight-ninths of Ely's taxable property is withdrawn. The assessed valuation in the city is now $3,252,129. The assessed value outside of the iron properties is $421,747. On this last named sum would fall the burden of a tax sufficient to educate 1,000 children. As the amount needed to run the Ely schools last year was $45,000, a school tax of 11 per cent would be imposed. As the property could not possibly stand this tax the schools must close if a tonnage tax is imposed, and we are deprived of the revenue from the mines under the method of direct taxation. It would be necessary to impose a tax of over 200 mills for all purposes if the mines were taken out of the assessment roll, and such a tax would be confiscatory. Never before in the history of Minnesota has a more alarming question arisen. The proposed law will devastate our mining towns. The measure will starve and dwarf our schools and public service; it will necessitate the immediate closing of the schools in all the range towns."

Eveleth Joins the Protest.

Eveleth, Minn., Feb.—The alarm expressed by the leading men of Eveleth at the mass meeting held to take steps to prevent the enactment of a tonnage tax law is subsiding in the knowledge that effective action is being taken to put the case of the range towns fairly before the people of Minnesota. The various committees appointed by the meeting have organized and practically every business man is a committee of one to send out letters to friends throughout the state asking that information as to effect of a tonnage tax be spread. The Eveleth Business Men's association is sending out literature showing the local conditions and the certain and pernicious effect of such a change in the method of collecting taxes as is proposed.

"It would be just as fair," says Mayor Jessmore, "to pass a law imposing a tax upon the production of the fields of Southern Minnesota and take the revenue for state purpose as to impose this tonnage tax and take from the communities here, in which the wealth is in the mines, the sources of their revenue. It is a matter of life or death with these mining communities."

The school board is getting actively into the work of spreading information as to the actual conditions here, inspired by the knowledge that its present revenue of $58,000 for school purposes would be reduced under a tonnage law to about $540. Mayor Jessmore will head the delegation to St. Paul.

Itasca County Would Be Hard Hit.

Grand Rapids, Minn., Feb.—Following the expression of feeling indulged in at the mass meeting held here Monday night to protest against the passage of the tonnage tax law Hattie F. Booth, county superintendent of schools, has sent out a statement of school conditions which shows that the proposed law would destroy the schools in this county in the districts where they are most needed. Says Mrs. Booth:

"The mining property stands for one-third of the assessed valuation of the county. In Districts No. 2 and No. 9 there is practically no revenue except from the mines. In District No. 2 there is an assessed valuation of $2,828,431, of which 94 per cent is in the mines. The state has loaned the district $100,000 to carry on the school work, and the removal of the mines from the assessment roll would close up the schools and bankrupt the district. In Districts 2 and 9 mining is the only occupation of the people, and if the bill becomes a law we will have to close the schools. The effect of this would be the raising of a class of children who would become criminals and the state would have to support them in institutions."

Itasca county is interested in the tonnage tax as a business proposition to a greater extent than St. Louis county. The mines here are just being developed at a high cost, much of the ore requiring special treatment. It is assumed that under a tonnage tax no new mines would be opened and the operating companies would not prosecute the development of low grade properties for many years, not until the ones which are less expensive in the mining had been removed from the other ranges.

Itasca county will send a big delegation to St. Paul to fight the passage of the tonnage tax law.

AILING WOMEN

How Many Perfectly Well Women Do You Know?

MISS GRACE E. MILLER — MRS. W. S. FORD

"I am not feeling very well," "I am so nervous it seems as though I should fly." "My back aches as though it would break."

How often do you hear these significant expressions from women friends. More than likely you speak the same words yourself, and there is a cause.

More than thirty years ago Lydia E. Pinkham of Lynn, Mass. discovered the source of nearly all the suffering endured by her sex. "Woman's Ills," these two words are full of more misery to women than any other two words that can be found in the English language. Sudden fainting, depression of spirits, reluctance to go anywhere, backaches, headaches, nervousness, sleeplessness, bearing-down sensations, displacements and irregularities are the bane of woman's existence.

The same women who discovered the cause of all this misery also discovered a remedy. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made from native roots and herbs holds the record for a greater number of absolute cures of female ills than any other one remedy the world has ever known and it is the greatest blessing which ever came into the lives of suffering women.

Don't try to endure, but cure the cause of all your suffering. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once removes such troubles. The following letters prove this:

Mrs. W. S. Ford of 1938 Lansdowne St., Baltimore, Md. writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"For four years my life was a misery to me. I suffered from irregularities, suppression, terrible dragging sensations and extreme nervousness. I had given up all hope of ever being well again when Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended. It cured my weakness and made me well and strong."

Miss Grace E. Miller, of 1213 Michigan St., Buffalo, N. Y. writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I was in a very bad condition of health generally; irritable, cross, backache and suffered from a feminine weakness. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, cured me after all other medicines had failed."

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for Mrs. Ford and Miss Miller it will do for other women in like condition. Every suffering woman in the United States is asked to accept the following invitation. It is free, will bring you health and may save your life.

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised. Out of her vast volume of experience in treating female ills Mrs. Pinkham probably has the very knowledge that will help your case. Her advice is free and always helpful.

ON SECRET SERVICE

True Stories of Experiences in the State, War, Treasury and Postoffice Departments.

By COL. JASPER EWING BRADY

(Late Censor of Telegraphs and Chief Signal Officer, U. S. A., Santiago de Cuba.)

THE TRADERS' FIVES

There was a time during the 70's when counterfeiting was carried on to a greater extent than now. In fact, it became a very serious menace to the circulation of the country. Numerous bogus bills of all kinds and denominations were floating around the United States, and many a time it was a toss up as to whether or not a bill was good or bad, so perfect were the imitations.

The secret service at this time was not in the best of shape; it was openly bruited about that many of the operatives were in sympathy with the gang of counterfeiters. Evidently this gang had a central or national organization, because every time a counterfeiter was arrested the best legal talent in the country was employed to defend him. Bail to the extent of $20,000 or $25,000 was readily furnished many times for men totally unknown in the city wherein they were caught. Then when the case was called the accused would not appear; bail would be declared forfeited, and immediately paid without waiting for its collection to be enforced by the slow process of law. The gang was strongly fortified with two kinds of money—"green goods" or counterfeit, which was circulated among the dear public, and "shake down" or real money, which was used in the defense of those unfortunate enough to be caught.

Finally, so bold and general did the gang become, that the entire subject was laid before a cabinet meeting in Washington and drastic measures determined upon. It was Secretary Boutelle who recommended that Col. H. C. Whitley be appointed chief of the secret service and given special instructions to stop the counterfeiting. Whitley was consulted and, after much deliberation, agreed to accept the position, provided he was given a free hand as to men and expense. Politics and pull were to be eschewed; he was to choose his own operatives and run the department as his judgment dictated.

Whitley obtained the desired results. The gang was broken up, and many of its members sent to jail or compelled to remain in hiding. There were, of course, a great many curious and exciting cases which were carried to a successful conclusion, but one of the most interesting was that of the "Traders' Fives," so-called because of a counterfeit five-dollar bill of the Traders' National bank of Chicago. The spurious bill was well-nigh perfect, but, as is usually the case, there was a slight difference in the details of the bill. The cashier's signature had a curve of the letter J made slightly unlike the original; the letter S of "Traders" barely crossed a given line, taking almost a microscope to detect it.

As soon as its existence became known the secret service men in Chicago were placed at work on the case. No headway was made. Outside help was called in; still no clew as to the identity of the gang uttering this bill. Chief Whitley, at Washington, was chagrined, and at long distance began to direct the case. The Chicago operatives had about given up in despair when, one day, Charles Mason, in charge of the local office, received an order from Whitley directing him (Mason) and one other man to be at Shenandoah, Ia., two days hence. They were to arrive after dark, and at eight o'clock the same evening they were to board a train leaving Shenandoah for St. Joseph, Mo. At the first station south of Shenandoah two strange men, one carrying a sole leather valise, were to board the train. These two men Mason and his partner were to watch—not for one instant were they to lose sight of them. At St. Joseph the two strangers would leave the train and be joined by a third party, who would be awaiting them at the station. As soon as this meeting took place all three of them were to be arrested, and a full report made by wire to Washington. Extraordinary care was to be taken to get the leather valise.

Mason studied these instructions very carefully. They were specific and to the point. He was somewhat puzzled as to who to take with him. Most of his men were busy on important cases and to take any one of them off at this time might work hard. Col. Jack Cheney was a warm personal friend of his; they had worked on many a case together; perhaps he would go. True, Cheney was the head of a big detective service company, and could command big prices for his services, but there ran in his veins that always unsatisfied longing for action and excitement. If he could take Cheney, Mason felt assured of success, and he wanted success for two reasons: he admired Whitley and then, too, he was ambitious and aspired to a higher position in the service.

When Mason's name was brought in to Cheney by the faithful Jeff he was quite busy, but he put everything aside and bade his old friend welcome. Mason explained his mission and added:

"That's the whole story Cheney, and I'd like to have you go if you can."

"All right, Mason, I'll do it. It will only take two or three days' time at best and I haven't anything very important on hand now."

Mason handed Cheney his chief's letter and together they studied its contents carefully.

"No mistaking the chief's intent; is there, Chuck?" said Cheney.

"That's true," replied Mason. "The old man appears to have it all worked out like a chess problem. It doesn't look like a very pleasant job, though. That train leaving Shenandoah at eight p. m. reaches St. Joe at one in the morning. There the two men are to be joined by a third party, and we are to pinch the whole crowd. Our work is cut out all right."

Well did Chief Whitley know the caliber of the man he had so wisely chosen. Mason did not know the meaning of the word fear; he had been in many a hard-fought scrap with moonshiners, smugglers and counterfeiters, and carried scars of more than one bullet wound. If his chief had ordered him to arrest a dozen men he would have made the attempt. Truly did he possess the Balaklava spirit:

"Theirs not to reason why:
Theirs but to do and die."

"What case do you reckon this is, Mason?"

"Hanged if I know, Cheney. There's a whole slew of them on now. You can bet the old man knows what he's talking about. He's the best 'long-distance detective' I know."

Two days later they took a train and reached Shenandoah after dark. At eight p. m. they boarded the St. Joe train, and at the first station south "two men, one carrying a sole leather valise," got aboard. Mason and Cheney saw them enter the car immediately in rear of the one in which they were sitting. The sole leather valise appeared to be rather heavy, and was carefully guarded.

The train conductor, Jack Bellamy, knew Mason quite well, in fact, had served with him during the war, and greeted him pleasantly.

"Hello, Mason, what's on to-night?"

"Go through your train," replied Mason; "then come back here and I'll tell you. Watch out for two men in the next car." Briefly he described the men.

When Bellamy returned he sat down opposite Mason and Cheney, and quietly Mason told him the lay.

"Now, Jack," continued Mason, "I don't want those birds to get on to either me or Cheney. They may know us, and they may not; but we won't give them a chance. Keep your eye on them, and when we get to St. Joe we may need a little of your help." Bellamy had a hankering for a good scrimmage.

"All right, Mason," he replied. "I don't know what it's all about, but I'm with you whatever it is. I'll put my head man in that car with orders not to leave it. He's all right. You fellows can ride here, and we'll all be on hand when we reach St. Joe."

At five minutes to one Mason and Cheney took a position in the rear of the first car, so they could see every passenger of the first car alight. The brakeman had purposely locked the rear door, so they would, perforce, have to leave by the front. Bellamy, the conductor, was near the rear end of the second coach, intending to follow the suspected men as they left the car. This literally put them between two fires. Mason and Cheney intended to jump off right after the suspects and nab them as soon as they were met by the third party.

It was a damp dismal night, and there was a steady rain falling. The train slowly pulled into the old Burlington depot. It was before the days of electricity, and the dim, yellow, flickering gaslight only accentuated the darkness. Truly, an ideal night for deviltment of any kind.

As soon as the train stopped the suspects alighted and started quickly down the platform. Unfortunately Mason and Cheney were caught in a crowd. As soon as possible they extricated themselves, and scarcely ten seconds elapsed before they jumped to the platform, followed by Bellamy. They looked up and down everywhere, but their birds had flown; disappeared as if swallowed up by the earth. It was a predicament and a nasty one. They had been ordered to do a certain thing, and right on the eve of its accomplishment they were balked.

"Well, I'm damned!" ejaculated Cheney.

"You will be all right, and so will I," said Mason, "when the chief hears of this. I've read of mysterious disappearances before this, but those fellows did the 'fade away' act in a high-class manner." Bellamy was too nonplussed to speak.

After a careful search of the depot and the adjoining grounds, Mason and Cheney checked their valises and went up town. Bellamy was at the end of his run and went along. Walsh Agnew was chief of police at the time, and they quickly routed him out. Mason told him the story.

"Those birds are in town all right enough, Walsh, and we want them. We've just got to them them or my job won't be worth a cent." All of which was absolutely true. Chief Whitley would brook no excuse whatever. The case was too flagrant; there were the two men indicated in his orders, in plain view all the time, until they met the third man, and, puff, they were gone—vanished into thin air! No, Mason's salvation depended on finding the three men, and landing them high and dry behind bars. The "sole leather valise" must be secured at all hazards.

Walsh Agnew, of course, knew St. Joe like a book, and in those days it was a typical river town; neither better nor worse than others. There were plenty of saloons, dance halls and gambling places, and the four men started out to make a systematic tour, taking in every place. Not a sign of their quarry, and finally Chief Agnew said:

"Well, fellows, I'm near beat. There's one more place, old man Leftrich's dance hall, and if they are not there it's ten to one St. Joe doesn't hold them; that is, not the 'under' part of the city."

Mason was mad—mad all the way through.

"They're in this town all right, Walsh. They couldn't get out on a train until eight o'clock, and the country roads are so bad a team couldn't pull a wagon very far. Some house holds them, and I'm going to find the gentlemen if I have to search every house in town. Chief Whitley expects a wire in the morning, and he's got to have it."

Leftrich's place was a typical dance hall, a long, low, rambling shack standing just across the Hannibal and St. Joe railroad tracks and right on the bank of the Missouri river. Ugly stories had been told about crimes committed within the shack, and all evidences thereof cast into the swirling torrent of the Big Muddy. Be that as it may, old Leftrich himself was not an entire stranger to the force. His revolver butt had two nicks, and he had "done time" down in Jeff City. In St. Joe, however, he had played as fair as one of his class could play. True, he ran a dance hall with gambling attachments, and once in a while, doubtless, some of the light-fingered gentry had taken refuge there, but "Lefty," as he was called, steered clear from doing any action by which he might be judged an accessory before or after the fact. His virtues would not entitle him to a place in Sunday school, but he wouldn't sacrifice himself nor his liberty for any crook or gang of crooks. They might meet there, and so long as the law didn't intervene he wouldn't raise any rumpus. Virtuous Leftrich! He knew Agnew, of course, and he also knew Mason; therefore, when he saw these men enter his place he glanced anxiously around the room to see who they might be after.

There was a haze of blue, rank-smelling tobacco smoke, the clink of glasses, and ribald songs and jests of men and—the pity of it—women, too, habitues of the place. At one end was the bar, backed by bright mirrors, in front of which were the ornate bottles filled with what has been truly called "hell fire and blue ruin." A faro game was in progress; poker and keno held forth. Such was the scene greeting the eyes of Mason and his party.

Many an anxious glance was cast at the officers; perhaps more than one heart beat faster in anticipation of a "pinch;" probably nine-tenths of the entire crowd should have been behind the bars. But it was not ordinary game Mason and his party wanted. They wanted "three men and a sole leather valise."

Leftrich came forward rubbing his hands like an Oily Gammon.

"Good evening, gentlemen; what can I do for you this evening, or morning, rather? Have a drink on the house?"

"No," replied Agnew, "we're just looking 'round a bit."

Smooth old "Lefty" knew what "looking 'round a bit" meant. His eyes and ears were wide open.

"They're not here, evidently," said Agnew to Mason sotto voce.

Now, Charley Mason was born on Friday, and the 13th of the month. He was a great believer in "hunches" —some of his greatest successes were founded on "hunches." He suddenly became possessed of one this night. It was working overtime. In this respect he was like Cheney's friend Guthrie, and Cheney had occasion to be thankful for Guthrie's hunch at one time—it saved his life; therefore his views coincided with Mason's. Quickly Mason glanced around the room, taking in everything. A door to one side and in rear of the bar attracted his attention.

"I'm not so sure of that, Walsh." Then to Leftrich, "Where does that door lead to?"

"That" — faltered Leftrich — "oh, that—that—leads to a private room. Sometimes we rent it to select parties for a quiet little game."

Just then a shrill female voice came from the "private room"—"Now, Ed, loosen up. Order another round of drinks; you've got plenty of the green."

"Damned 'select' bunch in there now," continued Mason. "Who are they?"

"Strangers to me," said "Lefty." "Three men and some lady friends. Only been there about an hour; had several drinks."

Every sense within Mason, Cheney, Agnew and Bellamy was alert; the trail was getting warm.

"Did they have a 'sole leather valise'?" queried Mason.

"Yes, I believe they did.

There was the quarry run to earth at last. They could not get out of that back room save by coming through the bar unless they wanted to take the chance of a 50-foot drop into the Missouri.

"Leftrich," said Mason, "we want those men and we are going to get them. This looks like a pretty ugly crowd here. You know them. You hold them in check while we go in there, and if any monkey business goes on I'll fill you full of holes first clip."

Celerity of movement is always an essential to success, and Mason, Agnew, Cheney and Bellamy quickly crossed the floor. Trusty six-shooters were nervously felt, and smash! in went the door.

"Hands up, everybody," commanded Mason, as he sprang in, closely followed by Agnew and Cheney, while Bellamy kept his eye on the crowd in the outer room. "Hands went up," but in one was a derringer. Bang! Out went one of the flaring kerosene lamps, and before the second could be extinguished "Bang!" spoke Mason's gun, and the wrist of the hand that was acting as a light extinguisher was shattered by a well-directed bullet. The women screamed and backed against one side of the wall.

Smash! the butt of Mason's gun came down on the head of the nearest man, and he went down in a heap. One of the others grabbed "the sole leather valise" and made a break for the door. Mason tackled him, and after a struggle brought him down, while Agnew and Cheney slipped the bracelets on the other two. Their hunt was ended, and the party quickly made their way to the police station.

The prisoners were locked up and an inspection made of the valise. As soon as it was opened out rolled package after package of "green goods."

"The Traders' Fives, by all that's good," said Mason.

"And, yes," continued Cheney, delving deeper in the valise, "here's the plates. Say, Charley, maybe this isn't a rich haul."

"It's rich, all right enough; but where would I have been if we hadn't made the haul? I tell you a hunch is a great thing when it works out right."

"Mason," said Cheney, when they had placed their prisoners in jail and had retired to a room for a few hours' sleep, "I'm glad you asked me to come with you. You needn't put in a bill for my services."

"Why not, Jack?"

"Well, you see," replied Cheney, with a broad smile, "I was directly interested in the case, though I did not know it. I got taken in by their clever counterfeit work. Look here," and taking out his pocketbook he extracted therefrom and laid on the table four Traders' five-dollar bills.

"Beauties, aren't they, Mason?"

But Mason had gone to sleep.

"Bone Age" on the Prairies

How Many Settlers Lived While Getting Their Claims.

The pioneers of Kansas will never forget the "buffalo bone age." When central and southwestern Kansas were settled the prairie was strewn with buffalo bones. Those were hard times in Kansas and the gathering of these bones enabled the early settlers to live while they were getting their claims broken out for the producing of crops.

Nine-tenths of the pioneers of that section of Kansas—and there weren't very many at that—had literally nothing but a team and a few household goods that they had hauled from the east in a single wagon, says the Kansas City Star. Of course there were no buffalo, for this was in the late '70s, but their bones strewed the plains, and these bones were the only thing that had a commercial value and they were utilized. They were hauled in great wagonloads to the nearest railway, often from 60 to 100 miles away, and sold.

The horns were the more valuable and they went first, but the rest of the skeleton soon followed. There were no fortunes made by these early bone hunters, for a large load of buffalo bones brought only from five dollars to eight dollars at the railroad towns, but the proceeds from a load enabled the settler to buy a little flour, coffee and occasionally meat and lumber.

He Paid for All.

The English custom of free seats and collection plates in church is puzzling the continental visitors. In Roman Catholic countries it is usual to make a small payment on entering a church. A Frenchman on a visit to Manchester not long ago, according to the Guardian, attended service in one of the parish churches. With him was a party of English friends. The foreigner was seated at the outer end of the pew. The plate came round in due course, and the visitor was the first to deposit a coin in it. The collector was about to pass the plate to his English friends when the Frenchman interposed: "Ah, no, I have paid for all the seats."

HOME MERCHANTS

GOOD REASONS WHY THEY DESERVE YOUR SUPPORT.

MEANS MUCH TO COMMUNITY

He Is at the Head of the Things That Are Good for the Town and Yourself.

(Copyright, by Alfred C. Clark.)

The above head is a subject that can well be treated as open for discussion and consideration at any and all times. It is also a subject that should interest all persons who have at heart the welfare of the community in which he lives and who wishes to see it grow and prosper.

No person can afford to do what he knows will work an injury to the community in which he lives. In justice to himself he cannot refuse his support to the home industries that are striving for existence and the welfare of the town in which he goes to do his trading.

In considering this question it should be borne in mind that the country people, like all other American citizens, are always on the lookout for a place to invest their money that will bring them the biggest returns for the least expenditure; in this they are right and are justified in so doing, but, at the same time they should remember that they are dependent on the home merchant for the money that they send to foreign markets.

If they should stop to think how these catalogue houses are operated, and look into, and know, the true condition of affairs, probably they would reconsider the stand they had taken toward them. In many cases the people are ignorant of the true surroundings and inside operations of these concerns and think they are doing right in sending them their money. They are led to believe that what they get from the catalogue house is the same article that the home merchant sells, only at a much lower price. The majority of the people do not know that they are buying the cheapest article that can be manufactured and from the wholesaler or manufacturer and it will be sent to the purchaser in as good condition and short time as if it had been ordered from a catalogue house. The home merchant's business must be kept up and in order to do this it is absolutely necessary that the people at home patronize him and help him keep up with the times, or else he will soon be out of the struggle for existence among the country people.

The home merchant should not be expected to pay the highest price for produce and farm products and then be turned down by the seller of these articles when he wants anything in the merchant's line. He should be the first one to be consulted when the farmer intends buying. He should be seen and arrangements made for the purchase of the article, if he does not carry it in stock.

The home merchant advertises or should advertise, in the home paper. This keeps the home paper in the field and helps the community along. The people take the home paper because it gives all the local news that they cannot get any other way and thus the advertisements of the merchants are read by them. If the people do not patronize the home merchant he cannot afford to advertise, and without advertising a paper will soon prove a failure. Soon the home paper is sent to the wall for the want of support from the merchants; it may have a large circulation, but without the merchant's help it will soon be lost to sight. Then the merchant is next to get out of business for the want of support, and the town will decrease in population, and the people will wonder what the trouble is when the editor and the merchant leave town together.

The home merchant contributes to the support of the church, he pays his taxes to keep the schools up, he contributes to the horse show, the fall festival, and the hundred and one things that he is supposed to help out and give his support to. He is at the head of the list for everything that is for the good of the community and he deserves the honest and hearty co-operation of all the people, all the time, that are interested in the welfare of the community in which they live. The merchant helps to elect the men that are to represent them in the city, county, state and national affairs, and he is ever on the go looking to the interests of the people.

It's a Shell Game—You Pay Your Money Without Knowing What You Are Going to Get.

that they are in reality paying more for an inferior grade of goods than those sold by the home merchant, which probably cost them a few cents more.

Since the catalogue house has sprung into the commercial world and begun operations in the United States, all kinds of schemes have been tried and worked to get the money from the people that are always looking for bargains. No expense has been spared in their struggle for the almighty dollar of the country people, and they have been so far successful, at the great expense of the home town of the people that sent their money to these concerns.

Magazines have been started for the sole benefit of the catalogue house, and these circulated among the country people at ten or 15 cents a year. They build up a circulation on this low price of hundreds of thousands; this circulation brings to them millions of dollars in advertising from the catalogue houses and this money expended for advertising is more than doubled from the sales of these concerns to the country people who are losers by the transaction.

Catalogues are sent out telling the people that the house from which they came is the cheapest place in the country to buy, and it is, if the person receiving this catalogue wants a cheap article, not only in price, but also in make and material. The farmer receives this catalogue, looks it over, and after reading the well composed guarantee or assurance that the goods described in it are the very best that can be found anywhere, sends in an order. The house receives the order and immediately ships the articles wanted. The farmer drives many miles to get them and when the box is opened it is found to contain something much below his expectations, but this does not satisfy his mind on the fact that he has been duped and that he is not getting his full money value. In a second order he may be treated the same as the first one, but still he may think that he has saved money by buying it where he could get it cheap.

At the same time the merchant at home has the goods on the shelf in his store waiting for them to be taken away so that he can replace them with newer goods, thereby keeping his stock fresh and up-to-date. If he has not the article wanted he can order it

The people like to be entertained and they will come many miles to some amusement given by the merchants of the town where they are ever ready to go to sell their farm products. The merchant cannot give these entertainments unless he has the support of the people and it is not fair to expect this of the men that are striving for a livelihood, when the people send their money to a concern in some far away city that will neither contribute to any of these enterprises or take an interest in the surroundings thereof.

Home trading makes home industries, brings more to the town and keeps them there, and it helps to build up the place. But the town will be at a stand-still so long as the people persist in this way of robbing the home merchants of the right to live and do business among them.

If the people will keep their money at home there will be no need for complaint. The place will assume a lively air, it will take on a metropolitan look, and the people will say to their neighbor that business is good, and it will be, as long as the people continue to trade in the home markets. The least that a person can do toward the betterment of the community and his own interests, is to keep the money at home and see to it that it is put where it is most needed and wanted.

This should be a vital question to all concerned in the welfare of his community and it should be an established rule that one should not seek for things in other parts that he can get at home.

Origin of "Helpmeet."

"Helpmeet" has had a curious history which began with the biblical account of the creation, when "the Lord God said, It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an help meet for him." That is to say, a fit assistant. But the two words have become curiously combined into a "helpmeet," and they are constantly used as one. Moreover, the confusion is increased by the corruption of the words into "help-mate," and Macaulay writes of the waiting woman who was "generally considered as the most suitable help mate for a parson."

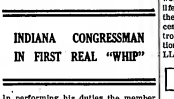
DEMOCRATIC CHARM OF PRESIDENT'S DAUGHTER

ALICE—of course there's only one Alice in the world, you know—doffs her imperial coronet, and all her spiritual regalia of crown princess, every Tuesday afternoon, "and acts as common as any other congressman's wife." This last phrase is a quotation from a cheerful country rubberer in a purple satin basque who figured largely upon the scene at Mrs. Longworth's latest free at home.

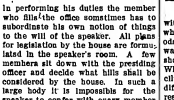
The Longworth reception rooms are on the second floor of the musty old mansion on Eighteenth street, that reeks ancestrally. One mounts on a blue velvet carpet honestly "shabbed out" on the sharp edge of every step, to the presence of the princess paramount. She advances to meet you, democratically, with outstretched hand, on the threshold of a vast apartment that has an old English solidity about its appointments — nothing chirpy or gay or young bridish. You think of the christenings and funerals and solemn ceremonials as soon as you enter. Dead and gone kinfolks gloom down on you from faded canvases on the wall. One of the defunct dames seems to be embracing a lamb or something, with a wreath around its neck. Ladies always wore bedowered jambs in those days, when they had their pictures taken.

Miss Alice converses with gracious impartiality in a rather deep-seated voice, happy to please. She is undoubtedly a stunning young woman, her girlish curves growing sotter and sweeter day by day.



REPRESENTATIVE JAMES E. WATSON, of Indiana, Republican "whip" of the house, will go down into history as the first real "whip," according to the international acceptance of the term, who has ever served in that body.

Speaker Cannon is partially responsible for the innovation and when he picked out Representative Watson for that job he had in mind a set program.



Under the new regime the whip in the speaker's representative among the majority members of the house.

INDIANA CONGRESSMAN IN FIRST REAL "WHIP"

In performing his duties the member who fills the office sometimes has to subordinate his own notion of things to the will of the speaker. All plans for legislation by the house are formulated in the speaker's room. A few members sit down with the presiding officer and decide what bills shall be considered by the house. In such a large body it is impossible for the speaker to confer with every member of the body and so under the new arrangement it is the practice for members to reach the presiding officer frequently through the whip.

PATHETIC SCENE OCCURS AT THE WHITE HOUSE

A STORY of a Good Samaritan was revealed at the White House the other day. It had to do with the tender and imperishable friendship of one woman, prosperous and happy, for another, close to destitution and afflicted with a physical ailment which has made self-support impossible.

Lady Cook, formerly Tennessee Claflin, now a resident of England, was the benefactress and Olive Logan the recipient. Tennessee Claflin and Olive Logan, now past the middle score of life, were intellectual and famous women in America years ago.

Tennessee Claflin crossed the ocean, married an English nobleman of wealth, and her friend Olive drifted along pursuing literary work. But Miss Logan did not prosper and a short time ago a New York newspaper told of her want for the necessaries of life. Lady Cook, her old friend, saw the story and immediately cabled funds. Then she came to America to see and aid her in person.

"Are you really so poor?" asked Lady Cook.

"Indeed it is pitiful," replied Miss Logan.

"Never mind," replied the beneficiaress, "we'll go down to Washington and see the president and then I'll have good news for you."

They had a long chat with the president. Lady Cook said she had promised not to reveal the president's views, and Olive Logan said she was so deaf that she could not hear what he had said.

"Judging from his expression, though," she declared with pathetic pride over an old hobby of hers, "he seemed to favor woman's suffrage. Lady Cook and myself would like to get a hearing before a congressional committee, but I suppose she has not time to stay."

"No," responded her companion with a smile, "and nother have you, for you are going back to England with me and live the rest of your life at my home."

"Eh?" replied Miss Logan, dazed and bewildered.

"England," shouted Lady Cook with her mouth close to Olive's ear. "Home with me—you're going abroad—understand?"

But Miss Logan understood. They disappeared down the White House driveway with Lady Cook again shouting the good news into her old friend's ear.

EVIDENCE of the use the general public is making of the great library of congress is to be found in the record of visitors to the building during the last fiscal year. The visitors numbered about 812,000. This was a daily average of 2,242 in the 362 days on which the library was open to the public.

The only days on which the great bronze doors were closed throughout the 24 hours were July 5, the funeral day of John Hay, July 4 and Christmas. On other legal holidays and Sundays the building was open from two to ten o'clock and on week days from nine a. m. to ten p. m., excepting Saturday afternoons in July, August and September. Almost a double force is required for the building, which is open virtually day and evening the year around.

GREAT POPULARITY OF LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

April brought the largest number of visitors, the daily average for that month being 3,101, and March was a distant second, with a daily average of 2,449. The day visitors to the library in April numbered 61,532, and 41,398 persons saw or used the library after six o'clock in that month. The largest number of visitors in any one day was 5,281, in April, and the smallest 444, on one of the hottest days in July.

An idea of the size of this library may be obtained from the statistics for last year, which showed a gain in the number of volumes of 34,626, bringing the number of books on the racks up to 1,379,244. The total of books, pamphlets, maps and charts and pieces of music added last year was 81,385.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

A GENEROUS MILLIONAIRE

William Pryor Letchworth, of all New York state philanthropists, stands first in the hearts of the people, although other millionaires may have given more lavishly of their wealth. He has just presented to the state Glen Iris park, to be the "Yellowstone" of New York.

This beautiful tract extends three miles on both sides of the Genesee river and contains three falls. The first cataract, known as the Upper falls, tumbles over a ledge of rock 71 feet high and goes roaring down to the middle falls, near which Mr. Letchworth has his home. Here it plunges downward for 107 feet between walls of rock 350 feet high.

First and last Mr. Letchworth spent nearly $500,000 upon the estate, acquiring additions whenever an opportunity offered. He built roads and pathways and summer houses, disposing everything to display to the grandest possible advantage the natural beauties of the place.

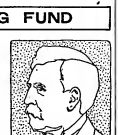
At Canadea, not far away, stood the old log council house of the Senecas, a tribe of the famous and warlike Six Nations who once ruled New York as their domain. Mr. Letchworth caused it to be transported, log by log, to his estate, where it was again erected, the position of each log in the original structure being determined by a number. There in 1872 the last council of the Senecas was held. The Indians wished to make Mr. Letchworth their chief, but he modestly declined the honor. They insisted, however, upon adopting him into their tribe.

Mr. Letchworth was a manufacturer and wholesaler in Buffalo 48 years ago. He is now 84 years old. About 25 years ago, when Rockefeller and Carnegie were on the threshold of their careers, Mr. Letchworth was worth more than either. He retired with a million dollars and devoted his life to others. Had he kept on making he might have been a rival of the money kings, but it is doubtful if his life could be called as great a success as it is to-day. He served 25 years on the state board of charities, introducing scores of reforms in prisons, asylums, orphanages and other institutions. In 1893 the University of New York conferred upon him the degree of LL. D. "for distinguished services to the state."

INVENTS WONDERFUL LIGHT

Walter G. Clark, of New York, is credited with the invention of the new "Heilon light," which promises to revolutionize our lighting methods. The Heilon light was developed in a curious way. Mr. Clark conceived the idea for a light that should be much cheaper than the incandescent. When not in his laboratory Mr. Clark likes to climb mountains, and while pondering over a difficult point that threatened to stop his progress he explained his theory to his friend, Prof. Herschel C. Parker, the champion mountain climber of America. Prof. Parker, some time later was struggling up Mount McKinley, the highest peak in America. When he reached the top he could not keep the thought of Clark's light out of his mind, and here the solution of the problem suddenly entered his mind. Prof. Parker returned to Columbia university and he and Clark worked together until they perfected the new light. The heilon will give the same amount of illumination as the ordinary electric incandescent, with a consumption of less than one-third the electrical power.

Walter G. Clark was born in Salt Lake City, and after leaving school devoted his time to electrical engineering on the Pacific coast. Then he came to New York and took charge of the electrical engineering department of the Ansonia Brass and Electric company. It was thought out a new form of electric transmission conductor, which made long-span transmission possible and which was one of the notable feats of electrical development in 1904.



BRITISH LADY BOUNTIFUL

The Duchess of Roxburghe is appearing in a new role—that of Lady Bountiful. Heretofore she has shown no great prodigality in expending the Goelet millions, but at Christmas she opened her purse-strings wide, as though bent on making amends for neglected opportunities and establishing a record. And she succeeded. Her gifts and benefactions to the servants and employes on the duke's estate, and the poor and needy in the vicinity of Floors castle, represented an expenditure of over $20,000. Tons of toys were ordered by her from London, Glasgow and Edinburgh shops and distributed with lavish generosity. All in the neighborhood who could advance any claim to be numbered among the poor were regaled with a sumptuous Christmas dinner. The popularity of the duchess has risen enormously in consequence. The canny Scots are hoping that having established such a reputation, she will continue to live up to it.

The duchess is having built a miniature zoo at the Floors castle, feeling she must do something to enliven the dull place. The historic seat of the Kers is the gloomiest and most castle in a land noted for the ghostliness of its mansions. Floors looks more like a barracks or a prison than a country seat, but Roxburghe will live there nine months out of the 12, and the duchess accepts the situation with the best possible grace.

STEWARD OF BIG FUND

Rev. Frederick T. Gates, chairman of the general education board to which John D. Rockefeller has given $43,000,000, was the son of a poor Baptist preacher in Broome county, New York. The man who to-day enjoys the full confidence of the oil king, worked his way through college. He was a plowboy in Kansas, a clerk, and cashier in a western bank.

He entered the ministry and took a charge in Minneapolis. He raised $50,000 in six weeks for a college in Owantonna, Minn. He was made executive officer of the American Baptist Education society. He raised $400,000 for a new university in Chicago and then got $600,000 from John D. Rockefeller.

Mr. Gates was left free to devote his entire time practically to education and Mr. Rockefeller's other philanthropies. He is still a Rockefeller representative on the board of the Missouri Pacific road and has private interests in that and other corporations.

Mr. Gates is big, broad-shouldered and in the prime of manhood. He has enjoyed excellent health, although always a hard and persistent worker.

Rockefeller soon discovered that Gates was a shrewd business man. The minister was invited to take a desk in Mr. Rockefeller's private office and become his personal representative in his benevolence and render such assistance as he could in looking after Mr. Rockefeller's private and personal investments.

Round About New York

Gossip of People and Things in the Great Metropolis

JEROME A PAST MASTER IN THE ART OF COOKING

NEW YORK.—District Attorney William Travers Jerome, who is conducting the prosecution of Harry Kendall Thaw, besides being an able disciple of Blackstone, is a past master in the art of cooking. Possibly there is nothing, aside from grilling a witness, from which the stalwart lawyer derives more pleasure than in broiling a steak or preparing some fancy dish. Jerome likes to fry, boil and broil, and it is said while he stands over the gas stove in the kitchen of his apartment doing a spring chicken or a canvasback duck to a nicety he often thoughtfully outlines his campaign for the following day. Mr. Jerome and his able helpmeet live in a small apartment uptown.

The home of the prosecuting attorney, while it consists only of a few rooms, has all the modern luxuries. Sometimes, after a strenuous day's battle in the court, and after he has given audience in his office on the third floor of the supreme court building to persons representing every occupation in life, Mr. Jerome boards a subway car and, going to his home, with the assistance of Mrs. Jerome, prepares the evening meal. The maids in the Jerome apartment are always in clover when the lord of the household is seized with the notion to cook. The maids simply have to see that the steak or roast is ready, or that the vegetables are within reach for the cook.

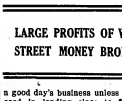
"The $12,000-a-year cook," as Mrs. Jerome calls her husband, is as fastidious about his cooking utensils as he is with the seasoning of a Welsh rarebit or a salad. His assortment of pans, gridirons, pots and steam cookers is said to be the most modern to be found in any New York grill room. Mrs. Jerome is also of a mechanical and inventive turn of mind, and some of his kitchen utensils were devised by her. While at home he delights in discussing cookery, but when away from his office he absolutely refuses to talk law.

MARK TWAIN TO WEAR WHITE EVENING CLOTHES

WHEN Mark Twain's tailor completes his new evening clothes and the humorist dons them he will look like a life sized marble statue of himself.

The genial author, who recently confessed to having passed his seventieth birthday, has long been in rebellion against the somber claw-hammer effects introduced from the court of France, and his objections have taken form.

The outfit now under construction is of broadcloth, but it is of snowy white from top to bottom. It will be supplemented by a Spanish cape of the same material. All will be lined with white silk and faced with the same material.



When arrayed in all his glory the writer will have white enameled shoes, a gray hat, and white studs and buttons. The only embroidery on the suit will be a white zigzag on the edges of the waistcoat and a white silk braid down the trouser legs. The general cut of the clothes is not greatly different from the conventional evening clothes.

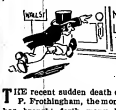
Mr. Clemens announced a year ago that he would thenceforth wear white because it corresponded to the original costume meationed in "Adam's Diary:"

"I am 70 years old," he said, "and I reckon that's old enough so that I can wear about what I please."

Care of his all white wardrobe, which consists of 15 suits, is no easy task for the humorist. He is obliged to send two of them to a cleaner every week.

FACTORY GIRLS TO MEET RICH SOCIETY MATRONS

WOMEN who work in the factories of this city and their employers will be invited to meet in the homes of society women and discuss the relations between employer and employe, so as to establish a better understanding and improve conditions, if the plan suggested by Mrs. Clarence Burns, vice president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, is carried out.



Ever since the Civic Federation suggested a similar movement in Chicago, and Mrs. Potter Palmer threw open her mansion to the labor union men and their employers, Mrs. Burns has had the matter under consideration.

"What the Civic Federation and Mrs. Potter Palmer did for the workingmen of Chicago we want to do for the working women of New York," said Mrs. Burns.

"There are nearly 100 women's unions in this city with a membership of thousands. By bringing these workers and their employers together on an equal footing we can do much to better the conditions of the poor working girls.

"Of course, the women in whose houses the meetings are held must be prominent in order to draw the people. However, it would not be absolutely necessary for them to have the meetings in their homes. The meetings might be held in some hotel, under the patronage of prominent women.

LARGE PROFITS OF WALL STREET MONEY BROKERS

THE recent sudden death of Howard C. Prothingham, the money broker, has brought forth many interesting stories concerning the fortune he made and lost in Wall street and the vast sums that are handled annually by the money brokers of New York. Prothingham started in as an office boy 35 years ago at three dollars a week and for the last 15 years is said to have cleared between $75,000 and $100,000 a year in commissions.

The money brokers of Wall street receive a commission of 1-32 per cent. for negotiating time loans. This means a charge of $25 for renewing a $100,000 loan, whether it runs for 30, 60, 90 days or longer. The most influential money brokers of Wall street do not think that they are doing a good day's business unless they succeed in lending close to $1,000,000, which means a return to them of $320 for a day's work.

When the stock market is very active and the public is trading on a heavy scale, as it did during the excitement of the bull campaign in 1901. It is not an uncommon occurrence for a broker to lend out $3,000,000 or $5,000,000 in a day. Such business becomes exceedingly profitable.

As the practice of lending by out-of-town banks has grown from year to year until to-day it is estimated that between $300,000,000 and $500,000,000 belonging to out-of-town banks is often outstanding in Wall street loans when money rates are abnormally high, the activity of the money broker has been materially extended.

TEDIOUS INQUIRY ABOUT INSANITY

JEROME'S LONG QUESTIONING OF EXPERT WEARIES JUDGE FITZGERALD.

Is Thaw a Paranoiac?—Evans Admits Will Shows Such Symptoms—Prosecutor Still Laying Foundation for Lunacy Commission.

New York, March 2.—The insanity of adolescence, paranoia and the characteristics of "brain storms" occupied both sessions of the Thaw trial Friday, and when adjournment until Monday was ordered Dr. Britton D. Evans, one of the alienists for the defense, was still under cross-examination.

District Attorney Jerome's course in questioning the witness was somewhat baffling. During the greater part of the time he seemed desirous to have Dr. Evans unqualifiedly admit that Thaw suffered from paranoia, which is practically incurable. Again he brought from the witness the opinion that when Thaw armed himself he well knew that a revolver was instrument for self-protection, and when fired into a human body would produce death. Finally, the prosecutor wanted to know if the actions of a person suffering from a brain storm, or mental explosion, would be characterized by the calm, deliberate manner which Thaw displayed the night he shot Stanford White to death on the Madison Square roof garden.

Planning for Lunacy Inquiry.

The net result of the day appeared to be that Mr. Jerome is still laying the foundation upon which he may ask for a commission in lunacy to Judge of the present mental condition of the defendant. Even to the extent of greatly fatiguing the judge and jury, the district attorney dwelt upon the subject of adolescent insanity and paranoia, endeavoring to establish a relationship between the two and be-ing at last rewarded by Dr. Evans admitting that the defendant's will and codicil did suggest to his mind a paranoiac form of adolescent insanity. Adolescent insanity, it has been explained, is common in persons during the development period of life—from 10 to 40 years—while peranoia is a fixed insanity upon one subject—monomania.

Justice Fitzgerald indicated his fatigue at the three days' cross-examination of the expert when he at times began to question Dr. Evans about his knowledge of other instances of adolescent insanity in which resulted in acts of homicide. The allienist said there was a woman in his hospital for the insane at Morris Plains, N. J., who, in the midst of a brain storm, or mental explosion, had killed two of her children.

"How long has she been in the asylum?" asked Mr. Jerome shrnply.

"One year."

"Is she cured?"

It has been but eight months since Harry Thaw and Stanford White.

Dr. Evans said the woman had shown improvement; that her delusions were not so marked, but she was not cured.

Judge Grows Weary.

Mr. Delmas objected to this line of questioning.

"But, your honor," argued Mr. Jerome, "we are just getting to the point of this thing."

"Well, we have been a mighty long time getting there," wearily remarked the justice.

Mr. Jerome disclaimed any responsibility for the tedious length of the cross-examination, suggesting that the jurors was with the evasive answers of the expert.

"I am not saying whose fault it is" said Justice Fitzgerald, "but I repeat two have been a long time getting to the point."

As Mr. Jerome said the rule would cover the last questions of his examination the adjournment until Monday was ordered. Dr. Evans will again be upon the stand.

Thaw Accuses Jerome.

New York, March 1.—Harry K. Thaw enlivened an extremely dull session of his trial in the supreme court Thursday by giving out to newspapermen a brief statement in which he accused District Attorney Jerome of having made unprofessional remarks in court, asserted that his wife's testimony was absolute truth, and in conclusion declared that Mrs. Thaw's "natural real goodness" was above the comprehension of the prosecuting officer.

TRAIN DITCHED AND BURNED.

Bad Wreck on the B. & O. in Pennsylvania—Engineer Killed.

Connolsville, Pa., March 1.—Baltimore & Ohio train No. 48, eastbound, running 15 minutes late and 40 miles an hour, was wrecked Thursday night near Indian Creek, seven miles east of here.

The entire train, consisting of a combination smoking and baggage car, two day coaches and the private car of Robert J. Flaney, superintendent of the Pittsburg division of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, left the rails and, after running for 200 feet along the ties, was thrown down a ditch at the foot of the mountains, where the wreckage was completely burned.

The engineer was killed, the fireman fatally injured and the baggagemaster, express messenger, conductor and six passengers were seriously injured. About 80 passengers were more or less cut and bruised.

PLAN, TO STOP SUICIDES

SALVATION ARMY BUREAU TO BE OPENED IN CITIES.

All Persons Who Are Tempted to End Their Lives Will Be Aided and Advised.

New York, March 1.—Commander Miss Booth, the head of the Salvation Army in the United States, Friday will inaugurate anti-suicide bureaus in all the large cities of the country.

The plan follows one which has been in operation in London under the direction of Gen. William Booth.

The bureaus are designed to assist and advise any person contemplating suicide.

The New York bureau will be under the charge of Col. Thomas Holland, who will handle the cases of men, while Mrs. Brigadier Bovill will take charge of the women applicants. Each will be assisted by a large staff. An announcement which was issued Thursday night says:

"The Salvation Army extends an invitation to all distressed persons who are tempted to commit suicide to call at headquarters, or if unable to do so, write to either of the officers named."

The plan in London, according to the local army officers, proved immediately successful, resulting in the forming of bureaus in various continental cities in London, says the announcement, there were numerous requests for advice from people who contemplated taking their own lives. These included all classes and conditions of society from gentlemen wearing silk hats to Billingsgate crossing sweepers, and from ladies dressed in furs to the Magdalenes of Piccadilly circus, and several people of every shade of religious belief. The results have been astonishing. Within the first 11 days no fewer than 200 applicants were personally interviewed, and a large number of others reached by correspondence with advice and assistance.

NOW LAID TO INSANE MAN.

New Theory of Theft From the Chicago Subtreasury.

Chicago, March 1.—Latest developments in the looting of the subtreasury of the sum of $173,000 indicate that it was the work of an insane man who was and is an employe of the United States subtreasury. That the man, whose mind has become clouded, could have hidden the money in the federal building, is believed by employes of the subtreasury and is credited by the secret service operatives who for more than a week have been working on the solution of what promises to become one of the most remarkable mysteries ever encountered by the local treasury officials.

The man's name, it was reported around the government building, has been mentioned in connection with the theft almost daily since its discovery and the secret service men are said to be awaiting an opportunity to unearth the hiding place of the stolen fortune to make the arrest.

It was said that operatives do not think that any person with a well-balanced mind would steal bills of $1,000, $5,000 and $10,000 denominations. Without an accomplice in some bank in which these bills could circulate they would be absolutely useless.

BAILEY IS FULLY CLEARED.

Texas House Exonerates Him—His Abuses His Accusers.

Austin, Tex., Feb. 28.—By a vote of 70 to 40, out of a possible 128 votes, 18 members being absent, United States Senator Joseph W. Bailey was exonerated by the lower house of the Texas legislature Wednesday night of any charges of irregular acts in public life as alleged by Representative Cocke of the lower house in January 14, last.

The scene attendant upon Senator Bailey's entrance into the house after his vindication was most dramatic. His friends rushed in, cheering wildly, shrieking down the center aisle, and carried him to the speaker's stand.

Senator Bailey, while bitterly abusing those who opposed him, announced that he was going to continue as United States senator from Texas for at least three terms.

BANK CLERKS EMBEZZLE.

Two in Chicago Jail Accused of Stealing $10,000.

Chicago, Feb. 28.—Within two hours after the government authorities had been apprised Wednesday afternoon of a $10,000 defalcation in the Hamilton National bank, 89 La Salle street, Charles H. Thornton, note teller at the institution, and William W. Baker of Evanston were their way to the county jail to await a preliminary examination on a charge of embezzling the funds of the bank.

High living and a fast life are said to be the explanation of the downfall of the young men, who have been employed at the bank since its organization four years ago. They acknowledged their guilt.

NAW LOW FARE BILL IN KANSAS.

Topeka, Kan., March 1.—The senate Thursday passed the Noftiger anhilitate for the Bower bill. The bill provides that railroads shall sell mileage books of 500 miles or more at the rate of two cents a mile. The regular passenger fare, where a mileage book is not used, remains at three cents a mile.

The Wise Comet—Butt into that?

RECEIVER IS ASKED FOR MRS. EDDY

SON OF VENERABLE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE FOUNDER BEGINS ACTION IN COURT.

Calls for Accounting—Declares His Mother is Incompetent to Transact Business — Her Secretaries and Church Trustees Defendants.

Concord, N. H., March 2.—A bill in equity to secure an accounting of the financial affairs of Mrs. Mary Baker Glover Eddy, head of the Christian Science church, was filed in the superior court for Merrimac county Friday by Mrs. Eddy's son, George W. Glover, of Deedwood, S. D., and his daughter, Miss Mary Baker Glover, and George W. Baker of Bangor, Me., nephew and "next friend" of Mrs. Eddy.

The bill is directed against Alfred Farlow and other trustees of the Christian Science church in Boston, and Calvin A. Frye, Mrs. Eddy's secretary, Lewis C. Strang, her assistant secretary, and Herman S. Herring, first reader of the church in Concord.

Besides demanding an accounting of all transactions in connection with Mrs. Eddy's affairs, the bill asks for restitution in case any wrong-doing appears; for an injunction during litigation against interference with her property and business, and for a receiver.

In His Mother's Interests.

In a statement issued by former United States Senator William E. Chandler, special counsel in the action, it is declared that Mr. Glover is actuated by no spirit of disrespect to his mother, but believes that the proceeding is in her real interest. Mr. Glover says that the action is not directed against the religion or the Christian Scientists.

The statement further declares that Mr. Glover had long thought that his mother was growing too feeble in body and mind to attend to important business matters, but that for a long time his was unable to confirm this suspicion because those immediately about her seemed unwilling to allow even her nearest relatives in have an interview long enough to reveal her actual condition.

Early in January, it is stated, Mr. Glover during a visit to Concord was enabled to talk with his mother for three-quarters of an hour and, as a result, after due consideration he decided upon the present action "as an imperative duty too long neglected."

Alleges Mrs. Eddy Incompetent.

The action is returnable at the April term of the Merrimac county superior court, which convenes on the first Tuesday of the month. Specifically the bill alleges that the nominal plaintiff, Mrs. Eddy "by reason "by her next friend," is, and for a long time has been incompetent to do business or to understand transactions conducted in her names in connection with her property.

The next allegation is that the defendants have possessed themselves of her person and property and have carried on her business.

It is also alleged that having done this, knowing of her infirmity, they have become trustees for her of all property which has come into her possession and are bound to give account thereof and of all their transactions in her name.

It is further alleged that there is reason to fear that the defendants wrongfully converted some of her property to their own use, and that there are particular transactions of which an account should be given.

St. Paul Millionaire Is Dead.

St. Paul, Minn., March 1.—Thomas Foley, a member of the railway contracting firm of Foley Brothers & Guthrie, and rated as a millionaire, died here Thursday.

TRAINS COLLIDE, HEAD-ON SEVERAL PASSENGERS KILLED IN CONNECTICUT WRECK.

Special Bearing Gov. Woodruff and Militia Company Meets Disaster—Executive Escapes Unhurt.

Waterbury, Conn., March 2.—A passenger train on the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad and a special bound for New Haven met in head-on collision early Saturday morning a mile and a half below this city. Three persons are known to be killed, and it is reported that two others perished.

On the special were Gov. Woodruff and Company F, Second regiment, Connecticut National Guard. The governor was not injured. The soldiers had been attending a banquet in this city.

Owing to the location of the wreck the work of getting details progresses slowly. The number of injured has not yet been learned.

The trains came together with such force that the engines were smashed and the forward cars badly damaged. At the point where the accident occurred is a siding and it is supposed that one of the trains was to have taken the siding and wait until the other passed. Whether this was not done owing to a misunderstanding of orders is not known yet.

SHIP SUBSIDY BILL IS PASSED BY HOUSE

LITTAUER MEASURE WINS BY MAJORITY OF ELEVEN AFTER HOT FIGHT.

Beaten on First Ballot—Forty-one Republicans Vote with Democrats in Opposition—Most Exciting Contest in Many Years.

Washington, March 2.—It has been years since the house was the scene of so royal a battle between the two great parties as it witnessed Friday over the ship subsidy bill. The bill was passed but not until after it had been once defeated, and this fact in itself shows how close the alignment was.

When the first vote disclosed a majority against the measure, the Democrats and their Republican allies made the house ring with their cheers. There were several roll calls before the final favorable result was secured. The vote on the Littauer substitute was defeated on the first vote, ayes 154; nays 161.

The Democrats could not retain their lead, however, for on a vote to lay on the table a motion to reconsider, the opponents of the ship subsidy were defeated, 155 to 159, and the vote to reconsider the first vote was adopted, 164 to 154.

Then there were other votes, but immediately after the first ballot decisive began and on the final vote to pass the bill as amended, the work done by the Republican leaders during the height of the battle was made manifest. The bill was passed, 155 to 144.

On the final vote 41 Republicans voted with the Democrats against the bill.

Four Lines Subsidized.

Only four steamship lines are to be subsidized under the measure in the form finally agreed upon, and all of them are to sail for South American ports. One of the lines is to be from the Atlantic coast to Brazil; a second is to be from the Atlantic coast to Argentina, and the third Atlantic line is to be between the Gulf of Mexico and Brazil. The fourth line is to be from the Pacific coast to the Isthmus of Panama, Peru and Chili.

The annual subsidy for each of these lines is to be $300,000 for a monthly mail service, or $600,000 for a fortnightly service, except the Argentina line, which is to have $400,000 for a monthly service, or $800,000 for a fortnightly service. No American cities are named as tha ports from which any of the lines are to start, and the bill is so worded that the lines can touch at any number of ports in the United States.

Penalty for Delay Applied.

After the passage of the ship subsidy bill the general deficiency bill was taken up and passed. An amendment by Mr. Grosvenor of Ohio, was adopted giving to all employes of contractors on the trains and

On a point of order made by several members from the floor that the proposed reduction of mileage for senators and representatives from 20 to eight cents per mile was not out.

A bill was passed providing for the creation of an industrial peace committee which is to administer the law by which President Roosevelt received from the Nobel prize fund.

Denatured Alcohol Bill Passes.

The denatured alcohol bill passed the senate Friday by a vote of 65 to one. Senator Pettus, of Alabama, cast the negative vote. This action was taken after the committee amendment requiring the presence of a government storekeeper wherever alcohol is being manufactured had been defeated by a vote of 47 to 16. The bill as passed contains one amendment placed in it by the senate, that permitting rum to be denatured, and consequently the manufacture must be returned to the house for action. The bill is intended to make it possible for farmers to establish stills of limited capacity for the manufacture of alcohol to be denatured.

PEORIA MEN ARE IMPLICATED.

Tate Names Three More in the Dougherty Affair.

Peoria, Ill., March 1.—With the return of Chief of Police Wilson from Chicago, where he and chief detective Eddie Tate through a course of sweating, new developments in the robbery of the school board vault came Thursday. Suspicion points to three Peorians as being implicated in the deal to secure any confession Tate and Newton C. Dougherty. Chief Wilson declares that a full confession will be forthcoming from Tate as soon as a guaranty of immunity is given him.

Already the chief admits the story has been told by Tate to Detective Conick of the Chicago police department. Tate is said to have given Conick the names of the three who employed him to do the work. These names are being suppressed by Chief Wilson. He admits, however, that the charges implicate a Peoria attorney, an employe of the school board, and a member of the Peoria detective force. All three men are being shadowed and in the event that Tate makes a confession to Collins or Wilson they will be arrested immediately.

Senators Much Alike.

Senator Simmons, of North Carolina, and Senator Taliaferro, of Florida, look enough alike to be twin brothers. They are about the same size and build; each has a heavy crop of hair, which is kept closely trimmed, and their short, stubby mustaches are much alike. Both have dark eyes and there is probably not two pounds difference in their respective weights. If it were not for the fact that the Florida senator has a few more gray hairs in his head than his North Carolina colleague it would be almost impossible for the senate employes to tell them apart.

Long Sermons.

Mark Twain tells this story, the moral of which you may supply yourself: "I went to church one time and was impressed by what the preacher told me about the poor heathen that I was ready to give up a hundred dollars of my own money and even go out and borrow more to send to the heathen. But the minister preached too long, and my enthusiasm began to drop about $25 a drop till there was nothing left for the poor heathen, and by the time he was through and the collection was taken up I stole ten cents off the plate."—Southwestern's book.

Inducement to Undertakers.

The following advertisement appeared in a paper of a small town in Colorado:

"For Sale—An old established, well paying undertaker's establishment. The city is in a very unhealthy location, where the mortality is very great. There is only one doctor in the whole town. The deaths from fever alone pay the expenses, and the rest is clear profit. There is no competition."—Judge.

Hardly Likely.

Andrew Carnegie tells a story to illustrate what a Celt is always a Celt in Scotland as well as in Ireland. In a sermon preached in a small church in Glasgow the pastor, after inveighing against slothfulness, said, by way of climax, "Do you think Mr. Adams and Mr. Lee went about the garden of Eden with their hands in their pockets?"

Express Rates Reduced.

St. Paul—The following schedule of express rates was submitted by the railway commission and accepted by the express companies:

Distances.	Per 100 lbs.
1 to 15	$0.40
20 and over 15	.40
45 and over 20	.45
60 and over 45	.50
75 and over 60	.55
90 and over 75	.60
105 and over 93	.65
120 and over 106	.70
135 and over 120	.75
150 and over 135	.80
165 and over 150	.85
180 and over 165	1.00
195 and over 180	1.10
210 and over 195	1.20
225 and over 220	1.25
240 and over 250	1.30
270 and over 240	1.40
300 and over 270	1.50
340 and over 300	1.60
400 and over 340	1.70

Some of the cuts are very material. For instance, the old rate of from 50 to 75 cents per 100 weight for a 25-mile haul has been reduced to a flat rate of 40 cents, while the charges for short shipments, less than 25 miles, have been cut from a 40 to 60-cent basis to the flat rate of 40 cents. The old rate of from 80 to 75 cents per hundred weight on 50-mile hauls has been knocked down to a flat rate of 50 cents, while 75-mile hauls are reduced from 10 to 90 cents rates to a flat charge of 60 cents. On express weights less than 100 pounds the reductions average 25 per cent.

Hereafter a distance rate will be good only for 15 miles. For instance, the charge of 40 cents per hundred weight for a distance of 15 miles and under 20 cannot be extended so as to carry 40 or 50 miles as has been the custom in the past when it was considered advisable. This clause will make discrimination impossible, as no charges must be made on a mileage basis.

Beast Mangles Steers.

Mankato—A mountain lion, panther or other fearful wild animal made its presence known near this city by attacking a three-year-old steer on the farm of Columbus Ballord. It leaped upon the back of the steer and tore it badly and nearly killed it.

Mr. Ballard was in the barn milking at the time, but his attention was attracted by the stampeding of the herd in the pasture and their wild bellowing. The house dog, ordinarily courageous, slunk to the house panic-stricken.

Mr. Ballard got a lantern and with his hired man investigated and found the steer nearly dead and the rest of the cattle so excited that it took two hours to calm them. A tour of the timbered portion of the pasture revealed many tracks of a beast unknown, save by some strange animal.

"We have had reports of outbreaks of rabies since the first of the year," said Dr. Wood. "In Hennepin, in Dakota, Winona, Carver, Wright, McLeod, Crow Wing and Sibley counties. The cases have all started from mad dogs and the animals later affected being cows, horses, hogs, and at Winona a number of sheep."

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 25—Action by the senate late today assures the people of Minnesota a two cent per mile railroad fare from now on. The measure passed the Peterson 2-cent measure by a vote of 37 to 6, and as the house declared itself the other day, the passage of the bill by each body formally endorsing the measures of the other, is simply a matter of a few days. There is also no question that what the governor will sign the measure. Not only did the senate today pass a 2-cent law, but at the same time passed the Peterson antipass bill, 49 senators voting in its favor and not one against.

The two bills were a special order during the afternoon. The importance of the measures and the magnitude of a wordy combat, attracted a large number of people, the galleries being full and the well aisles in the senate chamber being occupied by onlookers.

Senator R. F. Aldrich of Duluth introduced another glib training school bill. He would have the legislature get out of the state on the subject by establishing the institution at his home town, Brainerd. The bill appropriates $100,000.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 27—These are days when committees are springing into importance in the legislature and doing more interesting work, sometimes, than is accomplished through the routine grind of the session. The special committee which is investigating ore lands and taxation has hurried a lot of officers of the law to Duluth armed with subpoenas for men prominent in mining operations in northern Minnesota. The committee recently returned from a junket over the range, on which trip they were feted and banqueted. Now that they have had their fun, the committeemen are going to settle down to real business and make a thorough investigation. Rumor goes that the committee is after information to prove that the $70,000,000 at which St. Louis county mines are assessed, is not a drop in the bucket compared with their real value.

The so-called Knutson committee, which is investigating the J. J. Hill ore land deal, has demanded that Louis W. Hill, son of the magnate, produce all the books and records of the Superior company which holds the lands at present for the Great Northern stockholders. There is an opinion around that the records will not be produced.

An interesting bill which put in an appearance today in the house was by Senator J. T. Ellwell of Minneapolis. It is a bill to appropriate $12,500 the next two years, $2,500 of the following year for maintenance of a now clinical hospital to be built and established at the state university, the donation and free of expense to the state. Walter J. Traak of Los Angeles gives $114,000 for the building, a memorial to Dr. Adolphus F. Elliott and Mary J. Elliott, his wife. The institution will be known as the Elliott Memorial hospital. In addition, the sum of the yearly income is raised a fund of $50,000 for the purchase of a site for the building.

Senator Seward is responsible for a bill to appropriate $1,500 from Farmers' Institute funds, for experiment in destroying weeds, a subject now receiving much attention, etc., on the Coteau farm in Lyon county under direction of C. G. Quigg, who for the past years has been so prominent in Farmers' Institute work.

The house committee on taxes this afternoon decided to recommend for passage important tax measures. One is the bill for a registry tax on mortgages, which it is estimated will bring $140,000 into the state treasury annually from Hennepin county alone. The other is the Tighe bill for a stamp tax on sales in grain produce exchanges. The house committee on judiciary has decided the Elmer E. Adams bill to abolish private banks, is unconstitutional.

St. Paul, Minn., Feb. 28—This was a day of small things in the legislature. This was especially demonstrated in the senate by the spending of nearly an hour on the merits and demerits of a bill calling for the muzzling of all dogs and the killing of dogs running at large unmuzzled. Senator C. A. Johnson offered an amendment exempting "police dogs" from the operation of the bill. Senator Farrington went so far as to remark he could "never look his dog in the face when he went home if he voted for that bill." Senator Frank Clague pronounced the bill "a measure to prevent the committing of murder." Senator Julius Cohen and others thought all wandering canines should be shot on sight, but the pathetic stories had their effect and the Johnson amendment was first voted down and then the bill killed, 41 against, 20 for it. The incident was amusing in view of the fact that the senators were really in earnest in their remarks.

The Standard Oil company came in for shots in both senate and house today. Senator Hinton introduced a bill prohibiting discriminations in trade or contracts between different sections of the state by the same trade interests. The bill, evidently an antitrust combine bill, went to the committee on illuminating oils. Thomas Brady introduced a resolution in the house which calls for a special investigation to see whether the Standard Oil company controls the oil market in Minnesota. O. P. Chamberlain of St. Paul catered to a "yellow" story in a St. Paul paper alleging that cruelties are practiced at the St. Peter hospital, by introducing a resolution calling for an investigation of the institution. James S. Spencer of the committee on hospitals, said he knew about the alleged case and that in truth the institution is all right. J. H. Dorsey characterized the story as "a lurid article from the mind of a fool reporter." The resolution was referred for the day on notice of debate. But little of importance were introduced today. One by Senator R. S. Durment permits cities of over 50,000 inhabitants to levy taxes for auditorium and sports facilities additional. Senator Witherstine presented a petition to impose a three per cent gross earnings tax on telephone companies. Senators Hall and Donaldson failed to secure jobs for appointments at $50,000 to enlarge Buffalo Creek for drainage of swamp lands mostly in Shibley and adjoining counties.

In the house a bill by Dalzell aims at preventing purchasing of supplies by the board of control outside the state. The objection to this measure is, it permits of combination of Minnesota jobbers on prices.

This evening in the senate chamber, a public hearing was given on the needs of the university, special stress being paid by university people on the necessity for a special three mills tax for the institution. President Cyrus Northrup made a leading speech in which he stated the teaching force of the university are working for almost starving wages; that students are being turned into limited room and that a goodly appropriation is essential if Minnesota students seeking higher education are to be prevented from going to eastern colleges.

St. Paul, Minn., March 1—A bill to benefit the miners of the state for strike-breaking purposes, was introduced in the senate today by Senator Farrington. The bill prohibits under penalty of a fine of $2,000 or one year in jail, the advertising or engaging in any way of labor under false pretenses, making a special provision that securing men for strike-breaking shall be considered under representation. The bill also makes it a felony to engage labor by misrepresentation and compels such labor to do guard duty with weapons.

The insane, indulged in lengthy debate today when the committee as a whole on the merits of the Glotzbach bill to exempt the attendance at the state school for deaf of deaf children when 6 years of age. E. S. Durment of St. Paul was the lucky one to whom which was not adopted to not make such exemption compulsory till the children are six years old. The bill was finally recommended to pass, after a minor amendment had been attached by F. Ellsworth, to the effect that deaf children be instructed along the lines of study followed in the public schools of the state.

The house today "sat down" on the Christensen resolution demanding the investigation of the Peter hospital for insane to find cruelties alleged in a "yellow" story published in St. Paul. In spite of objections by the author, the resolution was referred to the committee on hospitals to do as the committee of needed necessary relative to an investigation.

The compulsory school bill by Senator Sullivan put in an appearance in the senate today. It permits of establishing of county schools for instruction in agriculture, domestic science, manual training, and in normal instruction for teaching, by county boards of education. The bill will furnish two thirds of the cost of maintaining the schools and the state superintendent of public instruction shall approve the plans of buildings, etc. The bill is subject to local option.

Senator Dahman aims at calling a turn on trouble in the matters. It permits of the appointment of specialist inspectors of gas, electric light, and water meters.

In the house, John Dalzell introduced two bills of interest. One is to compel sleeping car companies to furnish safe receptacles for the deposit of valuables of travelers. The second bill prohibits the giving or receiving of passes by railroad companies, a twine introduced a measure to permit of the sales of prison twine outside of the state, to think the better competed with the trust.

The committee on forces and taxation of the house, has drafted a substitute bill for the Wilson measure creating a permanent tax commission. It establishes a commission of three members to serve six year terms and to receive salaries of $6,000 each a year. This bill is in advance of Speaker Couch compared with the provisions of the Wilson bill.

The senate and house both broke early today and adjourned till next Monday evening.

PROFITABLE DIPLOMACY.

"Doctor," said the lady, addressing the struggling young oculist, "there is something in the matter with my eye. I wish you would give me a thorough examination."

After she had undergone the various tests she turned anxiously to the specialist and asked him what he had discovered.

"I find that you are afflicted with a very common ailment," he replied. "In fact, nearly all people have it when the get along about your—"

Then he suddenly paused and pulled himself together, after which he continued:

"As I was about to say, nearly everybody has it in a greater or less degree, according to the circumstances. The trouble is in the optic nerves. I can easily remedy it with glasses. There was a time, you know, when the wearing of glasses was supposed to indicate age, but that foolish notion has been wholly cleared away. As a matter of fact, 50 per cent. of our school children really ought to be wearing glasses.

"Oh, doctor, do you believe it as bad as that? I see quite a case for prescription as soon as it is convenient, and I shall take pleasure in recommending you to all my friends. That idiotic doctor across the hall tried to make me believe that my trouble was due to my years. Really, I must—"

"Surely, madam, he must have been jesting. No oculist who knew the least thing about his business could make such an absurd mistake."

"Before I go let me hand you my check. I will sign it in blank, and you may fill it out as you think proper. Good-by. I'm so glad you were recommended to me."—Chicago Record-Herald.

In a Quandary.

"You are serving pure food now, aren't you?"

Thus spoke the regular customer.

"Why do you think so?" asked the proprietor of the restaurant.

"Because you have raised your prices."

"Huh!" exclaimed the proprietor. "That's right."

Then he stopped precipitately.

He couldn't answer the question plausibly without making a damaging admission.

So he merely shrugged his shoulders and passed on.—Chicago Daily News.

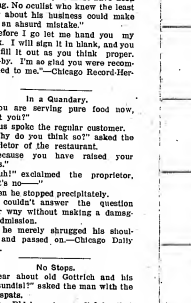
No Stops.

"Hear about old Gottrich and his new sundial?" asked the man with the pug nose.

"No. Did he get a sundial for that sunken garden?" asked the man with the ears.

"Yes; and he and his electrician conceal an rich light in a balcony above the sundial, which will work at night and on cloudy days."—Judge.

Women Afraid of Women.



Jinks—Have you ever noticed what spiteful things women will say of one another?

Blinks (married)—Yes, and I never could understand why they are afraid to make digs at a woman except behind her back, and yet they will rip out anything they please to a man.—N. Y. Weekly.

"We got along fine with the one we had yesterday. The one we had this morning left, and we haven't had a chance to get acquainted with the one that came this afternoon.

Losses All Fingers.

Bovey — Francis Kelly was so badly frozen that all his fingers had to be amputated. The young man was driving a team from Coleraine when the sleigh was overturned in a snowdrift and he knows ran away. The young man attempted to follow them, but, after running on, he lost his way and wandered about for hours. When he finally reached a house he was almost overcome by exposure to the cold and his hands so badly frozen that it was necessary to take off his fingers to save his life.

THE SUNBEAM.

BY W. G. HUNT,

Published every Friday, at [illegible]unbeam, Red Lake County [illegible]nnesota.

Subscription price $1.00 per [illegible]ar in advance. If not paid in [illegible]vance $1.50

[illegible]ntered as Second-class matter August 30, [illegible]5, at the post office at Sunbeam Minn, [illegible]der the Act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

The managers of the village of [illegible]Intosh for the past few years [illegible]d ought to point with pride to [illegible]e finanlal standing of that [illegible]llage and say, "sea what we [illegible]ve done." "Ain't we good fel[illegible]s to run a Village", into the [illegible]le so deep that they can't get [illegible]t.

The treasurers report for the [illegible]llage of McIntosh shows an [illegible]debtness of $30 32 03 but then a [illegible]ertain clikue have had the sat[illegible]sfaction of runing things down [illegible]here for the past few years, and [illegible]ey have run into the hole, and [illegible]ey will probaly drag the hole [illegible] after them at this election.

Editors of country papers often [illegible]eceive requests from the citys, or the standing of certain men [illegible] their locality, which is alwavs [illegible]ccompanyd by a stamp, and [illegible]eads, "your reply will be held in [illegible]trick confidence." Now sup[illegible]osing the man you were to re[illegible]port on had taken your paper, [illegible]rom three months to three years, and then sent you a refusal card through the post office, and never paid you a cent subscription, would you say to a stranger he [illegible] O. K. [illegible] won't, but always re[illegible]port him as a man that will "do" a fellow if he gets the chance.

The farmer that gets dis[illegible]contented on a new farm, sells off his stock, and moves to town to better his condition will surly [illegible] that he will regret [illegible] move. A farmer that has never done any other kind of la[illegible]bor, moving to town becomes a [illegible] of the 4th class; [illegible] to get [illegible] the ditch and dig for every dollar he gets. He can not do any kind of skilled labor at fancy prices and soon becomes envious of his more fortunate neighbor, who is prehaps a skill mechanic, and begins to wish he was back on the farm milking his own cows, selling the cream and getting his creamery check evrey mouth

What The Editer Gets.

The daily mail of the editors of country weeklies contains pam[illegible]phlets and circulars of a great varied nature at this time of the year.

All the law-makers send copies of their pet bills, asking to have them published with favorable comment. But not one of these savers of tho country say, "enclosed find $1.00 to pay cost of com[illegible]sition

The railroad send papers, circulars and books on their side of the rate question, asking publi[illegible], but not one cent accompa[illegible] the requests.

People with schemes, with something to sell and others who want to buy, all ask the aid of the editors, but none send a few "simoleons" to help tho editors.

From catalogue houses come requests of a like nature; another has a good thing for the farmer; some have plans to bring the nation out of the clutches of the trusts, all ask the country editor to publish for them, gratis, long-winded articles which will benefit only those asking the favor, and not one has enclosed a bit of the taints that buys bread.

Our waste basket is large but it is taxed daily to hold all the "please publish this with favora[illegible]ble "comment" that it receives. —Red Lake Courier.

Both Sides Talk.

Red Lake Falls papers says that Thief River Falls poked the expense of the supreame court case onto the tax payers, and the Thief River Falls papers say the county comissioners have hired attorneys at the expense of the tax payers to fight Their county seat fight. The Thief River Falls News says.

"At the meeting of the county commissioners held this week a resolution was passed authorizing the employ of F.A Grady and C. E Boughton to conduct the county case. No limit is put to the amount they may receve for their services and the county will probably have to pay any bill they may render. The passing of this resolution means that the county seat case will be deleyed for sometime, and will have to go to the supreme court again.

It further means that Red Lake county will have to pay the bill of the Red Lake Falls side of the case in the future."

There is a local war in Plummer, in which the bussiness men are trying to starve out their local paper. The place is pretty small, and the general location not the best for a newspaper, and by making a united effort the business men of that town ought to be able to drive a newspaper out of there. If they could succeed in stopping the publication of their present paper, we would bet dimes to doughnuts that they could not get another newspaper located there for a number of years, as a newspaper man looking for a location would not be apt to locate in a town where the people have the reputation of driveing their local paper out of business because its editor did not agree with Tom, Dick, and Jerrie, on local issues.

The New and the Old.

A Chicago girl said the other day in an address before a girls' club: "I advise all of you to be new women. I urge you to pay no heed to the gibes about new women that are continually being uttered by men. It isn't a fine type of man that gibes at the new woman. You know the story of the man in the county jail? 'What brought you here, my poor fellow?' a missionary asked. 'I married a new woman, sir,' the prisoner groaned. 'Aha!' said the missionary. 'And she was so domineering and extravagant that it drove you to desperate courses, eh?' 'No,' said the prisoner. 'The old woman [illegible]'"—[illegible]

A Hint For Young Playwrights.

The young man wrapped up his rejected play with a rather sad smile.

"Thank you for reading it," he said. "It is the sixth unsuccessful drama I have written."

The manager of 117 theaters gave him an encouraging pat on the shoulder.

"Look here," he said. "I'll tell you what you want to do. You want to begin less ambitious. Begin with a one act curtain raiser. And after you've wrote this here curtain raiser send it around with the sentence printed on the cover, 'You can play this for nothing.' I guarantee you'll get a hearing then. Ten to one, by gosh, you'll get played."

"A good idea," murmured the young man.

"That's what it is," said the great manager. "I got it from Sidney Grundy. It's how he began. His first play was a curtain raiser, 'A Little Change.' He said on it, 'Play it for nothing.' And the Haymarket theater took him up."

Spectacles Demoralizing.

A certain Somerset vicar made himself notorious by the vigor with which in the seventeenth century he inveighed against the use of the newly invented optic glasses, since they perverted vision and made all things appear in an unnatural and therefore a false light. Microscopes and telescopes, with their array of lenses, he declared, to be impostors, since a man could not see so well with two pairs of spectacles as with one. Some asserted it to be sinful to assist the eyes, which were adapted by Providence to the capacity of the individual, whether good, bad or indifferent. "It was argued that society at large would become demoralized by the use of spectacles. They would give one man an unfair advantage over his fellow and every man an unfair advantage over every woman, who could not be expected on aesthetic and intellectual grounds to adopt the practice."—London Spectator.

Snow and Rain.

The first man to whom it ever occurred to find out how much rain was represented by a given fall of snow was Alexander Brice of Kirknewton, who in March, 1765, made a simple experiment with the contents of a stone jug driven face downward into over six inches of snow. What he learned was that a greater or less degree of cold or of wind when the snow falls and its "lying a longer or shorter time on the ground" will occasion a difference in the weight and in the quantity of water produced, "but if," he added, "I may trust to the above trials, which I endeavored to perform with care, snow newly fallen, with a moderate gale of wind, freezing cold, will produce a quantity of water equal to one-tenth part of its bulk." So that a fall of snow of ten inches represents a rainfall of one inch.—London Chronicle.

Put His Foot in It.

On one occasion in Scotland a guest arriving rather late at a country house was quartered in the haunted room. Although professing to be a skeptic, like many others, his courage vanished with the light. Determined, however, to protect himself as well as possible, he placed a loaded revolver under his pillow and awaited events. When the clock struck midnight he saw a fleshy hand at the end of the bed, and, steadying his nerve, he addressed the visitant thus: "If you do not instantly remove your hand I shall fire without further warning." He coming three and then discharged the bullet. A howl of pain which aroused the household followed, and it was soon discovered that the successful marksman had shot away two of his own toes.—London Throne.

He was bundled into a dark ran and driven away on his long journey. Day after day, week after week, it travel. Upon arrival he stepped out into the presence of the czar. All the time he had been driven just toward Siberia, but around and around St. Petersburg!

Polite Notice Boards.

At the hospital just opposite the entrance to the East India docks and the Blackwall tunnel—under the Thames—notice boards are set up asking the drivers, for the sake of those who are ill within, to walk their horses past the building. That is a common enough request, but what gives it a peculiar interest here is that the carter, having complied or not with the modest demand, is confronted at the other corner of the building by another board, saying, "Thank you, driver."—A Wanderer in London.

An Event.

"What's the matter? You look as if something extraordinary had happened."

"Something extraordinary has happened. Do you see that street sweeper—the fellow who is stirring things up?"

"Yes. What about him?"

"When he saw me coming a moment ago he stopped and didn't try to chase me with dust and germs."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Of Course He Did.

"If I were nominated for the presidency of the United States," said Mr. Bumpeck, "I would"—

"You nominated for president of the United States?" his wife interrupted. "What are you thinking of? You mean if we were nominated, don't you?"

Then he wisely changed the subject. —Chicago Record-Herald.

Too Serious.

While a great many periodical fiends take themselves too seriously, entertaining an altogether exaggerated opinion of their ability and worth, not many nowadays go to the extreme length of the German whom the English poet Coleridge met at Frankfort. He always took off his hat when he ventured to speak of himself. Were this practice to become general what a number of people would be permanently bareheaded!

FRANKLIN'S GARB.

The Philosopher Often Taken For a Quaker, Though He Was Not One.

Benjamin Franklin was often taken for a Quaker, but the philosopher did not belong to the Society of Friends. Franklin, being a simple citizen of Philadelphia, wore clothes of a fashion set by the Quakers, a plain gray or drab suit. He continued to wear this costume while he was in France. Once, when his court suit was not ready, he appeared at his presentation at the court of Louis XVI. He became the fashion in France and indeed in nearly all Europe, and it was at one time the proper thing for young republicans and litterateurs to dress a la Franklin. The German historian, Schlosser, describing Franklin's appearance in the French drawing rooms, speaks of "the simplicity of his external appearance, the friendly meekness of the old man and the apparent humility of the Quaker." In truth, the humility and the meekness were mostly matters of appearance, and the Quaker aspect was only an aspect. Franklin was brought up by his parents in Boston in the Congregational church and was intended by them for the ministry. When he went to Philadelphia, he says in his autobiography, he paid his "annual subscription to the only Presbyterian minister or meeting we had in Philadelphia." But he ultimately avows his dissatisfaction with Presbyterian doctrine and later was quite as ready to welcome and assist Whitefield, the Methodist, with whom he also openly disagreed. Later still he took a pew in an Episcopal church, but he was never a communicant Episcopalian. He says much about religion in his autobiography, explains how he became a deist in his youth, but abandoned the doctrine because it was not useful in making men good. His own creed he declares to be belief in God and in the immortality of the soul. "Though my schemo was not wholly without religion," he writes, "there was no mark of any of the distinguishing tenets of any particular sect."—Youth's Companion.

HE GAINED HIS POINT.

To Do It the Actor Spoiled the Play and Lost His Position.

An American actress who had toured in England was telling her experiences and related an incident that amused her. She said:

"In a play produced in the provinces there is a scene in which the hero strikes the villain, who slinks away without seeking to defend himself. One night in a large manufacturing town the young fellow who played the deep devil scoundrel remarked to the leading man before the curtain rose:

"I say, old chap, I've got my fiancee out in front tonight with her father and mother. Now, of course they don't know anything about our business, and I'm afraid it would rather hurt me with them if I received a blow and got away in the usual cowardly fashion. So, dear old chap, can't you omit the blow tonight?

"But, my boy, the management will fine me 2 shillings!"

"Well, I'll pay the fine."

"Oh, rest! That's all very well for you, but what do I get out of it? Nothing but a bad name with the powers that be."

"Oh, well, I'll give you 2 shillings extra, or, better yet, you hit me as usual, and I'll hit back! They'll fine me, not you, and I'll give you the 2 shillings besides. You see how I'm situated. I shouldn't like the girl to think me an with the character I play. Outsiders are so fussy that way."

"On the contrary," the manager said, that night when the hero cried, 'Sir Daniel Deepwater—or something of that sort —base coward of a noble race, take that!' Sir Daniel not only took that, but gave it back with such force that the pit in cheers rose at him. Indulging his relatives to be by marriage, and he walked off the stage in triumph.

"I am sorry to add to his situation, but he gained his point."

An Odd Animal Community.

Natural enemies of the animal world are sometimes found living together in extraordinary communities. One of this is a volume on animal quotes this experience of an observer: "On one occasion when ferreting I bolted a fox, cat, a stoat and several rabbits and rats out of the same earth. The fox bolted first, after giving the ferret a wide berth across the field. From the effects of which it died an hour later. Next came the rabbits, then the cat, both of which I shot. Then followed the rabbits and rats promiscuously. It was a large burrow on the bank of a deep, dry watercourse and often held a fox when I ferreted it afterward."

Talking Through a Human Body.

To talk through a human body or a row of human bodies, for the matter of that, is one of the weirdest of the electrician's feats. If a telephone wire be severed and the two ends held by a person, one in each hand, but far apart, it is quite possible for two individuals to carry on a conversation through the body or the medium as readily and as distinctly as if the line had been properly connected.

Johnny's Horrid Finish.

"If you don't quit eating so much, Johnny," exclaimed Mrs. Lapsling, hitched at the gluttonous propensities of her youngest, "the first thing you know you'll be a regular dilbostert!"—Chicago Tribune.

Here is an interesting little puzzle and anagram which was published in a newspaper several years ago:

Put on her — and to market went.

Each of the blanks is to be filled with a word of four letters, and the same letters occur in each of the five different words. These words are consecutively "vile," "veil," "vell," "Levi" and "vive."

The Snitzen Party

A Pennsylvania Dutch Story

By Sara Ellnaker Ambler

(Copyright, by Joseph B. Bowles.)

Leah Lapp had been busy fixing up the winter kitchen ever since the early dinner hour of half-past ten for the special occasion of the snitzen party for her 17-year-old daughter Soosie.

It was a rule for snitzen parties to come early and stay late. By seven o'clock Leah Lapp's neat kitchen was almost uncomfortably full of Amish boys and girls about Soosie's own age. Every one at this interesting party came armed with a paring knife. When all were seated in prim rows around the walls of the room, Leah Lapp smilingly gave to each one a bright tin basin filled with Red Streaks and Yellow Sweetings.

"Vara Benjie Stoltz?" asked Lissy Pisnek of Benjie's sister.

"He's coorning the horse he shood," answered Debbie.

At the mention of Benjie Stoltz by Lissy one might have observed a rosy color on Soosie's face deepen. She cast a scornful look at Lissy as she whispered to her nearest neighbor: "She's bald off. Yen I haf ask for te boys I be ashamed of me. She can haf him."

The apple snitzen now began in earnest. It required two and one-half bushels of seived and sliced apples to thicken one barrel of cider. The young folks knew this, and that until the sliced task was completed they could not go to the barn to play and feast on lassoachts and cider.

What with paring and much talking and laughing Benjie's horse trotted into Jacob Lapp's lane without being heard. Nor did they notice when Benjie himself stood in the kitchen door, a broad smile on his round face, until he called out loudly: "Ve gates all te while."

Everybody laughed louder than ever, and Lissy Pisnek exclaimed, with a coquettish toss of her head: "Vell, now, Benjie, ain't you ashamt vunst?" and she edged closer up to Debbie to show him there was room and welcome for him to sit next to her.

Benjie evidently had other plans. With a direct gaze at Soosie, who was sitting a "Red Streak" so busily she could not see Benjie's glance, he picked up a stool and placed it close to her chair. After removing his flat-crowned, broad-rim hat carefully with two hands, he sat down, reading, calmly: "I beleef I sits ona haer. Var's my saitzen-tish?"

Leah Lapp, whose duties as hostess kept her busy going back and forth, hurried to him with a tin dish that was beautifully bright, a very newest one in her possession, a fact Benjie commented upon with inward satisfaction.

"Soosie," called Benjie, softly edging his stool still closer to her chair, "here is a nice snitz."

At this appeal, Soosie perked her head to one side as saucily as a robin, as she exclaimed: "Geel it to Lissy. She vants it!"

Benjie began to pare apples gloomily after Soosie's rebuff. "Sho don't fun me so vell," he thought. "She meaned it Saturday nights," he almost groaned out loud, "ven I trew te pebbles up to her window and she wouldn't coom town. She said she afeered to dattle not be sleeping. 'Tain't so. She cares not if I sleep or na sleep; if she likes mo she cooms town and talks wis me in te best room." Benjie heaved a sigh.

All this had not been lost on Lissy, although she was seemingly very gay with Bevy Steinhauer all this time. She felt so sorry for Benjie.

The big tubbuls of apples were emptied at last, and the great basket-fuls of snits were ready to put in the cider in the morning. This elder Jacob Lapp was now "holling down" in the outside fireplace.

All the work being done, Leah and Jacob Lapp now went off to bed, according to custom, to allow the young people to enjoy themselves.

"Ve vill to harn gaes," said Soosie, "Now coom all," and she led the way, swinging a lantern back and forth.

Then Christie Lapp, Soosie's brother, said in his slow way: "I tink 'Old Maids' is a nice play for te vee-mins and te mens."

"Yah, vill it is," said Soosie, eagerly. "'Coom on, Amos," and she marched down the barn floor, linking arms in his, to the evident disgust of Benjie, while they all sang the time honored dogerel. When they came to the words: "So give us your arm," in the song there was a med scramble for a new partner, and some one was sure to be left standing alone—the old maid. Twice this fell to Soosie, and she stood in the middle of the circle, flushed, mortified and quite forlorn, while Lissy walked proudly past with an air of triumph, once on Benjie's arm and again on Amos' arm.

Benjie felt keenly for her, and in spite of her apparent indifference to him he could hardly keep from rushing to her and rescuing her from her disagreeable position. The love he held deep down in his honest heart was for Soosie, and Soosie only, and when some one suggested playing "Sassy Little Rogue" Benjie gladly seconded it, intending to choose Soosie for his partner before any of the other girls.

But Soosie refused to play at all, and said she must go for the cakes and cider, as it was growing late.

When she came back to the barn Benjie thought he saw traces of tears on her face, and he went to help pour the cider into the tumblers. Soosie's hand trembled as she held them for him, and he asked, with some concern: "Vat is te matter, Soosie?"

"Go away," Soosie answered him, shortly, but there was a sob in her voice that went straight to Benjie's simple heart.

"Ach, tese veemin," he mused, as he scratched his cropped head. "Mebbe she do like me," he reasoned, "and is ashamed. I ask her, and makes her say it if she do."

The saitzen party broke up with a grand parade around the barn floor to the time of "Bingo," after the feast of cakes and cider.

Benjie lingered behind the rest, and when he gave Soosie "good-night" at the big barn-yard gate, he said, with more determination in his tone than the remark warranted: "Te fasnachts vas goot, Soosie."

"So?" assented Soosie, greatly pleased. She prided herself upon her good cooking. "Vell, ten, coom and get some more just like tem."

"Yen, Soosie?" asked Benjie, catching on to this straw thrown out so artlessly.

The color began to come and go in Soosie's face with charming grace, as she answered, shyly: "Vy, coom to te butter-holling is to morning. Dere be much work in de morning."

Benjie was entirely right about the extra work the apple butter boiling made in the household. Three o'clock in the morning often found the family up and at it.

Benjie started to the apple butter boiling so early the next morning that the light just dawning in the east seemed a grey mist of a most melancholy hue. Finally he reached Jacob Lapp's gate.

The leaping flames of the big fire in the summer kitchen fireplace were casting weird shadows on the walls of the house. There was Soosie herself standing alone, pushing the big stirrer briskly back and forward among the bubbling apples and blessing cider. She did not notice his approach.

"Coom and Get Some More Just Like Tem."

She looked up quickly, to see an expression on Benjie's face that she had never seen there before. It confused her. "Goot morning, Benjie," she said, shyly.

He longed for a chance to take hold of the stirrer to get beside Soosie.

"I can stir so goot, Soosie," he remarked, with an air of assumed indifference.

Soosie flushed, and hung her head. Then fingers touched, and then Benjie's hand covered Soosie's a prisoner on the stirrer. He tingled all over and forgot entirely about moving the stirrer.

"Stir te butter, Benjie," she protested.

The smell of scorching cider began to fill the air.

Jacob Lapp scented it as he was eating his breakfast, and called loudly from the door of the summer kitchen: "Ho, budwarick hurns! Stir, Soosie, stir!"

"Stir, Benjie, stir," pleaded Soosie. "Indeed coach is sorry."

But Benjie, jubilant now, picked the stirrer clear out of the kettle, and said, softly: "Say you like me, Soosie. I know you does, but say it, and ten you ain't ashamed some more."

"Dattle's" heavy, halting steps were heard approaching.

"Oh, he's a-coorning," panted Soosie, half in terror and half in ecstasy at Benjie's confession of love for her, and she grasped the big stirrer and plumped it into the bubbling apples with one hand, while with the other she pulled Benjie's face close down to hers, and whispered, softly, but loud enough for Benjie to hear, "I tink you be nice, Benjie, and I like you some morea as I do myself. Now will you stir."

And Benjie willed to stir.

MORTALITY REPORT

CONSUMPTION AND PNEUMONIA HEAD DEATH LIST.

Statistics Show That the Greatest Number of Deaths From Lung Trouble Occur in Winter.

The Bureau of Census has published a report presenting mortality statistics for the United States for the five calendar years 1900 to 1904.

As shown in the table, tuberculosis of the lungs and pneumonia were by far the leading causes of death. The greatest number of deaths from lung trouble occur during the winter months. Colds are so prolific of lung trouble that they should not be neglected. Persons with weak lungs should be especially careful.

A noted authority on lung trouble advises that as soon as a cold is contracted the following simple treatment should be given. The ingredients can be purchased from any prescription druggist at small cost and easily prepared in your own home. It is said to be so effective that it will break up a cold in twenty-four hours and cure any cough that is curable.

Take one-half ounce Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure), one ounce of Glycerine and eight ounces of good Whisky. Shake well and take in teaspoonful doses every four hours.

Be sure that the Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) is in the original half-ounce vials, which are put up expressly for druggists to dispense. Each vial is securely sealed in a round wooden case, with engraved wrapper, with the name —Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure)—guaranteed under the Food and Drugs Act, June 30, 1906, prepared only by Leeds & Chemical Co., Cincinnati, O.—plainly printed thereon. There are many rank imitations of Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) which are put out under various names, such as Concentrated Oil of Pine, Pine Balsam, etc. Never accept these as a substitute for the Pure Virgin Oil of Pine, as they will invariably produce nausea and never effect the desired result.

Where It Hurt Most.

"Young gentlemen," said the college president, notwithstanding the fact that he was addressing the students, "young gentlemen, hazing must be stopped and stopped at once. It has injured the college more than any of you ever could guess. Only last week a gentleman declined to give us $1,000,000 because there was so much hazing. Hazing is a bad thing financially."

"How about morally?" asked the student.

"Awaw, really, there may be something in that, but—nw—the—the point has never come up, and I—aw—am not prepared to answer. But the point is worth considering."—Chicago Journal.

My feet were swollen, my eyes puffed, and dizzy spells were frequent. Kidney action was irregular and the secretions highly colored. To-day, however, I am a well woman, and I am confident that Doan's Kidney Pills have made me so, and are keeping me well."

HEREDITY IS NOT ALL.

Physicians Now Believe Less in Transmission of Disease.

Medical men are coming round to the view that it is the personal history that is of primary importance, or, in other words, that a man's own manner of life, his record of health, and his circumstances should be more carefully considered than the illnesses that his ancestors died of. Dr. Rahegast, a medical examiner for insurance companies, who is well known in the profession which he adorns, and of high repute in the north of England, has devoted much thought to this question of heredity from a life insurance point of view. In his opinion it is not an evil disease that is transmitted from one generation to another, but organization, or "humanity," as he expresses it. Any member of the human family may suffer from any disease to which humanity is subject, and when an individual does not it is the cause of the ailment that must be inquired into. Exposure to this or that set of conditions brings varying results. If the body is exposed to one set of conditions it will take on gout; if to another, consumption; if to a third, cancer; and so on.

CHILDREN TORTURED.

Girl Had Running Sores from Eczema —Boy Tortured by Poison Oak— Both Cured by Cuticura.

"Last year, after having my little girl treated by a very prominent physician for about five months for eczema, I resorted to the Cuticura Remedies, and was so well pleased with the almost immediate relief afforded that we discarded the physician's prescription and relied entirely on Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment, and Cuticura Pills. When we commenced with the Cuticura Remedies her face and limbs were covered with running sores. In about six weeks we had her completely well, and there has been no recurrence of the trouble.

"In July of this year a little boy in our family poisoned his hands and arms with poison oak, and in twenty-four hours his hands and arms were a mass of running sores. We used only the Cuticura Remedies, washing his hands and arms with the Cuticura Soap, and anointing them with the Cuticura Ointment, and then gave him the Cuticura Resolvent. In about three weeks his hands and arms healed up. So we have lots of cause for feeling grateful for the Cuticura Remedies. We think the Cuticura Remedies are a valuable household standby, living as we do twelve miles from a doctor."—Mrs. Vincent Thomas, Fairmont, Wildcat's Ridge, Tenn., Oct. 13, 1905."

Admiral Stateeman's Stature.

A German journalist visiting in Washington, himself a man of stalwart proportions, was rather inclined to look with something like contempt on the many undersized statesmen he saw in the national legislature. But when Secretary Taft bore down upon him he gasped in wonder. They were introduced and after a short chat the secretary departed. Just as he disappeared from the German's admiring gaze the towering form of Congressman Sullowey bore into view. The German looked at the New Hampshire man long and earnestly. "He is bigger than any man in his imperial majesty's Uhlan guards," said the foreigner in a tone of chagrin, "and I shall write one whole letter about him."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Restored Mrs. Robbins To Health and Also Cured Her Daughter of Anaemia.

Mrs. Jocie Robbins, of 1121 Clay St., Decatur, Ill., says: "I was weak, thin and troubled with headaches. My appetite failed so that I did not relish my food. I was unable to do my work because my limbs pained me so and my feet were swollen. I got numb and dizzy, my tongue seemed at times to be paralyzed so that I couldn't speak distinctly. My extremities, when in this numb state, felt as if some one was sticking needles into me all over their surface. Through my sufferings I had such a poor appetite that I couldn't sleep. Many times I awoke with a smothering sensation.

"When the physician's remedies failed to benefit me I began to look for something that would. Later, Mrs. McDaniel, of Decatur, recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to me and I at once purchased some. I was greatly encouraged when I saw they were helping me and gradually, because every time she went out doors she would call or drop in and would take cold and cough. But Dr. Williams' Pink Pills brought color to her cheeks and strength to her body."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

THE CANADIAN WEST IS THE BEST WEST

FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The testimony from thousands of the best farmers in the United States who have settled in the last few years in Western Canada, and have increased in value and in prosperity beyond their expectations, is sufficient evidence to any man that he can do the same. Write for pamphlet, "Last Best West," and reduced railway rates, to Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada.

Some of the Advantages

The phenomenal increase in railway mileage—1901, 1,738 miles; 1902, 2,127 miles; 1903, 2,249 miles; 1904, 3,000 miles; 1905, 4,000 miles—and the consequent increase in land values, are matters of interest to all.

HORTICULTURE

CUTWORMS.

Something About these Enemies of the Gardener.

Cutworms are not properly worms at all, but the caterpillars of certain small night-flying moths, which lay their eggs in masses or strips on the twigs of trees, says Montreal Herald. The minute larvee, or caterpillars, hatched from these eggs descend into the soil and remain there during the day, and in most cases spend the winter there, and are ready to attack early vegetation. They are very voracious, and work only at night, cutting the plants off at the level of the ground and destroying far more than they can eat. They attack wheat, Indian corn, oats and all the cereals, as well as garden vegetebles. Some kinds of cutworms ascend trees by night and cut off leader leaves and buds, descending and hiding in the early morning. By day they hide under the surface of the soil, where each patch of withering vegetation marks their hiding-places. In vegetable beds these spots should be dug over and the upturned worms killed; holes made with a hoe or rake handle furnish favorite hiding-places by day, and thus serve as traps to catch many a worm.

There are a great number of kinds, and some of the worst are introduced species from Europe. One of the most widely distributed and destructive is the spotted cutworm, shown (enlarged) in the accompanying illustration.

CARE OF TREES.

The Relation of Pruning to Fruit Production.

Pruning so as to maintain a balance between fruit production and wood growth is of vital importance to the fruit grower, for upon such balance success or failure depends. In nature the trees come into close contact with other trees and a struggle for existence between them results, the stronger once crowding out the weaker. In cultivation, this struggle for existence between trees is eliminated, and they are given an opportunity to develop without much competition. It is obvious that under such conditions, the natural tendencies and functions of the trees are often thrown out of harmony.

If the soil is very fertile, or especially rich in nitrogen, the wood producing functions tend to crowd out the fruit-producing functions, or, if the soil is poor, fruit production is encouraged at the expense of wood production, and the vitality is affected. This may result in premature death. Often under conditions such as these, intelligent pruning may correct the difference.—Prof. F. P. Sandsten.

TIMELY FRUIT TOPICS.

In selecting varieties for family use have in succession from early to late. In this way you can have apples the year round.

Never plant a peach tree over one year from the bud but good stone healthy stock 4 to 6 feet high with clean bark and clean roots free from root galls.

I prefer to plant one-year-old apple and pear trees when I can get strong 4 to 6 feet whips. Such trees have a strong robust habit, a strong individuality and are the very cream of the nursery.—Dr. J. H. Funk, Berks Co., Pa.

When picking over potetoes or apples save the small ones or those partially decayed for the hens. We think it pays better than to feed them out to the cows. Boil and mix with the mash or throw a few raw ones into each pen in the middle of the day.

The winter peach blight which has been serious for several years in parts of California is caused by a fungus. It attacks the buds in late winter and early spring. Spraying with bordeaux mixture four to six weeks before growths start in the spring is usually effective.

Strawberries Fruiting Too Early.

It is generally conceded poor policy to allow strawberry plants set in the spring to bear fruit the following summer. Allowing them to fruit will weaken the plants by pollen exhaustion and seed production and perhaps result in killing them. All newly set strawberry plants should be relieved of their buds and blossoms just as soon as they appear. Pinch or cut them off and it pays to do it.

SOME WIVES ARE DIFFERENT.

Quiet Cynicism, or Good Honest Row —Which is the Better?

"Mast men," said the man of experssace, "think it must ha awfully nice to have a wife who takes things as coolly as Dave Potter's wife takes them; but others, more discriminating, prefer a good honest row to her style of quiet cynicism. The wey she behnved the other day when she found a letter in Dave's pocket from a girl is an exemplo of her method.

"'I don't see,' wnas this girl, 'how on earth I can ever live without you.'

"Dave's wife reed thet gush, and a lot more just like it, without aver turning a hair.

"'Well,' she said, quietly, 'that girl is a fool. If she knew you as well as I do she would he wondering how on earth she could ever liva with you.'

"And that, in the opians of the discrimsating few, cuts a whole lot deeper than a camman, everyday rumpus."

Mr. Pickens has a large number of fine chickens at different walks in the county, and is getting together the 150 for the $996 order.

The Mugger's Attendants.

While clambering up I noticed what looked like the hulk of a ship, about 400 yards away, says a writer in the London Field. It turned out to be a monster crocodile; it must, without exaggeration, have been 27 or 28 feet long, and in its close vicinity were five or six small muggers, looking like a bodyguard. I was afterward told by an old Cawnpore resident that they actually act as such, and give warning of any approaching danger to their overlord.

How Pineapple Should Be Taken.

The reputation of the pineapple has suffered because it has been eaten in too large quantities at a time and the fibrous part has been swallowed with the juice. To obtain the full digestive value of the juice one quadrant of a slice helf an inch thick is ample at one meal. It must not be cooked and should be just ripe. The preserved fruit has practically no digestive possibility.

COFFEE THRESHED HER.

15 Long Years.

"For over fifteen years," writes a patiest, hopeful little lile. woman, "while a coffee drinker, I saffered from Spinal Irritation and Nervous trouble. I was treated by good physicians, but did not get much relief.

"I never suspected that coffee might be aggravating my condition. I was downhearted and discouraged, but prayed daily that I might find something to help me.

"Several years ago while at a friend's house, I drank a cup of Postum and thought I had never tasted anything more delicious.

"From that time on I used Postum instead of coffee, and soon began to improve in health, so that now I can walk half a dozen blocks or more with ease, and do many other things that I never thought I would be able to do again in this world.

"My appetite is good, I sleep well, and find life worth living, indeed. A lady of my acquaintance said she did not like Postum, it was so weak and tasteless.

"I explained to her the difference when it is made right—boiled according to directions. She was glad to know this because coffee did not agree with her. Now her folks say they expect to use Postum the rest of their lives." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

WHAT WESTERN CANADA DOES.

Satisfactory Yields of Wheat and Good Prices.

Dundurn, Sask., Sept. 20, 1906.
Mr. W. H. Rogers, Canadian Government Agent,
Indianapolis, Ind.
My Dear Sir:

When you were at our place in July I promised to write you what my north quarter made per acre. You will remember it was all sown to wheat. Well, I finished threshing yesterday and received from it an average of 43¼ bushels per acre—testing 64½ pounds per stroked bushel. The wheet is the best sample I have ever raised —so uniform and even in size. You may kaaw it was a good sample when I tell you that I have already sold 2,000 bushels of it for seed to my neighbors. This year has been my best effort in farming during my life. My wheat totaled 9,280 bushels and my acts nearly 5,000.

If you remember I painted out to you a helf section lying just west of our house and joining my upper quarter on the south, which I said I should heve in arder to meke one of the best farms in western Cneeda. I am very glad to be able to tell you that I now own that helf section. My ambitian now is to be able to market 20,000 bushels of wheat next year. If some of those good, hanest Hoosiers could heve been with me during the last two weeks and could heve seen the golden grain rushing dawn the spout into my wegon and then could have seen it in great piles in my granaries, I feel sure they would have been forced to acknowedge there is no better farming country in the world than this. I mey just say thet I have done all my farming with eight head of horses and one hired men except during harvest and threshing. This year I proved to my neighbor that the Hoosiers, when once "woke up," can raise grain equal to the best Minnesata farmers. His best yield was 42¾ bushels per acre, so you see "old Indiana" is holding the rthan this year.

Yaurs very truly,
N. E. BAUMINK.

I have never seen described the woodman's method of using a blanket, however. Lia flet on your back. Spread the blanket aver you. Now raise your legs rigid from the hips, the blanket, of course, draping over them. Lower your legs, wrap up your shoulders and go to sleep. If you roll over one edga will unwind but the other will tighten.—Stewart Edward White in Outlag.

TIRED AND SICK YET MUST WORK

MRS. AUG. LYON

"Man may work from sun to sun but woman's work is never done."

In order to keep the home neat and pretty, the children well dressed and tidy, women overdo and often suffer in silence, drifting along from bed to worse, knowing well that they ought to have help to overcome the pains and aches which daily make life a burden.

It is to these women that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, comes as a blessing. When the spirits are depressed, the back and head aches, there are dragging-down pains, nervousness, sleeplessness, and reluctance to go anywhere, these are only symptoms which unless heeded, are soon followed by the worst forms of Female Complaints.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

keeps the feminine organism in a strong and healthy condition. It cures Inflammation, Ulceration, displacements, and organic troubles. In preparing for child-birth and to carry women safely through the Change of Life it is most efficient.

Mrs. Augustus Lyon, of East Earl, Pa., writes:— Deer Mrs. Pinkham:—"For a long time I suffered from female troubles and had all kinds of aches and pains in the lower part of back and sides, I could not sleep and had no appetite. Since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and following the advice which you gave me I feel like a new woman and I cannot praise your medicine too highly."

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Out of her vast volume of experience she probably has the very knawledge that will help your case. Her advice is free and always helpful.

The Value and Importance of Ethical Remedies.

Remedies which physicians sanction for family use, as they act most beneficially and are gentle yet prompt in effect, and called ethical, because they are of Known Excellence and Quality and of Known Component Parts.

To gain the full confidence of the Well-Informed of the world and the approval of the most eminent physicians, it is essential that the component parts be known to and approved by them, and, therefore, the California Fig Syrup Company has published for many years past in its advertisements and upon every package of its genuine, the perfect purity and uniformity of product which on demand in a laxative remedy of an ethical character are assured by the California Fig Syrup Company's original method of manufacture, known to the Company only.

There are other ethical remedies approved by physicians, but the product of the California Fig Syrup Company possesses the advantage over all other family laxatives that it cleanses, sweetens and relieves the internal organs on which it acts, without disturbing the natural functions or any debilitating after effects and without having to increase the quantity from time to time.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of Syrup of Figs, and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent of family laxatives, and as its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well-Informed of the world to be the best of natural laxatives, we have adopted the more elaborate name of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtlessly it will always be called for by the shorter name of Syrup of Figs; and to get its beneficial effects, always note, when purchasing, the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package, whether you simply call for Syrup of Figs, or by the full name, Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, as Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is the one laxative remedy manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Company, and the same heretofore known by the name, Syrup of Figs, which has given satisfaction to millions. The genuine is for sale by all leading druggists throughout the United States in original packages of one size only, the regular price of which is fifty cents per bottle.

Every bottle is sold under the general guarantee of the Company, filed with the Secretary of Agriculture, at Washington, D. C., the remedy is not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act, June 30th, 1906.

ON SECRET SERVICE

True Stories of Experiences in the State, War, Treasury and Postoffice Departments.

By COL. JASPER EWING BRADY

(Late Censor of Telegraphs and Chief Signal Officer, U. S. A., Santiago de Cuba.)

ESSENCE OF QUININE

"It's chance, I tell you, more chance than anything else that works these so-called intricate cases to a successful conclusion."

Col. Cheney was talking with Sid Guthrie on matters general when the above remark was made.

"That's all true enough, Col. Cheney, but you know plenty of cases where intuition and perspicacity have helped you and me wonderfully."

True enough, Sid; both these qualities help up to a certain point, but you'll find out bull luck is the decidinc factor."

Scuse me, kunnel," said the ever faithful Jeff, poking his head in the door, "but Mistah Pughlit is out heah, an' says he's anxious to see yo'."

Seems to me, Jeff, every one impresses you as being 'powerful anxious' to see me. But Pughlit's all right; show him in."

"Yas, sah," said Jeff, bowing out.

Bob Pughlit was inspector in charge of the post office department at Chicago and was one of the best and brightest inspectors in the business. He and Cheney had been together in government work and were fast friends. Cheney knew Pughlit's visit at this time could only mean one thing—"a case"—and he was not sorry, because things had been some. What slack lately. Cheney's blood was just a trifle sluggish and he needed a bracer. In a jocular way Guthrie had told Cheney to "get married," but the colonel was still "heart whole and fancy free."

"Hello, Bob," said the colonel as his visitor came in. "What brings you round this time of day?"

"Pretty serious case, Jack, and I received an order this morning from Wickery, chief inspector, to take the matter up with you. I'm not sorry to do it, either."

"Must be pretty serious, Bob, if you can't fathom it." This was not said in a flattering way. Cheney meant every word of it. On more than one occasion Cheney had said: "Bob Pughlit is the best natural detective in the business, and I'd sooner have any other sleuth than he after me if I'd committed a crime." But even natural detectives sometimes get up against it, and Pughlit was no exception.

"Well, Bob, I'll help you all I can, though I don't promise any results," smiled Cheney.

"You never do promise results, Jack, but you generally get some of them. Just the same."

Pughlit lighted a cigar and Cheney waited. Guthrie, of course, had left. He knew if Cheney wanted him he would let him know in short order. Col. Cheney waited for Pughlit, well knowing he would get all the details in sequence.

"It's a peculiar case, Jack," said Pughlit. "You know there are a good many mail routes out west, where the mail is carried by stages. Of course the Northern, Central and Southern Pacific roads are through, but they run straight across states and as yet have no tributory lines amounating to anything."

"Yes, I know that, Bob," said Cheney.

"There's a stage line out in Montana and Dakota, which runs through good territory. There are a number of fine ranches and several booming towns in the section. There are no banks to speak of, and most of their business has to be done by registered mail. St. Paul is the first point where banking facilities are carried on, but even that city is not much used, the ranchers and traders preferring to do their business in Chicago or New York."

Cheney began to see the trouble, but waited for Pughlit to continue.

"On this line of which I speak there are 22 post offices, all doing a registry business. Now, Cheney, to get down to business, these registered letters on that line are being tampered with and money extracted therefrom. That's the gist of the story, Jack. Go ahead with your questions."

"Thank you, Bob, only a few." He thought for a moment and then said:

"Theo robberies come at seemingly stated times?"

"No, not at all. One will take place and of course we are active thereafter and the crook lays low, and two let up a little. We can't watch one place only, as you well know. Last week there was a fine steady of robbery out there, and the chief went in the air about it. So did I, and his instructions for me to put you on the case were gladly received."

"Yes, I see. How long between the last robbery and the one previous?"

"Two months."

"You say, Pughlit, there are 22 post offices on this route? Does each postmastar have access to the registered pouch?"

"Yes, he does. You see, Cheney, only one registered pouch is carried, and at each office it is opened, new matter added to it, sealed up again and passed on."

"Just so; and these robberies, how are they discovered?"

"Well, a firm in New York receives a registered letter supposed to contain, say, $2,000 in currency. The letter of transmittal states that, but the letter really contains this paper cut to the size of a bill. The rest money is abstracted and the paper substituted."

"Really; then between tha time of the theft and the discovery a week or tea days elapses?"

"Right you are, Cheney."

"And if the thief wanted to make 'a get away' he'd have ample time!"

"Yes, but he doesn't make 'a get away.' He waits around until things quiet down and then mekes another haul. Why, Cheney, there's been over $25,000 taken in this manner. Th' last oao was' for $5,300, put up in five $1,000 bills."

"You've been over the route, Bob?"

"Yes, I've been over it more then once. I've tried decoy letters, laid traps, done everything I could, but I can't find him."

"Suspect any one, Bob?"

"No, I don't. Every postmaster ont there is a bright young chap who is growing up with the country. They all own traders' stores and are doing well. It's a puzzler, Jack, it truly is."

"No, it's not," said Cheeoy. Ordinarily he never asserted success until it wee an accomplished fact. But now he smiled confidently as he looked at Pughlit.

"Well, I edmire your confidence all right, Cheney, but don't be too sure, old man. Don't be too eure." Pughlit was just a bit nettled et Cheney's manner.

"I tell you what I'll do, Bob. I'll bet you a good dinaer I catch your thief after he makes his next haul, and I won't go out of this office to get him. All I want you to do is to let one of my men, Guthrie, for instence, in a post office inspector for a short while; let him go make an inspection of this route, then one robbery more and you can go out and bring in your men."

"I'll fix Guthrie out all right, but it looks darnlish queer to me. You're going to catch the men without leaving this office?"

"That's just what I'm going to do, Robert—for that dianer, eh?"

"All right, you're on, Cheney; and my appetite will not be small, I promise you that."

"Have it as big as you like, Bob; you'll pay for the food."

"Wait and see," said Pughlit, smiling. "Send Guthrie over; I'll fix him out all right. So long, Cheney."

"So long, Bob." Cheney thought for awhile, smiled coasiderably over his phase and then sent for Guthrie.

"Sid, you're e post office inspector. You're to go out and inspect 25 offices in Montana. Pughlit will fix you out in the proper way, but before you leave here for the west, see me again. I've got a few particular instructions to give you."

"All right, colonel. Post office inspecting is new in my line, hnt will make e stab at it all right."

Guthrie saw Pughlit that afternoon, and in the evening Cheney and Guthrie dined together. Cheney told him of his weger with Pughlit.

"Looks like a hard game, Jeck," said Guthrie.

"Not at all, Sid. You just listen to me and do what I say." Then Col. Cheney told his plen. He went over it very carefully, smiling all the while, and said he was satisfied he handed Guthrie a small black box, and said:

"Now you just do as I say, Guthrie, and you'll see a modern version of the spider and the fly."

Guthrie nearly exploded with laughter. "Well, of all the simple things I ever heard of, this beats 'em! Of course you'll haad the thief; can't help it. The plan is so infernally simple no one would even think of it. I'll bet you Bob Pughlit hits the ceiling when he finds out how the trick is done."

"Don't let any one know anything about it, Sid. Go out and make your inspection, do as I have directed and then come back here and wait for developments. You won't wait long, I'm a-thinking."

All right, colonel, you can count on me." And well did Cheney know that fact.

Cheney end Pughlit met frequently during the next few days and chaffed each other regarding the case.

"What fee are you going to charge the government for this hypnotic, telepathic demonstration you're going to give us, Jack?" asked Pughlit, with a tinge of sarcasm in his tone.

"About $5,000 and Guthrie's expenses west," replied Cheney, with a smile.

"The government will pay it if you run him down."

"He's as good as run down now, Bob."

"Wait and see."

Making an inspection of a stage route on which there are 22 offices is not a small undertaking, and Sid Guthrie was gone almost six weeks. Cheney heard from him frequently and knew the work was being well done. Pughlit became unmercifnl in his twitting of Cheney. He really believed he had a good one on the great detective.

Guthrie walked in the colonel's office one morning and laconically said:

"Howdy, colonel."

Sid Guthrie was always laconic.

"Hello, Sid: what luck?"

"No luck about it, colonel. You told me to do certain things and they have surely been done." Briefly he recounted all the work he had done while absent. Cheney listened intently, and when he had finished said:

"How about a 'haunch' on this case, Sid; got one?"

"Nary a hunch, colonel. Every one of those 22 postmasters is a wholesouled, decent chap. They all have good references and are prosperous. I tried to find one who was spending more than he earned. Of course every one out in that country buys and sells land and cattle, but to all intents and purposes these men are straight as trivets."

"I wonder," said Cheney, mustagly, "if any of the stage coach drivers could have a duplicate key?"

"Hardly possible, colonel. The stages are all pretty heavily loaded on that route and the driver wouldn't have much chance to do any trickary. No, sir; it's some one in a post office, but who, I'm dinged if I can tell."

"Did you carry out my final instructions about the lift—"

Cheney got no further. "Sure I did, colonel," replied Guthrie with a grin, "and thet ought to fetch 'em."

"I think so. Well, go report to Pughlit and then he eronad."

Pughlit came over a little later and made great sport of Cheney's failure. The colonel stood it for awhile, but finally said:

"Look here, Pughlit, laside of ten days or two weeks there will be another robbery. The report will come to you. When it does, bring all the papers, packets, etc., in the case to me and in three minutes I'll name your robber. Is thet cleer?"

"Clear all right, Jack, but I'm afraid age is creeping on you."

"Welt and see."

It was just three weeks to a day after thet that Pughlit came back.

"It came off all right, colonel, and here are the papers in the case." Cheney looked them over and cast all of them aside except the envelope from which the money had been extracted.

"I'll be back in a minute, Pughlit," He returned shortly and said: "Who's the postmaster at Boydston?"

Pughlit looked up quickly and said: "His name is Anderson, Jim Anderson's son, and a better chap never lived."

"That may all be so, Bob, but Abe Anderson was the man who extracted the money from this envelope—or it may have been some one in his office."

"No, it couldn't be anyone in the office, because Anderson handles all the mail himself. But, Cheney, why should that men steal?"

"Heag it, I don't know why he should steal; but he did it, all right."

"What proof have you?"

"All thet is necessary to convict him in eny court in the world."

"That may all be so, but what is it?"

"I can't tell you that now."

"But you expect me to arrest this man on just your say so?"

Cheney's eyes grew cold. Pughlit was crowding near to the border line of friendship. "Look here, Bob; I have lost some cease in my life, but I have never yet arrested the wrong man. Isn't that so?"

"That's true, Cheney."

"Well, then, you get Abe Anderson into this office, and if he isn't the guilty man I'll pay all the damages my court may assess for false imprisonment, and I guess I'm able to do that."

"All right, Cheney, I'll get him here, as you say, but I'm dubious as to the outcome."

It was ten days after that that Pughlit brought Anderson into Cheney's office. Anderson was a likely looking young chap and hedn't the least indication of a crook, unless it be his shifty eyes. Cheney never edmired a man who couldn't look you in the face. Anderson was not under arrest when he came in and acknowledged Pughlit's introduction courteously.

"Sit down, Mr. Anderson." Guthrie stood to the right and rear of Anderson and Pughlit sat behind the inspect were grouped around the colonel's desk.

Cheney came right to the point.

"Mr. Anderson, the registered mails on the route running through Boydston have been systematically robbed. Some time ago the government asked me to take the case. I agreed to do so and also offered to apprehend the thief without leeving my office. That's why I have asked Pughlit to have you come here."

Anderson poised as he heard Cheney's words and helf rose.

"Sit down, Anderson, sit down, and be calm. I know you're quick on the trigger, but there's a man standing behind you who is a damned slight quicker."

Anderson recovered himself and snapped out: "It's an infernal outrage to be brought in here and accused of something I know nothing about."

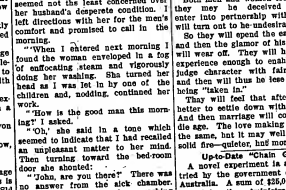
"Well, Mr. Anderson, if you know nothing about the matter you need have no fear at all, and I'll stand any damages you may call for. But you do know about the case, you know all about it. On the 28th of last month you opened a registered letter addressed to Kuhn & Co., bankers, New York. You steamed open the letter, extracted therefrom $2,000 and substituted a piece of paper in its place. You've done it before. But this time you're caught."

"Your saying so doesn't prove it."

"There's true as preaching, Mr. Anderson; but wait a moment. After you had extracted the money you resealed the letter, using a small mucilage bottle, such as will be found on any postmaster's desk. This mucilage I will state was doctored, as was its mucilage in every office on that route."

Anderson paled again; the coils were tightening around him. Pughlit eyed Guthrie, and the simple work of a great man. Guthrie was on to the whole game. Cheney proceeded.

"Some few weeks ago a post office inspector went over the route. My men Guthrie there was temporarily the inspector. I mean some postmaster was steaming open these registered packages and then resealing with mucilage. The small letters showed that. So I gave Guthrie a little black box containing 26 different bottles of essences. At each office he used a different liquid and made notations as to just what they were. You happened to be the victim of the lot—essence of quinine. Therefore, when the last robbery occurred and the evidence was brought in here, I merely opened the resealed fop, tasted the mucilage, and—the bitter quinine taste told there. Looking over the list of essences and offices Guthrie had prepared for me I very quickly found: Essence of Quinine.' Simple little thing, wasn't it, Mr. Anderson?"



"And God, man," gasped Anderson, "that's uncanny!"

"No," smiled Cheney, "quinine isn't uncanny, it's just bitter."

Pughlit was dumbfounded, but took his man sway.

The cheese was had some time later, and if opened with an "Essence of Quinine cocktail." Only it wasn't the ter.

DEATH FOUND HER RESIGNED.

Woman Bora Husband's Departure with Considerable Equanimity.

That death "hath no sting" for some people is evidenced by the story of a physician whose practice called him to the homes of many of the poorer families who labor in Chicago's stockyards.

"I was summoned to attend one man who was in the last stages of tuberculosis," he related, "and found him very low. His wife was a sturdy woman of vehement temperament and seemed not the least concerned over her husband's desperate condition. I left directions with her for the man's comfort and promised to call in the morning.

"When I entered next morning I found the woman enveloped in a fog of suffocating steam and vigorously doing her washing. She turned her head as I was let in by one of the children and, nodding, continued her work.

"'How is the good man this morning?' I asked.

"'Oh,' she said in a tone which seemed to indicate that I had recalled an unpleasant matter to her mind. Then turning toward the open door she shouted:

"'John, are you there?' There was no answer from the sick chamber. She turned to resume her washing and said: 'He's breathed his last.'"

FEW EARLY MARRIAGES NOW.

Men and Women Await Arrival of Years of Discretion.

The marrying age is steadily receding, and it is quite within the memory of probably that 41 will be regarded in the future as the equivalent of the present 21.

This is due to the keenness of the struggle for existence; a men desires to attain a position before marrying, and he finds the years slipping by with disturbing rapidity while he is about the business.

Both men and women too, fear that they may be deceived and many a woman is approached with the view who will turn out to be undesirable.

So they will spend the earlier years of their manhood or his single life will wear off. They will have gained experience enough to enable them to judge character with fair accuracy, and then will thus be less fearful of being "taken in."

They will feel that after all, it is better to settle down with a partner, and then marriage will come as a pleasing adjunct to a more satisfying life.

Up-to-Date "Chain Gang."

A novel experiment is about to be tried by the government of Victoria, Australia. A sum of $25,000 has been placed in the administration's estimate for the making of roads by prisoners through the "bush" in unsettled parts of the state. Each prisoner who does his work well will be paid a regular daily wage, the amount to accumulate until his release, when, as the premier says, he "will have a respectable sum with which to make a new start in life." The labor party is expected to oppose the use of bond for free labor.

YOUR OBLIGATIONS

SOME OF THE THINGS YOU OWE YOUR OWN TOWN.

YOU SHOULD BUY AT HOME

The Country Town Can Be Made the Very Best Place to Live in the United States.

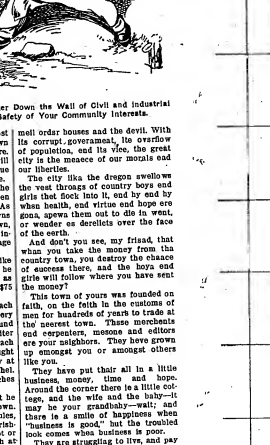
(Copyright, by Alfred C. Clark.)

A preacher who was a crank on doctrine worried his congregation by constantly harping on baptism. A brother that longed for a rest handed him a text he thought safe, "The way of the transgressor is hard."

"Friends," said the preacher, "there are three things suggested by this scripture: First, the transgressor. Second, his conversion. Third, his baptism. We will pass over the first two and come at once to the third."

Many reasons why people should trade at home rather than send their money away have been given, but suppose we pass them all by and come at once to the one vital reason:

It is the right thing to do.



For after all the fundamental question in every transaction is whether it is right or wrong. Not will I save money, but is it just? Not is it more convenient, but is it fair? Not whether it is a business, but whether it is good morals?

For you and I know, and all the world is coming to know, that not one dollar le ever saved or made by unfair; means that does not curse the possessor. And a man may be as dishonest in saving money as in getting it.

It it right to spend our money with the home town and wrong to send it away because we are under obligations to the home town, but not to the mail order house.

Financial Obligations.

In the first place the country is under financial obligations to the town. Of course the town is also indebted to the country, but the town can help but pay its debt, its very existence does that. Hence we are merely discussing the country side of the obligation.

Don't Let the Catalog House Batter Down the Wall of Civil and Industrial Solidity That Makes for the Safety of Your Community Interests.

Find 200 acres of good land almost anywhere that is 30 miles from town and you can buy it for $25 an acre. That same land within ten miles will bring $35, and within five miles of its value is $60, within two miles $85 an acre.

Thus that town that has a radius of ten miles on average of $35 dollars an acre. As that is about the age of country towns in general, you may figure that a town, as long as it is fairly prosperous, increases $50 per land around it on average per annum.

Now the farmer was had some time later, and if opened with an "Essence of Quinine cocktail." Only it wasn't the ter.

Not considering staple articles that the farmer buys, many of which can be shipped and sold anyway, the town as a local market is worth at least $75 a year to the ordinary farmer.

For example: This year the peach crop was so glutted no ordinary farmer would pay the express.

Around the little town in which the writer lives 4,000 inhabitants bought nearly every hushel in the vicinity at from 40 cents to a dollar a bushel. More than $2,000 was paid for peaches within three weeks.

That was clear gain which must be set over on the credit of the town. Plums, cherries, early vegetables, acres of little apple and peach orchards—the stuff that the farmer could not or would not ship he turns into cash at the home town.

So if a man owns 200 acres within reach of town, he will receive quite a handsome income from his trade with town, none of which he would receive from the mail order house.

Now, in fact, the town does not donate him that amount, the town was not built for the purpose of selling nearly every hushel in the vicinity at from 40 cents to a dollar a bushel. More than $2,000 was paid for peaches within three weeks.

That was clear gain which must be set over on the credit of the town. Plums, cherries, early vegetables, acres of little apple and peach orchards—the stuff that the farmer could not or would not ship he turns into cash at the home town.

So if a man owns 200 acres within reach of town, he will receive quite a handsome income from his trade with town, none of which he would receive from the mail order house.

Now, in fact, the town does not donate him that amount, the town was not built for the purpose of selling goods. Yet it is merely an actual cash benefit because the town is there; and but for the actual business obligations to return that benefit by spending his money at home.

It is not an obligation that the law would recognize, but it is one that appeals to those independent, clean hearted men of high honor who feel that perfect honesty demands that when benefits are received from stranger or brother, friend or foe, benefits should be returned.

Social Obligations.

It is right for the country to spend its money with the home town because of the social obligations between them.

The town is the center of your community. From it radiates your rural mail service; in it center your telephone systems. On the streets of the town you meet your neighbors Saturday afternoons and exchange news and experience. You go to it for a day of recreation when the snow comes, the thaw, or no holiday.

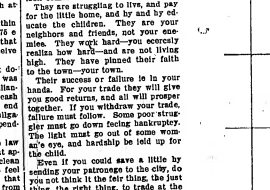
There during the winter lecture course you hear great orators and excellent musicians. The political rallies, the church conference or association are held there.

By and by in the pretty little village church, whose spire you can see from your farm, you are to preach the gospel. In the brick building two doors from the corner, a farmer boy with open face, and in his little frame two blocks away another son of the soil, just back from college, will begin the practice of medicine.

There is the high school to which you send your children, and there after awhile your daughter will teach.

And some day when you find the farm work too heavy for your age, and want to get near the children, you will build on that grassy corner lot two doors from the Methodist church and move to town.

Yes, the town is a mighty good thing to have, a pleasant thing, and the more you put into it the more you get out of it. For it grows according to the trade it gets and the more it grows the more it can buy and the higher will go your land.



The Moral Obligation.

But the last and strongest reason why it is right that the country people spend their money at home is the moral obligation.

The town is yours, yours to ruin or prosper. The same means of obligation should prompt you to support it, as prompted our old Teutonic ancestors in the forests of Germany to stand elbow to elbow in protection of their village. The same spirit of loyalty should inspire you as fired the Highland Scot to spend his blood for the welfare of his clan.

The country town with all its faults is the best governed, most enlightened, most moral, and happiest spot in American civilization. It is a good safe place. Not too swift, nor yet too slow. In touch with the current of progress, but not racing with greed. The place from which come nearly all the great business men, lawyers, scholars, preachers, physicians. The place where men are neighborly and helpful.

This town, my farmar friend, is yours. But the city belongs to the mell order houses and the devil. With its corrupt, goverameat, its overflow of population, and its vice, the great city is the menace of our morals and our libertites.

The city like the dregon swallows the very best lbraces of country boys and girls that flock into it, and by and by when health, and virtue and hope are gone, when even the will to die is went, or wender os derelicts over the face of the earth.

And don't you see, my frisad, that when you take the money from the country town, you destroy the chances of success there, and the boys and girls will follow where you have sent the money?

This town of yours was founded on faith, on the faith in the customs of men for hundreds of years to trade at the nearest town. These merchents and carpenters, mesons and editors are your neighbors; they have grown up amongst you or amongst others like you.

They have put thair all in A little business, money, time and hope. Around the corner there is a little college, and the wife and the baby—it may be your grandbaby—wait; and there is a smile of happiness when your business is good, but the trouble look comes whea business is poor.

They are struggling to live, and pay for the little home, and by and by educate the children. They are your neighbors and friends, and your enemies. They work hard—you scarcely realize how hard—and are not living high. They have planted their faith in the town—your town.

Their success or failure is in your hands. Support your town and it will give you good returns, and all will prosper together. If you withdraw your trade, patronize your mail order stranger must go down feeling bankruptcy. The light must go out of some women's eyes, and hardship be laid up for the child.

Even if you could save a little by sending your patronage to the city, do you not think it the fair thing, the just thing, the right thing, to trade at the little home town with those you know, those whose prosperity and happiness are your hands?

For it is written, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

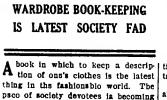
CHANDLER SUCCESSFUL AGAIN AS PEACEMAKER

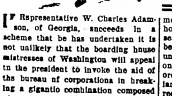


WASHINGTON.—The fears entertained that because of their sharp interchange of compliments recently over the race question Senators Spooner and Tillman would not again be friends have failed to materialize. Apparently they are now as chummy as they were before this exciting colloquy threatened to make them enemies. It undoubtedly estranged them for a while, but each obviously has forgiven and forgot, for they were seen together quite as much as formerly. Their reconciliation was brought about only a few days ago, and it is said that Hon. William Eaton Chandler, "the author of peace and lover of concord," was the intermediary. Mr. Chandler is a warm friend of both of them, and at a little informal luncheon about a week ago he surprised each by having them both as his guests. Neither knew that the other had been invited to sit at the hospitable board of the New Hampshire statesman, or perhaps both would have diplomatically declined the invitation. At the luncheon no reference, of course, was made to their spirited colloquy in open senate that led to personalities, but the host kept them in such merry mood that when the luncheon was over they found themselves as fast friends as they had ever been.

It is recalled that on a certain memorable occasion, not so long ago, Mr. Chandler declared that he would never again essay the role of peacemaker, but he then bed cause to feel that his pacificatory efforts had taken too broad a sweep to be effective, and so he has ceased to brood moodily over the most notable failure of his career as a peacemaker between great mea.

SIX SENATORS WHO ARE NOT AFTER PRESIDENCY

THERE are six United States senators who are not eligible to the presidency because of having been born abroad, and they are free from the buzzing of ambitious bees, having reached the highest elective office to which they are eligible under the prohibition of the constitution. Senator Gallinger, chairman of the committee on the District of Columbia, was born in Canada, but went to New Hampshire at so early an age that his friends would long ago have forgotten that he was not born there were the fact of his birthplace not occasionally brought forward in such records as the congressional directory. Senator Nelson, the scholarly member of the senate from Minnesota, was born in Norway, which is the birthplace of so many of his constituents. Senator Wetmore of Rhode Island claims England as his birthplace. Senator Millard of Nebraska first saw the light of day in Canada. Senator Sutherland of Utah, who is a warm supporter of Senator Smoot, the Mormon senator, although he himself is not a Mormon, was born in England, and Senator Patterson, the editor of the Denver News, who is ready for a two-hour speech at almost any time, is proud of Ireland as his native land. Very many senators were not born in the states they now represent. Throughout the western states there are many instances in which men of the east and of the south went west, and then, taking an interest in politics, rose to positions in command ing positions that permitted them to move to this city as United States senators.



WARDROBE BOOK-KEEPING IS LATEST SOCIETY FAD

A book in which to keep a description of one's clothes is the latest thing in the fashionable world. The peon of society devoted to becoming so very strenuous with such simplicity of functions that a very extensive wardrobe is required—so extensive, in fact, that the fashionable woman cannot keep track of it without the aid of some record. Hence a book in which to catalogue a season's wardrobe is the latest adjunct in the necessities of milady.

The social secretaries take from the shoulders of their employers all bother of remembering the dates of their engagements, the calls to be made, and the social obligations to be met and paid off; and now comes one more burden to be shifted to other shoulders. Now the ever patient maid is in charge of her misters' wardrobe book.

The wealthiest and most fashionable women seldom wear an afternoon or evening gown more than three times at the most, and it is no unusual thing for a hostess to be undecided up to the hour of an entertainment what gown she will put on in which to welcome her coming guests, which implies, of course, that she has an many she cannot decide till the last moment which to wear. It remained for Mrs. Shonts of Chicago, wife of the former chairman of the Isthmian canal commission, to startle Washington society by anch a prodigality of clothes that she has to have a description of them kept in a book.

A color and a description of the trimmings is put down, thus catalogu ing the whole wardrobe.

CONGRESSMAN PLANS A COMBINE OF LAWMAKERS

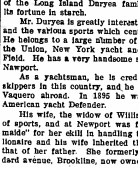
IF Representative W. Charles Adamson, of Georgia, succeeds in a scheme that he has undertaken it is not unlikely that the boarding house mistresses of Washington will appeal to the president to invoke the aid of the bureau of corporations in breaking a gigantic combination composed of senators and representatives. Mr. Adamson is trying to organize among senators an association the members of which will pledge themselves to pay just so much and an mre fur beard, fur house rent, for midday lunches and after theater dinners. In a word, his association will fix a maximum price for every necessary of life for a representative during his stay at the national capital.

Representative Adamson says he is meeting with encouragement from members he has approached and he hopes to launch the association next session. He says 200 members will be necessary for the success of his undertaking and he adds that when once the association gets in working order hotels will cheapen their rates, landlords will reduce their rents and restaurateurs will sell "20 meal tickets for $4.50." According to Mr. Adamson, the people in Washington who control things that representatives must have have agreed among themselves upon a scale of prices, and these prices are such, he declares, that every cent of a legislator's salary is exhausted before he leaves Washington. He maintains the salary makes no difference; the net surplus at the end of each session will be the same—many unpaid bills.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

NEW HEAD OF UNIVERSITY

Dr. Harry Pratt Judson, who has been elected president of the University of Chicago, has been acting president of that institution since the death of President Harper, about a year ago. Before that time he was dean of the university. Dr. Judson has been associated with the university since its foundation. He was one of the first three educators to come to Chicago as a nucleus for its faculty, the other two being the late President Harper and Prof. Frank Frost Abbott. That was in 1892. From that date until the death of Dr. Harper, he served as the dean of the university, head of the department of political science and professor of politics and diplomacy.



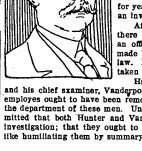
During President Harper's life he was always closely in touch with the administrative affairs of the university and assumed their direction whenever the former went away on a vacation or business trip. He was appointed acting president at a special meeting of the board of trustees January 16, 1906, four days after President Harper's death.

About two years ago he was named as one of the trustees of the general education board, which now has a fund of $43,000,000, to be devoted to educational purposes, John D. Rockefeller being the heaviest donor.

Dr. Judson is the author of several works on historical subjects. When President Harper fell ill two years ago he was engaged in writing a book on "The Origin of European Races," but since that time has been compelled to devote himself so closely to the administrative work of the university that he has been unable to complete it.

The new president is about 50 years old, is married and has one daughter. He was graduated from Williams college in 1870, and then became principal of the high school in Troy, N. Y. From 1885 until 1892 he was professor of history in the University of Minnesota, resigning to become one of the first members of the faculty of the University of Chicago. He often represented the university at public meetings and banquets to distinguished visitors. When President Roosevelt was given the degree of doctor of laws by the university, Dr. Judson delivered the oration, and his address was considered a classic of its kind. He holds the degree of master of arts from Williams college and doctor of laws from Queen's university, Ontario. He is a member of a number of clubs.

SOCIETY SPORTING MAN



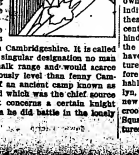
Herman B. Duryea is one of the most widely-known society sporting men in this country, being a leader in the smart Hempstead and Meadow Brook set, as well as an active and conspicuous figure at all of the great races. He is the owner of Irish Lad, the horse which was backed so heavily to win the Suburban in 1906. That race is the great event on the card at the Empire City Jockey club held at Sheepshead bay. He comes of the Long Island Duryea family, which made its fortune in starch.

Mr. Duryea is greatly interested in polo teams and the various sports which center at Westbury. He belongs to a large list of clubs, including the Union, New York yacht and the Turf and Field. He has a very handsome summer home at Newport.

As a yachtsman, he is credited with being one of the finest amateur skippers in this country, and he won fame and many prizes sailing the first Vaquero aboard. In 1895 he was Governor Morton's representative on the American yacht Defender.

His wife, the widow of William Weld of Brookline, is also a great lover of sports, and at Newport was formerly known as one of the "Three Mermaids" for her skill in handling the yacht Vaquero II. Mr. Duryea is a millionaire and his wife inherited the fortune of her first husband, as well as that of her father. She formerly owned the magnificent residence on Goddard avenue, Brookline, now owned by Mrs. Larz Anderson.

DEFIED A GOVERNOR

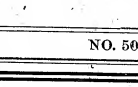


Gov. Hughes of New York recently sent to the state senate a special message recommending the removal from office of Otto Kelsey, state superintendent of insurance. A few days previous Hughes put Kelsey on the rack and publicly and mercilessly exposed him as entirely unfit to hold his office. The governor had demanded his resignation, but Kelsey, who has held various offices for years and is a strong organization man, defied an investigation.

After the governor's examination of Kelsey there was nothing left of the superintendent in his official sense. He admitted that he had not made himself conversant with the new insurance law. He said he had not read all the testimony taken by the investigating committee.

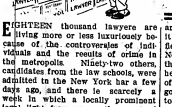
He conceded that his chief deputy, Hunter, and his chief examiner, Vandgpool, were unfit for office; that several other employes ought to have been removed, but that he had done nothing to clear the department of these men. Under the probing of the governor Kelsey admitted that both Hunter and Vanderpool were discredited in the insurance investigation; that they ought to have been retired, but that he did not feel like humiliating them by summary dismissal.

"POCKET ADONIS" OF SOCIETY



Lord Buchan, the "Pocket Adonis" of society, is just about starting on a tour of South America. He is now 46 years old, but the nickname, which was applied to him in his young manhood because of his good looks and diminutive stature, still sticks to him, for he has always been small. He is a dapper little man, exquisitely groomed, and the mirror of fashion at all times, but he is far from being a mere dandy. He is a good shot, and a keen yachtsman. As a Scotch peer, the earl is freed from all the legislative responsibilities that attach to members of the hereditary chamber and can devote himself solely to getting all the enjoyment possible out of life. In that he succeeds.

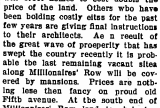
Curiously enough, although his earldom is one of the oldest in Scotland, dating from 1469, his chief country seat is in England. It is situated in Cambridgeshire. It is called Gogmago Hills, the why and wherefore of which singular designation no man knoweth. The "hills" are an offshoot of the Chalk range and would scarce pass by such a name in a county less monotonously level than fenny Cambridgeshire. On their summit are the remains of an ancient camp known as Wandlebury. Associated with it is a wierd legend which was the chief source of the "Hoot's Tale," in Scott's novel The Antiquary. It tells of a giant named Oubert and a ghostly opponent with whom he did battle in the lonely spot.



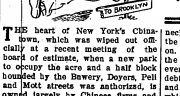
Round About New York

Gossip of People and Things in the Great Metropolis

QUIET RETIREMENT OF MORGAN FROM WALL ST.



THAT Wall street has been looking forward to anxiously and with much speculation for several years has actually come to pass in the "House of Morgan." The "old man," as J. Pierpont Morgan is generally called in "the street," has to all intents and purposes gone into retirement, and in his place in the most famous banking house in America there reigns J. P. Morgan, Jr., or "Jack," as he is more frequently called and spoken of in the same district. No one can cry, "The King is dead! Long live the King!" for the head of the house is very much alive. Only he has handed over the practical administration of his banking concerns to his son, while in his magnificent new library on East Thirty-sixth street he is spending the evening of his days in the pleasure of the collector amid his collections. Like all the things the elder Morgan does, this change in his banking house was accomplished with little flourishing of trumpets. So quiet and gradual has been the process that until the last few weeks but little attention has been paid to the important changes which has for several years been going on in the house of Morgan. Of late Morgan, Sr., has not been in any too good health, and for more than a month has not been in the financial district at all. Every time the stock market tumbles disquieting reports are circulated from one end of Wall street to the other that the "old man" is seriously ill, and in spite of frequent denials from other members of the firm, including "Jack," the reports persist and come to the surface at every favorable opportunity. But there seems to be nothing immediately alarming in Mr. Morgan's condition. The affairs of the great house of Morgan are now in the hands of three men, J. P. Morgan, Jr.; George W. Perkins and Charles Steele. Mr. Steele is the junior man, so that the heavy financial work, formerly the joy of the "old man's" life, is in the hands of Jack Morgan and Perkins.



NEW YORK A FRUITFUL FIELD FOR LAWYERS

EIGHTEEN thousand lawyers are living more or less luxuriously because of the controversies of individuals and the results of crime in the metropolis. Nearly two-thirds, candidates from the law schools, were admitted to the New York bar a few days ago, and there is scarcely a week in which a locally prominent light digit from some other part of the country, seeking a wider field and higher fees, is not added to the steadily increasing number. New York has a population of approximately 4,000,000, and this means that there is one lawyer to every 300 individuals; not a very large number from which to draw a clientele, it would seem, when the lawyers themselves and those who cannot afford the luxury of law are subtracted. Yet most of them have an opulent look that speaks eloquently of prosperity and suggests an inquiry into the methods by which it has been acquired. There is the field of politics, of course, and in New York that takes care of many of the poorer attorneys, while practice before the civil and criminal courts of the city and state accounts for a goodly number of headers; but it is to the enormous volume of business transactions that the majority look for support. Many of the great financial and commercial institutions here prominent lawyers at their heads, and of them are paid fees little one or more salaried employes whose legal advice is indispensable in transactions involving as they frequently do, millions of dollars. In addition to these sources of income there were more than 115,000 transfers of real estate last year, involving about $1,345,000,000, and most of them provided handsome fees for lawyers.

FANCY PRICES FOR SITES ON MILLIONAIRE'S ROW

MANSION builders are planning to invest $5,000,000 within a year along the one-mile stretch of Millionaires' Row, in Fifth avenue. H. C. Frick has practically closed a deal for the purchase of the Lenox library site in Fifth avenue, between Seventieth and Seventy-first streets. The property is in the midst of the storm center of the "400" and its dimensions are 200x125 feet. The library trustees have asked legislative permission to sell the ground. The price asked is said to be $2,000,000. Mr. Frick now has a ten-year lease of the George Vanderbilt mansion at the Fifty-first street corner at $50,000 a year. During the past few months more than $6,000,000 has been paid for mansion sites in upper Fifth avenue. Most of these buyers will erect homes to cost double the price of the land. Others who have been holding costly sites for the past few years are giving final instructions to their architects. As a result of the great wave of prosperity that has swept the country recently it is probable the last remaining vacant sites along Millionaires' Row will be covered by mansions. Prices are nothing less than fancy on proud old Fifth avenue. At the south end of Millionaires' Row land is bringing $12,000 a front foot. At the far north end, beyond Andrew Carnegie's mansion, it is cought at $6,000 a front foot.

CHINATOWN WIPED OUT, NEW ONE IN BROOKLYN

THE heart of New York's Chinatown, which was wiped out officially at a recent meeting of the board of estimate, was ordered razed to occupy the acre and a half block bounded by the Bowery, Doyers, Pell and Mott streets was authorized, is owned largely by Chinese firms and individuals and includes the Chinese theater, in which several times recently were shot to death in a highbinder war, the joss-house, and all the other infernal features which have made the locality the most picturesque plague spot in the city. Before the year is out most of the inhabitants will have moved to Brooklyn, where they are establishing a new Chinatown, and the narrow, crooked streets around Chatham Square are affording their last picturesque spectacle to the "rubbernecks" tourists in the celebration of the Chinese new year, which is now on. All the business transactions of the last 12 months have been closed, every Chinaman has paid his honest debts, all the prayers have been said, and the advent of the new year, which occurred on the morning of February 12, was celebrated with the explosion of thousands of firecrackers, which a special ordinance of the board of aldermen, passed at the instance of "Little Chief" Sullivan, who ranks next to Confucius in the Chinese calendar of saints, permitted to be hung in ropes and festoons from house to house across the streets. Togged out in their brightest native garb, the inhabitants of the quarter are making the customary New Year calls and imbibing much rice and liquor.

JEROME PREPARES FOR HIS REBUTTAL

MRS. EVELYN NESBIT THAW SUBPOENAED TO PRODUCE WHITE'S LETTERS.

Other Witnesses Ready—May Mackenzie and Howard Nesbit Among Them—Case Adjourned to Monday Because Defense Closed Suddenly.

New York, March 9.—The defense in the Thaw case rested Friday immediately after the convening of court, and an adjournment thereupon was ordered until Monday morning next at 10:30 o'clock.

District Attorney Jerome said that while he had been informally notified Thursday afternoon of the changed plans of the defendant's counsel, he had come to court expecting to be confronted by additional expert testimony as to Thaw's state of mind. His witnesses were not ready, he added, and it was upon this representation and with the freely granted consent of the defense, that the adjournment was taken.

The court proceedings occupied less than five minutes and Mr. Jerome returned at once to his office and began preparing his campaign of rebuttal testimony. Almost his first move was to have a subpoena served upon Mrs. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw requiring her to produce in court any letters she may have in her possession written by Stanford White.

May Mackenzie to Testify.

The district attorney had May Mackenzie notified to be in court Monday, prepared to go upon the witness stand. Miss Mackenzie had been under subpoena by the state ever since the trial began. She is the intimate friend of Thaw's wife, and during the first stages of the trial the two were inseparable.

It is also said that Mr. Jerome has summoned Mrs. J. J. Caine, of Boston, who already has testified for the defense. Among the other state witnesses for the state are Drs. Bingaman of Pittsburg and Deemar of Kittanning, Pa., Mr. Thaw and Gregory family physicians. The defense originally summoned these physicians, but Mr. Jerome has publicly stated that the doctors can give very important testimony which the defense failed to develop.

Jerome's Course Doubtful.

Just what District Attorney Jerome intends to prove or will be allowed to prove in rebuttal, remains as deep a mystery as ever. The prosecutor himself is probably at a loss to know how far he can go in attacking Evelyn Thaw's story and in adducing evidence tending to contradict and discredit her. His plan of campaign may be entirely changed at any time by an adverse decision from Justice Fitzgerald. Mr. Delmas, for the defense, undoubtedly will make Mr. Jerome's progress difficult by continued objections.

District Attorney Jerome undoubtedly will again summon Abraham Hummel, a lawyer, to the stand to testify as to the affidavit Evelyn Nesbit is alleged to have signed, charging Thaw with cruelties because she "would not tell lies" about Stanford White.

Howard Nesbit was with the district attorney Friday, and it is said he will be called to the stand to testify that his sister told him Thaw had treated her cruelly while abroad in 1903 because she again "would not tell lies about Stanford White." Mr. Jerome hopes by the brother to corroborate the testimony he expects to elicit from Abraham Hummel, the latter being under indictment at the present time for alleged subornation of perjury in the Dodge-Morse divorce tangle.

Expects Early Finish.

With all the witnesses here counmanded and many others under subpoena, Mr. Jerome adhered to his prediction of Thursday night that the case might be given to the jury by Friday. Mr. Jerome, when asked Friday how many witnesses he would call, replied smilingly, "Ten minutes is sern and the maximum 25; it may be other."

He would not modify what he said Thursday to the effect that in the present state of the evidence he would assuredly let the case go to the jury and not ask for a commission. This determination on the district attorney's part places Thaw's lawyers and the defendant himself, who all along has feared the asylum for the criminal insane far more than a verdict as to his guilt or innocence under the statutes.

May Separate the Thaws.

There were many rumors current Friday of a serious estrangement between the defendant's family and his wife, and of the reported desire of the former to bring about a separation of the young couple in the event of a verdict acquitting Thaw of the charge of murder. Young Howard Nesbit, brother of Mrs. Harry Thaw, is quoted as saying:

"The Countess of Yarmouth has said that she will not return to England until her brother and my sister have been separated. I did not know of this until my return from Pittsburg, last Sunday. As soon as I arrived here I went to the Hotel Lorraine to warn my sister, but Mr. Delmas would not let me in. He knew I did not want any of the lawyers present while I talked to her because I knew they would probably deny it."

RULES AGAINST OIL TRUST

FEDERAL COURT IN ST. LOUIS SUSTAINS ORDER OF SERVICE.

Declares It Has Jurisdiction to Compel Appearance of Rockefeller and His Lieutenants.

St. Louis, March 8.—A decision written by Judge Sanborn and concurred in by Judges Hook, Vandeventer and Adams, sitting in the United States circuit court for the Eastern district of Missouri, was rendered Thursday, overruling the motion of attorneys for the defendants in the government's case against the Standard and auxiliary oil companies and specified individuals to vacate the order to bring in non-resident defendants and to quash the service upon them of subpoenas.

Over a month ago a motion was filed by the defendants to the effect that it was not in the jurisdiction of the St. Louis court to compel nonresident witnesses to come here and testify in the suit. Arguments were heard before Federal Judges Sanborn, Hook, Adams and Vandeventer and the point at issue was taken under advisement.

The attorneys for the oil companies and the oil magnates set up three reasons why those not residents of the eastern judicial district of Missouri should not be compelled to come here and testify in the trief of the government's case.

They were:

1. That the court was without jurisdiction to make the order bringing them here.

2. That the order was premature and irregularly made.

3. That the ends of justice did not require that the non-resident defendants should be brought into this suit.

The decision overrules these motions.

There are several defendants in all, including Rockefeller, Rogers, Fingler and other trust magnates and 61 companies or corporations, which are the Standard Oil company of New Jersey and its subsidiary companies.

ONLY ONE FARE FOR NEBRASKA.

Railways Issue Circular Abolishing All Reduced Rates.

Omaha, Neb., March 8.—In retaliation for adverse legislation, culminating in the passage of a two-cent per mile passenger fare bill by the Nebraska legislature and which went into effect Thursday morning, all Nebraskn railroads, including the Union Pacific, Burlington, Northwestern, Missouri Pacific, Rock Island and Great Northern, issued circulars absolutely abolishing all classes of reduced rates.

Under the head of "Special instructions" the circular says: "Agents must not honor clergy permits, reduced rate orders, orders or instructions for rates for disabled volunteer soldiers, orders for charitable rate or any other form of a reduced rate order, whether for a state or interstate journey, in any portion of Nebraska."

The circular concludes by saying it is the purpose to make the two-cent rate the only possible rate to apply on Nebraska passenger fares.

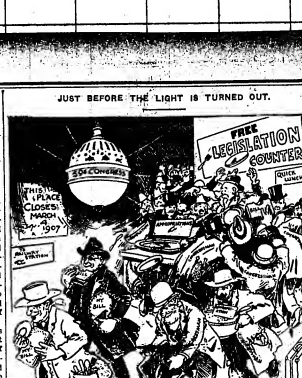
PASSES ANTI-MERGER BILL.

Michigan House Refused to Let Senate Recall the Measure.

Lansing, Mich., March 8.—The state senate Thursday afternoon voted to recall the bill passed Wednesday providing the consolidation of the Calumet & Hecla, Allouez, Centennial and Osceola copper mines. The house, however, refused to permit it and passed the bill under suspension of rules, 71 to 12.

Gov. Warner before signing or vetoing it, will give a delegation from Calumet to-morrow a hearing.



PERKINS PAYS BACK $54,019.

Reimburses New York Life for Campaign Contribution.

New York, March 8.—George W. Perkins, former first vice president of the New York Life Insurance company and now a member of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., has sent to the New York Life his personal check for $54,019.19, to reimburse the company for the Republican campaign contribution made from its funds in 1904, in connection with which Mr. Perkins recently was made defendant on a charge of larceny.

New South Dakota Laws.

Pierre, S. D., March 9.—The state legislature adjourned sine die at noon Friday. An unusual number of important measures were enacted into law, among them being prohibition of railway passes and telegraph franks, protection for 2½-cent railroad fares wherever state commissioner deems such reduction advisable, amendment of the divorce laws in the interest of reform and a statewide primary election law.

ABRAHAM RUEF IS ARRESTED AT LAST

NEW ELISOR FINDS FUGITIVE AT SUBURBAN RESORT AND NABS HIM.

Attorney in Trouble—S. M. Shortridge, Counsel for the San Francisco Boss, Sentenced to Jail for Contempt of Court.

San Francisco, March 9.—Abraham Ruef, the politicel boss, who has been a fugitive from court, was arrested Friday night at a suburben resort by the court's elisor, W. J. Biggy, who was piloted to the place by Detective Burns.

Mr. Biggy, who is a business men, was appointed elisor by Judge Dunne late in the afternoon.

Ruef's Counsel in Contempt.

Samuel M. Shortridge, attorney of record for Ruef, incurred a severe rebuke from Judge Dunne during an examination by Assistant District Attorney Heney into the incompetency of Coroner Wnlsh, appointed by the court as substitute for the disqualified Sheriff O'Nell to "locate and arrest" the indicted politician. Shortridge assisted in an effort to enter objection to a question put by Heney, and would not be silenced by the court, who finally adjudged him guilty of contempt and sentenced him to 24 hours' imprisonment in the county jail.

Shortridge, however, escaped immediate incerceration by applying to the district court of appeals for n writ of habeas corpus, on the ground that no contempt had been committed. The merits of this controversy will be argued before Justices Cooper, Hnt and Kerrigan Monday morning.

Outrage, Says Shortridge.

Mr. Shortridge said: "The action of Judge Dunne is an outrage, committed not so much upon myself as upon the legal profession and the citizens of Califorria. The law expressly provides that 'a defendant has the right to be heard by counsel,' and the objection sought to be made by me, and to which Judge Dnne took such indignant exception, was offered in behalf of the interests and behalf of Abrahnm Ruef, my client."

Judge Dunne said: "Mr. Shortridge brought his punishment upon himself. In the matter of examination of the coroner, he had no more standing in the court than the merest spectator. Mr. Shortridge was to court as the legal representative of Ruef, not of the coroner."

RUSSIAN ROBBERS FOILED.

Pavlovka Post Office Clerk Kills Two and Wounds Four.

Bakhmut, Russia, March 9.—An unsuccessful attempt was made to rob the post office at Pavlovka Friday, where $12,500 were on deposit. Twenty armed men gathered at the office and demanded of the clerk in charge that he turn over the money. Under cover of his desk the clerk, who was alone, opened fire on the would-be robbers, killing two of them and wounding four. The remainder fled empty-handed.

Monovr, March 9.—The cashier of the Bromley Manufacturing company, an English concern, was held up at the city gates Friday by a band of robbers and relieved of a wallet containing $6,500 in cash.

ANOTHER BLOW TO RAILWAYS.

Nebraska House Passes the Employer's Liability Bill.

Lincoln, Neb., March 9.—The Nebraska house Friday passed the senate employer's liability bill, affecting railway trainmen, and it now goes to the governor. Under the provision of the bill railroads are not permitted to plead contributory negligence as a bar to recovery, nor can they claim exemption from damage suits under the fellow-servrant principle.

The house recommended to pass the bill prohibiting street car, and other passes, except railroad, as well as telegraph franks.

MAY STRIKE ON SANTA FE

CONDUCTORS AND FIREMEN REJECT COMPROMISE OFFERED.

Make Modified Demands Which General Manager J. E. Hurley Says Will Be Refused.

Topeka, Kan., March 9.—Through representetives from all points on the system at a meeting here Friday, the conductors and trainmen of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railway voted not to accept the compromise of a ten-hour day and a ten per cent increase in wages offered by the western railway operating officials at the recent meeting in Chicago. The men, however, modified their demend and now ask for a nine-hour day and a 15 per cent. increase in pay. The original demand was for a 15 per cent. increase and on eight-hour day.

General Manager J. E. Hurley, of the Santa Fe, Friday night stated that the company would not concede the modified demands of the men, but was willing to arbitrate, in the hope of averting a strike. The men state that they have yielded all that they intend to and predict a strike unless the company grants the 12 per cent. increase and time reduction demanded.

Kansas City, Mo., March 9.—Conductors and trainmen on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas railroad are taking a secret ballot on acceptance or rejection of the compromise wage offer made by the road. Nothing is known as to the result. The vote will be announced in Chicago March 21.

Omaha, Neb., March 9.—Fifty members of the grievance committee of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen of the Burlington system met at the Murray hotel here Friday to take steps preparatory to demanding an increase of wages on the basis of time as well as mileage. Recently the company granted an increase on the mileage basis. The trainmen argue this is in reality no increase at all, but only another method of increasing the volume of their work, for which, of course, their pay naturally increases in proportion. They want an outright advance of pay for firemen and engineers upon the mileage per time. The committee will not confer with local Burlington officials, but adjourned to take up the matter with higher authorities in Chicago.

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE SEATEN.

Measure Talked to Death in the House of Commons.

London, March 9.—The bill to extend the right of suffrage to women was defeated in the house of commons Friday, where it was talked to death without coming to a vote. The understanding had been made at the recmixed attempt to secure n vote, but the speaker declined to accept a motion of closure, and the attempt was defeated. The house was closed automatically at 8:n o'clock in the afternoon. The bill is thus killed for the present session.

The result was not surprising, even to the suffragists themselves, as many of the strongest sympathizers of the women's cause realized that the question was not ripe for decision and that parliamnnt was not in a position to deal with the question until it becomes a definite issue at general election.

PARIS PARALYZED BY STRIKE.

Electricians Quit Work and City is in Great Distress.

Paris, March 9.—A sudden, virtually unanimous and unexpected strike on the part of practically all the electricians of Paris and vicinity at 5 o'clock Friday afternoon resulted in the almost complete paralysis of the business of the city by the time night had fallen.

A number of theaters had to forego their performances, several of the evening newspapers were unable to get out their editions, and the great department stores were hurriedly emptied. The strikers demand the fulfillment of the promises to improve their condition, which they claim were made to them last July.

LEONIDAS PRESTON KILLED BY POISON

MUCH HYDROCYANIC ACID IN RICH MAN'S STOMACH FOUND BY AUTOPSY.

Had Been Ill With Grip—New York Millionaire, Who Died While Telephoning, May Have Committed Suicide While Temporarily Insane.

New York, March 9.—An autopsy held Friday by Coroner's Physician O'Hanlon disclosed that Leonidas Preston, a millionaire, who died suddenly Thursday at the Hotel Cumberland, had enough hydrocyanic poison in his stomach to kill six men.

Coroner Herburger immsdiately reported the case to the police and detectives were set to work upon several mysterious circumstances connected with his death. Mr. Preston was New York manager for the Timken Rollroad Bearing Axle company and kind an office in West Forty-sixth street. His died while telephoning to some business acquaintances. The hotel physician, who was called in when Mr. Preston succumbed, gave the opinion that death had been caused by a cerebral hemorrhage.

Had Been Sick With Grip.

Mr. Preston's wife told the coroner that he returned from a business trip to New Orleans two weeks ago suffering from a severe attack of grip, complicated with bronchial trouble. Against the advice of his physician, Dr. Millet, he insisted upon transacting business.

Because nsither Dr. Millet nor Dr. English could definitely state the cause of death, Coroner Harburger determined to hold an autopsy. Dr. O'Hanlon observed as soon as he reached the stomach unmistakable traces of a powerful poison.

It appears that when Mr. Preston died William B. Timken, the head of the concern of which Preston was New York meneger, Leonard Gray and Edward R. Hewitt, were in the hotel office. They had sent up word that they wished to see him. Preston answered in person over the telephone telling them to "come right up." When two minutes later they reached his suite Preston was dead.

Representatives of a law firm were summoned to the hotel late in the evening and taken to Mr. Preston's room. They remained there until early Friday, going over a mass of books and papers.

Was Heir to $3,000,000.

Mr. Preston came to New York from Dallas, Texas, some years ago. He was said to be the sole heir to a fortune of $3,000,000 in New Orleans and to have recently received part of $1,000,000 in business. He was 45 years old, tall, muscular and very handsome.

His friends have essured the coroner that his business affairs were in good condition and that there was no possible motive for suicide other than possible temporary insanity brought on by illness.

J. B. Cook, one of Preston's intimate friends, received a telegram Friday from Mr. Preston's brother in Dallas, asking that the body be sent there for burial.

Mr. and Mrs. Preston took quarters at the Cumberland last September. They had no children but had adopted a little boy.

Dr. English, house physician of the Cumberland, said the millionaire had died in terrible convulsions. "When I reached the room," said the doctor, "I found Preston stretched on the bed, fully dressed, as though he had thrown himself there. The convulsions were over. He had also had suffered a cerebral hemorrhage. It was too late for me to do anything. He was yesterday for a time. When she was able to speak she said the only medicine he had taken was a cough mixture."

JILTED MAN KILLS HIMSELF.

Cleveland Contractor Commits Suicide Because His Is Rejected.

Cleveland, O., March 9.—Repulsed in his passionate love, which he was madly in love, Henry De Bnrt, a prominent contractor, fired a bullet through his head while standing in the doorway of the woman's home, 1416 Prospect avenue, one of Cleveland's fashionable residence streets, Friday afternoon. He was removed to a hospital in a dying condition.

In De Burt's trunk were found many letters from the object of his affections, Mrs. Florence Patterson, but it appeared that recently she had discarded him. Friday afternoon she answered a call to her door, but neaded De Burt, she closed it in his face. In an instant a shot rang out and Mrs. Patterson opened the door again to find the man lying in a pool of blood, with a bullet wound in his temple. Mrs. Patterson, it is said, has been separated from her husband and she is not well known here.

ARCHIE ROOSEVELT BETTER.

Young Patient Resting Comfortably, Reports Dr. Lambert.

Washington, March 9.—At 10:30 Friday night the following official bulletin was issued from the White House, regarding the condition of Archie Roosevelt:

"The patient is resting comfortably. No complication has developed since yesterday and his condition is as good as could be expected at this stage of the disease. Alexander Lambert."

HARKER ACTED IN HASTE.

Man Who Came to "Start Something" Was All Right.

Herker was in a fierce humor the other morning when the front door opened and in walked a stranger unannounced.

"I came," began the stronger, taking off his coat and rolling up his sleeves.

"What!" thundered Harker. "You didn't come in here to start anything, did you?"

"I did," replied the stranger, coolly.

But he got no further. With a savage whoop Herker grabbed the intruder around the waist and deposited him on the sidewalk. Two hours later his wife returned.

"William," said she, "was there anyone harn during my absence?"

"Yes," snorted Harker, "there was some lunatic hirs who said he came to start something, but I just bundled him out on the sidewalk before he had time to make a move."

"William, you are the biggest goose in town!"

"In what way?"

"Why, the men came to start the clock that hasn't been running for a week. He is a clockamith."

CASE OF BEFORE AND AFTER.

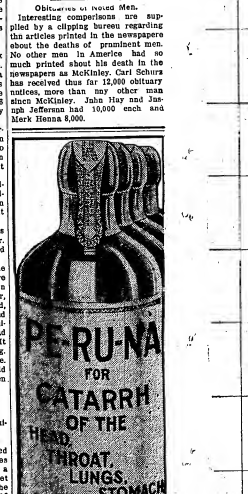
Or, What Happens to Voters Who Bother Congressmen.

"Certainly, old man," said the candidate, as he slapped the voter on the back, "you see that the boys send me to Washington and then come down and look for an office."

At this time the candidate reached congress and the voter arrived with his card.

"I have come down to look for an office," announced the voter.

"Oh, you are looking for an office," exclaimed the congressman, as he glanced np from a mountain of documents. "Well, my dear man, what kind of an office are you looking for? The post office, the patent office, the weather office, the—"



"No, I am not."

"Oh, well, sir, if it is none of those offices I really haven't the time to direct you. In fact, sir, I would have you understend that I am no guide to Washington, anyway. Go oot and ask a policeman."

And then the busy congressman closed the door and proceeded to forget the voter until election day.—Chicago Daily News.

John Hay and Jnmes Jefferson had 10,000 each and Merk Henna 8,000.

W. A. Mitchell, dealer in general merchandise, Martin, Ga., writes:

"My wife lost in weight from 130 to 68 pounds. We saw she could not live long. She was a skeleton, so we consulted an old physician. He told her to try Peruna.

"She gradually commenced improving and getting a little strength. She now weighs 106 pounds, she is gaining every day, and does her own housework and cooking."

MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE

St. Paul, March 5.—Capital punishment will be abolished in Minnesota if the legislature takes the advice of the house committee on crimes and punishment which met this evening. The purpose of the meeting was to consider the Phillpps bill, providing that all hangings should take place in the state prison instead of the county. Wright bill, to provide an electric chair for electrocutions at the prison; Mr. Wolfer, state secretary of prisons and members of the board of control were in attendance. Mr. Wolfer went so far as to say he believed 4 out of 5 executions in the state are bungling jobs. The final outcome of the meeting was to adopt the sentiment, and the several who spoke in favor of prohibiting capital punishment entirely. Mr. Phillips will present a bill to this effect for the committee.

In the senate today, a resolution by Senafor V. B. Seward of Marshall, was adopted calling upon the railroads commission to report on the Peterson 2 cent fare bill by March 7. This means that the dilly- dallying which has been going on over this important measure will come to an end on that date.

The training school committee of the senate gave a hearing this afternoon to a large delegation of women from the Minnesota Federation of Women's clubs, on the subject of the proposed new girls' training school. The women were all very anxious to their opposition to having the institution located at Red Wing where the school for boys is. They framed a bill calls for the new school to be within 4 miles of the Red Wing court house.

St. Paul, March 6.—Opposition on the liquor license question was received a black-eye almost as soon as surrendered by the house to the tender mercies of the senate committee on lemperance. This committee met this afternoon and by a vote of 8 to 1 decided to recommend the bill for indefinite postponement. Senator Thorpe of Willmar, author of the senator file, will attempt to have the senate substitution of the committee turned down.

The house committee on express, telegraph, and electric railroads has taken favorable action on the Christensen bill for supervision of electric street car lines by the state railroad and warshouse commission. The bill has been amended so as to provide that snch state supervision shall not interfere with supervision also had by cities of city limits, but shall extend beyond the powers of city councils.

The house committee on municipal legislation has decided to let the early gas meter remain unruly. The bill creating a state inspector of meters has been referred to the house, one way of killing it—because the country members objected to their constituents being taxed to support an inspector who would solely benefit the cities.

Red Wing has received its first turn down in a report of the committee on training schools. The report recommends for passage the Spooner bill to establish a state training school for girls at some place where a suitable institution is not at present located, and through the state board of control. The bill by W. H. Spooner of Red Wing, requiring that such a school must be located not more than 4 miles from the Red Wing county house, was recommended for indefinite postponment.

J. W. Wright of Litchfield introduced a bill in the senate today calling for the payment of pensions to all citizens, soldiers, or their widows, who participated in the Indian massacres of 1862, such pensions not to exceed $12 a month, and to be paid out of the general revenue fund.

It is said J. F. Calhoun is about to introduce a bill to create a Secretary of Department of state, which shall take up all things of interest and general benefit to women. Mrs. Lucy Stanley of Marshall, is the originator of the idea and is named in the bill which has been drafted. The secretary tendent of the department for the benefit of women at a salary of $200 a year, to include cost of stenographer.

St. Paul, March 7—County option today received its death blow in the senate, and the tune of its dirge was 30 votes against 22 in its favor. The measure, which has been a source of the foremost issues before the present legislature, came up on motion to adopt the recommendation of Chairman Campbell of the temperance committee majority, that the bill be indefinitely postponed. Senator Elwell, the minority, presented a minority report recommending that the bill be advanced to general orders for discussion by committee of the whole. The last vote which put the senators all on record, came as a result of a motion by Senator Thorpe of Willmar, that both reports from the committee be tabled to be taken up as a later date, and demanding a roll call on the question. The vote settled the fact that no matter what the house may do with the county option bill, the measure with which it has been wrestling for some time, such a measure can never be pushed through the senate.

Another important act of the senate today was the passage after an hours debate of the J. F. Calhoun bill to appropriate $10,000 for a silver service to be presented to the new battleship Minnesota by the state, and creating a commission to make the purchase and the presentation. An amendment was adopted that Miss Rose Maria Schiller of Hastings be named one of the committee. She was the young lady who stood sponsor for the vessel at its launching, and is a daughter of Senator Albert Schiller. Ole O. Sagsveg of Otter Tail wanted the appropriation cut to $5,000, but the senate refused to grant the request, as it did one that the bill be re-referred to the finance committee.

The senate committee on education met late today and decided to recommend for passage the C. L. Sawyer bill to abolish teacherless in high schools. Evidence produced before the committee seemed to demonstrate that fraternities have a demoralizing effect in the sbordinate schools.

Men who refuse to support their families, either as a result of drunkenness or idleness, will be dealt with as they deserve if a bill introduced today by Senator P. L. Gjotsbeck of Faribault, becomes a law. For the first offense the court must give a sentence of 30 to 90 days. For a second offense the crime is declared to be a felony and punishable by imprisonment from one to three years.

Ambrose Tighe of St. Paul introduced a new bill in the house for submission to the people of a "wide open" law amendment to the constitution, similar to the one voted upon at the last general election. The bill is introduced by request of the liquor interests, who claim the defeat of the measure was due to Swift Carolina recently, unlawful.

The Eye of the Needle.

When Christ says to his sermon "that it is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than it is for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven" he does not mean a sewing of needle, but a hole through which a camel had to pass through in getting into a fortress. It was the custom in old times, and in parts of Arabia still in, for the people of a village to build walls against the robbers of the desert, into which they carried an underground passage in it sizing form barely large enough for a camel lying down on his side to work itself through into the courtyard of the fort, and the latter beautifully compares the struggles of the animal to what the rich man must suffer in order to gain paradise. The hole was called "the eye of the needle."

In the old arabic cabins, or walled cities, are invaded specimens of these openholes may be seen. Most of these have been partially destroyed, but there is one almost perfect at Urtinan Ettesch, to Donegal, and so the Eastern cyphoies that one would think they were made by the same workmen. The Irish annals relate that Ethech was erected by a Thatch de Danann chief 1,300 years before Christ.—Exchange.

The Magic Flat.

"This is our library," said the New York woman leading her visitor into the front room. "And that door inside room back of it is the music room. The 'den' is the big, bright room at the rear left. Come over and see it. Yes, we have just five rooms in all. The small back bathroom we use as a hack-ling and storage closet. Isn't it cozy?" "I-es," agreed her visitor doubtfully, "but where do you sleep and eat, and all that?"

"Oh," said the New Yorker, indifferently, "my husband and I sleep in the 'den' on the bifestal couch, and mother sleeps in the music room on another couch that pulls out at night. We eat on that fancy little table in the library. You've no idea how nice it can be made when the leaves are in. And we dress in the bathroom and keep our clothes in the parlor closet. So, you see, it's all very convenient."

"What do you do in the kitchen?" queried the other incredulously.

"Oh, we keep the dogs in there at night, and in the daytime we sometimes use it—I cook in it."—New York Press.

An Impresario's Advice.

Some years ago after the regular Italian opera season had ended at the Academy of Music, New York, that building became a sort of trying on ground for would be prima donnas and tenors. One day during the open and shut interval between the seasons Max Maretzek met the lesser Adams and Mme. Pappenheim.

When the latter said: "Congratulate us, Max; we have just leased the academy for classic operas—no candy rot for us," the impresario replied:

"I wish you great success, but tell me your proposed repertory."

To this Adams responded, "Anita, Ocloe, Orfeo, Highlands, Sapho, Alcaste, etc."

Maretzek quietly said: "That is magnificent. But do me a favor as an old and experienced friend. Give the 'Favorite' once each week in order to pay salaries."

This advice was not followed, and very soon the academy was sold for rent.—New York Tribune.

Not His Fault.

"James," asked the druggist sternly, "how did you come to lose that sale?"

"We didn't have what the lady wanted, sir."

"Why, you know we carry the most complete line of perfumery, toilet articles, stationery, confectionaries and fancy articles in the city."

"Yes, sir, but the lady wanted a—a—a—"

"Well, what?"

"A corset, sir."—Chicago Tribune.

A Mint For Youth Playwrights.

The young man wrapped up his rejected play with a rather sad smile.

"Thank you for reading it," he said, "it is the sixth unsuccessful drama I have written."

The manager of 117 theatres gave him an encouraging pat on the shoulder.

"Look here," he said, "I'll tell you what you want to do. You want to begin less ambitious. Begin with a one act curtain raiser. And after you've wrote this here curtain raiser send it around with the sentence 'Ist Curtain' in the corner. You can play this for instance. I guarantee you'll get a hearing then. Tried to once, by gosh, you'll get played."

"A good idea," murmured the young man.

"That's what it is," said the great manager, "I got it from Sidney Grundy. It's how he began. Ist first play was a curtain raiser. A Little Change. He said on it, 'play it for nothing.' And the playhouse theater took him up."

Spectacular Demardation.

A certain Somerset vicar made himself notorious by the vigor with which in the seventeenth century he inveighed against the use of false hair, artificial optic glasses, since they perverted vision and made it all things appear unnatural and therefore a false light. Microscopes and telescopes, with their array of lenses, he declared to be impostors, since a man could not see as well with two pairs of spectacles as with one. Some haunted it to be sinful to assist the eyes, which were adapted by Providence to the capacity of the individual, whether short sighted or far sighted, "it was argued that society at large would become demoralized by the use of spectacles. They would give one man an unfair advantage over his fellow and every young man on entering upon life would be compelled to not be expected on aesthetic and intellectual grounds to adopt the practice."—London Spectator.

Fatal Accident.

On Monday last Lars Branden, living one mile north from Kratka was instantly killed by the accidental discharge of a shot gun in his sleigh. Mr. Branden left his home Monday morning to go to Thief River Falls, and before leaving home placed his loaded shot gun in the sleigh box, and the rest is told by some of his neighbors that his team overtook on the road to town. When they noticed that there was no driver with the team they went back to the sleigh, and was horified to find Mr Branden lying in the bottom of the sleigh with the top of his head blown off, and the shot gun lying beside him. The County Coroner was called on an inquest held, but we have not learned the result.

Mr. Branden was a married man and a farmer in fairly good circumstances, and whose family relations are reported to have been pleasent, but the placing of a loaded shot gun in his sleigh box before starting for Thief River Falls, raises a suspicion that he migh have contemplated suicide when he left home, although there was no apparent reason for him to do so, but it can be truthfully said, that no man knows all of his neighbors business.

AN EXPLANATION,

Rhoda, Minn.,
March 14th, 1907.

To Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Costello, and To Whom It May Concern:

In placing my former statement before the tax-payers of our town, it was not however my intention to misrepresent Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Costello, the least, but, instead, it was my idea to let the tax-payers know the facts, as near and as plain as I could state them. Now, if I have gone beyond my range of evidence a hand, in doing so, mainly, the outlines letter, which was published in the Sunbeam, and on which I based the foundation of my statement; why, I will with draw any word or wording that may or can be considered in any way offensive to either Mr. or Mrs B. H. Costello. I simply mean to keep myself within the range of evidence at hand covering the subject, and will say that I am not vouching for the correctness of the Auditor's letter, as mistakes can and will be made in all lines of business, and reasonable allowance must be made and toleration in such cases. It is not revenge; but justice that I am often and for that measure I will stand, "let the chips fall where they may," and especially so when it concerns the matter of taxation. I beleive in each person, carrying his share of the burden.

Below I will publish my oath of withdrawal.

State of Minnesota, }
County of Red Lake. }

I, W. A. Swanson, being the author of the statement published in the Sunbeam, of the 28th of February, 1907, do solemnly swear that I have read and know the contents of said statement, which is true, to the best knowledge and belief of affiant. Subscribed and sworn to before me this 14th day of March 1907. A. G. Hanson, [Seal] Notary Public.

Tyranny of Clothes.

Place a man in a silk hat and frock coat and transport him to a farmyard. Agricultural pursuits may be the passion of his life, but clad in these garments he feels in quite unpropitious habiliments for them. Sensible of urban clothes him awkwardly, in flannels he quickens and place him in a church, and it is utterly impossible for him to assume a humanly devotional frame of mind. Unlimited autocracy itself cannot impose such tyrannies on its subject. Civilization is the slave of its clothes, and there is no prospect of freedom.—London Graphic.

He Held On.

"In a town back in Vermont one man," said a doctor, "a big, burly lumberman entered the office of a dentist I knew and showed the doctor a bad tooth. The dentist decided that the tooth should be pulled.

"'All right,' said the lumberman. 'But listen now. If I tell you to stop, you stop pulling or I'll beat you up.'

"The dentist agreed, and the lumberman got in the chair. The dentist took hold of the tooth and began pulling. Almost immediately the lumberman yelled, 'Hold on!'

"The dentist continued to pull. 'Hold on!' yelled the lumberman. The dentist kept pulling, and the tooth came out. Then the lumberman jumped from the chair quick.

"'Why didn't you stop when I told you to?' he asked fiercely.

"'You didn't tell me to stop,' said the dentist.

"'I did too,' I yelled 'Hold on!' he said.

"'Oh,' said the dentist innocently, 'I thought you meant to keep hold of it.'"—Boston Post.

Taxes paid, Marriage License procured. Always at home, At SUNBEAM Minn.

A Lemon Instead.

"Do you know" a pretty bride of three months said to a friend the other day, "I think all these jokes about young wives having so much trouble with butchers and grocers and being cheated and all that is just too foolish."

"Then I presume you are getting on all right with yours, dear?" her friend inquired.

"Why, of course I am! Anybody would if they would just deal at a reliable place," the young wife declared. "Now, there is my grocer," she continued; "he is just as obliging and thoughtful as can be. The other day I ordered a dozen oranges, and when they came I found there were but eleven in the bag, so when I went to the store again I told him so.

"'Why, yes, ma'am,' he said, 'I know there were. I had put in a dozen, but I noticed that one of them was spoiled, and of course I wouldn't send you any but the best goods, so I took it out.'

"Now, don't you think that was nice in him to be so thoughtful and honest?" she concluded.—Harper's Weekly.

Marriages in Bible Times.

From the Bible accounts of the marriages of Jacob with Leah and Rebecca, and from other narratives of marriages in Jewish history it seems that marriage was not held to be a sacrament or religious rite in the times of the patriarchs. In those days the head of the family, the father, was priest and ruler of the family and the only priest or ruler whose authority it recognized. As far as we learn from the Bible narrative in the case of Jacob's marriages, the simple giving of his daughters by Isaac constituted the marriage, there being no religious or other ceremony whatever. Of course, however, marriages made in this way were just as sacred and fast as binding as those performed in the most ceremonious manner. In these days in Protestant countries the marriage laws do not look upon marriage as a sacrament, but only as a civil contract, though most people prefer to give it a certain religious sanction by having it performed by a church minister.—St. Louis Republic.

David Home and His Wife.

A jocular bequest of David Home to his friend John Home was curious. Home liked claret and disliked port, selling it poison, and the two friends had many discussions on the subject. They also used to have disputes as to which of them took the proper way of spelling their common family name. The philosophers about to fortnight before his death, wrote with his own hand the following codicil to his will: "I leave to my friend, Mr. John Home of Kildaff, ten dozen of my old claret at his choice and one single bottle of that called port. I also leave him six dozen of port provided that he attests under his hand, signed John Home, that he himself alone finished that bottle at two sittings. By this concession he will at once terminate the only two differences that ever arose between us concerning temporal matters."—New York Tribune.

Ringing in the Ears.

"Ringing" in the ears is a most perplexing complaint. It is interesting to learn that, though the brain so distinctly receives an impression of sound, there is really no sound at all. The sensation is produced by derangement of the nerves of the ear, caused by poor circulation or such pressure and interference as come from hardened, excessive wax, boils, etc. Some one having a remedy for them, the ears were ringing they were "insane." Truly, they carry wrong impressions to the brain. They record things that do not happen.

He Took a Hand.

Mr. and Mrs. Stockson Bonds are interested bridge whist players, and their home is the meeting place of bridge players of all grades. On one evening in every week they have a "game" to any of their friends who wish to play, and on these evenings they entertain, parties of their own selection and invited with equal freedom. Mrs. Stockson Bonds is a much higher player than her husband, however. Recently, long after the house had been closed for the night, Mrs. Stockson Bonds, unbeknownst of his wife's protests, Stockson Bonds went below to ascertain the cause of the loud continued and protracted noise, but no answer came to the wife's calls from above. She became alarmed, opened the door, called a policeman, and he made a rush for the basement door. A few minutes later the husband appeared before his anxious wife and told her he had found the servants playing bridge and regarding after the propriety of a bridge play.

"Did you send the whole party away?" asked the wife.

"Why, no. I took a hand and played the question before I realized what I was."—New York Tribune.

An Odd Little Anagram.

Here is an interesting little puzzle and anagram which was published in a newspaper several years ago:

A old woman with a basket
Put in her coat to market well.
"—," said she, "give me 1 prop.
The ungrateful is this day."

Each of the blanks is to be filled with a word of four letters, and the same letters placed in each of the five different words. These words are connected with "pelf," "evil," "veil," "Levi" and "life."

The Exile's Devotion

By Thomas Darcy McGee.

F i forswear the art divine
That glorifies the dead,
What comfort then can I call mine,
What solace seek instead?
For from my birth our country's fame
Was life to me, and love;
And for each loyal Irish name
Some garland still I wove.

I'd rather be the bird that slops
Its wing in ocean's spray,
Than fold in fortune's cage my wings
And feel my soul a slave,
I'd rather turn my simple verso
True to the Gaelic ear
Than sapphic odes I might rehearse
With scentes listening near.

Oh, native land! dost ever mark,
When the world's dim is drowned
Betwixt the daylight and the dark,
A wandering solemn sound
That on the western tide is borna
Across thy dewy breast?
It is the voice of those who mourn
For thee, in the far west.

For them and theirs I oft essay
Thy ancient art of song,
And often sadly turn away,
Deeming my rashness wrong;
For well I weea, a loving will
Is all the art I own.
Ah me! could love suffice for skill,
What triumphs I had known!

My native land! My native land!
Live in my memory still!
Break on my brain, yo surges grand!
Stand up, mist-covered hill!
Still on the mirror of the mind
The scenes I love, I see;
Would I could fly on the western wind,
My native land, to thee!

House Gowns Designed by City Modistes of Standing

The gown at the left, more of a negligee than a "house gown," perhaps is of white dotted tulle, made up over pale blue taffeta and elaborately trimmed with ruches of this blue silk and with cream applique lace. To add to the fullness of the bottom there is e deep gathered flounce of the material bended by a ruche of the silk, which comes from the top of the gown down each side of the front and all the way around. The fichu collar is finished in front under a bloa of pals blue ribbon with loops and ends. It is bordered with a lace ruffle, and similar ruffles, with rolls of the silk, trim the wide, loose sleeves.

The other gown is of pale pink velvet. The tunic, fitted over the hips, opens in front over a skirt composed entirely of little ruffles of white muslin. The corsego is made with large plelts and is very long in the shoulders. It is trimmed around the neck and in front with bands and loops of rose satin, the latter fastened with fancy buttons. This also forms the girdle and borders the fronts of the tunic. The tucked chemisette is of white mousseline de soie with collar of guipure. The sleeves are composed of four overlapping ruffles of the velvet, one of the satin and two of lace.

SHADOW WORK MUCH USED.

Appears This Season in Many New Forms of Supply.

Shadow work has bad much a "run" for the last year that it might be thought to have had its day, did it not seem to be stronger than ever.

This may not be so as regards blouses and whole dresses, but it is certainly marked as far as fancy work is concerned, also for lingerie proppor.

Shadow work in rather small designs is a quick and showy way to embellish a corset cover or night gown, especially now that there is to be given more character by the use of extra stitches for shading on the right side.

For fancy work it is made really lovely by the use of tinting, softly blended colors, fancy stitches in certain parts on the right side, centers of French knots or solid embroidery and studding in black, white or opalescent beads.

Soft pillows, bureau covers, monchoir cases, pin cushion tops and glove cases all are quickly and effectively done in shadow work, often the whole set being made to match.

A very attractive set of this kind has a butterfly design, three large ones on the pillow and a flight of butterflies on smaller pieces. Tha material is a sheer linen.

The pillow bas three large butterflies—one blue, one pink and tha other yellow—done in shadow stitch. Certain spots and markings on the wings are outlined on the outside in contrasting colors, while the body and feelers are outlined in black. Glass beads in black, white and opalescent tints to match the color of the butterfly are used very freely on the right side with brilliant effect.

The flights of rierflies on the other pieces are worked in the sema delicate tints, charmingly combined. The beadwork is, if anything, more beautiful in tha smnilar design.

Narrow cinny lace edges the toilet appointments. This can likewise be used in a broader width for tha pillow, but a newer and daintier finish is to edge it with tha ruffling just now to be had especially for pillows. It is of white lawn, about three inches wide, with two half-inch woven stripes of lawo, either one pink and the other green, or pink and bluc. Theas colored stripes are very much like the delicate opalescent tints of tha embroidery, and do not fada with washing. Enough of this ruffling to go 'round a pillow can be bought for 50 cents.

The designs also come ready stamped.

Chiffon on Smart Gowns.

Chiffon plays a very active part in the smart gowns of the moment. Very sumptnous was a clei bina chiffon dress over cream colored taffeta, trimmed with narrow bands of hand embroidery done in soft pinks and greens. A picture hat of the same shade was trimmed with a long willow plume and clusters of deep pink roses. Another pretty frock was in cab-gray beige over rose pink liberty satin. The skirt rested well on tha floor and was finished with a godet flounce beaded with chiffon ruchings. The foundation had five narrow silk ruffles fringed on tha edges and tha bodice was made with a series of fine tucks done in coarse hemstitching to reveal tha rose satin lining. Undersleeves and yoke of dyed lace had touches of pink silk embroidery darned between tha patterns. A high collar over the rose chiffon was finished with folds of pink velvet and small lace figures cut from the mesh.

DESIGNS OF THE MODISTES.

Smart Suggestion is a Novelty Cloth Cost of Light Gray.

One of the smartest suggestions is shown in a novelty cloth cost of light gray, which taps a princess skirt. Front and back are formed of bretelles of plaited cloth, tha fronts left to hang free, and the back brought together in the shape of the waist, and escaping in two long pointed tabs. Tha center of the back, between tha bretelles, is formed of embroidered voile, which also makes up the circular cuffs with which the long sleeves are finished. Heretofore it has been a foregone conclusion that these blouse, or Eton, coats, should be made of the skirt material, but now it is to be a matter of choice in so far tha skirt and coat shall match, or shall be strongly contrasting. Skirts are not a whit less interesting than waists and coats; indeed, they show even more of a change. Foot trimmings will be much in evidence on all skirts from now on and the double ruffles, shirrings, ruchings, passementeries, and embroidered bands, and the plain bias band. Many of the prettiest frocks have overskirts, and it is impossible that we ward off the overskirt, at least the overdress, longer than another season.

A gown of embroidered batiste, the very embodiment of simplicity in its lines and tha epitome of elegance in its detail, was coeried away by a Fifth avanua debutante to fascinata the eyes of the Riviera contingent, says the New York Evening Telegram. The skirt was gathered to tha waist-band, slightly raised in the back in Empire effect, and was strengthened at intervals of three inches by lines of band embroidery, which descended in irregular lengths. Tha points fell over a circular flounce on which were set row upon row of narrow Valenciennes lace in closely gathered frills, and at each intersection of tha points or scallops was suspended a lace butterfly. The waist had a deceitful collar turned back from small pointed yoke of Irish point. Tha under slip of the entire costume was a glistening, shimmering satin, which gave the most bewitching affect to the cobwebby batiste and lace. Tha mass of embroidery and ruffles while praservring the long, sinuous lines which the design demanded.

The Hour-Glass Figure.

The reintroduction af the hour-glass figure for women is threatened. Those professed to know say that dress-makers have for a long time been making zealous efforts to reintroduce the long-waisted pattern of feminine humanity.

Now the sight of full, round skirts and long-waisted corsets will, it is said, be tha feature of the coming season, and the women who would ba fashionable will have to reduce bone in creasing inches of the waist, which is ascribed to tha continued popularity of skirt waists, straight-front corsets, tha vogua of athleticism.

Matrimonial Infelicity.

Divorces are, happily, rare in society circles. Separation by mutual consent, however, grows more frequent every year. Every one has upon his or her visiting list husbands and wives who never meet if they can help it, but between whom there has never been an open breach. Incompatibility of temper is the usual cause, and the reason for that is, one imagines, the still common custom of encouraging the younger generation to marry before they have begun to approach years of discretion.—London Throne.

CASE OF ECZEMA IN SOUTH.

Suffered Three Years—Hands and Eye Most Affected—Now Well and is Grateful to Cuticura.

"My wife was taken badly with eczema for three years, and she employed a doctor with no effect at all until she employed Cuticura Soap and Ointment. One of her hands and her left eye were badly affected and when she would stop using Cuticura Soap and Ointment the eczema came back, but very slightly; but it did her a sight of good. Then we complied with the instructions in using the cuties and of Cuticura Remedies and my wife is entirely recovered. She thanks Cuticura very much and will recommend it highly in our locality and in every nook and corner of our parish. God bless you for the sake of suffering humanity. I. M. MADE HIS MEANING PLAIN.

Indian's Answer a Real Triumph of Quiet Sarcasm.

George Vaux, Jr., of Philadelphia, has been appointed a member of the board of Indian commissioners. Mr. Vaux told a reporter the other day an Indian story.

"There was a certain commissioner," he said, "who treated the Indians with rude scorn. One day a chief entertained this man in his tepee, telling him over the tobacco many quaint legends.

"One legend concerned a plague of grasshoppers. The chief told sequantly how grasshoppers overran the land, eating the grain, and how the medicine men averted a famine by offering a silver grasshopper to the Great Spirit, whereupon all that dense of grasshoppers disappeared.

"But the commissioner scoffed at the tale.

"'Are you Indians such fools,' he said, 'as to believe such rubbish?'

"'Ugh, no,' said the old chief, 'or we'd long ago hevo offered the Great Spirit a silver pule fear.'"—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Centenarian Enjoys Life.

Mrs. Mary Barsby, 103 years old, is spoken of as "the jolliest woman in Brockton." She is fond of the society of young people and likes to recall old corn-husking bees and other good times of her youth. THE WHOLE FAMILY.

Mother Finds a Food for Grown-Ups and Children as Well.

Food that can ba eaten with relish and benefit by the children as well as the older members of tha family, makes a pleasant household commodity.

Such a food is Grape-Nuts. It not only agrees with and builds up children, but older persons who, from bad habits of eating, have become dyspeptic.

A Phila. lady, after being benefited herself parsuaded her husband to try Grape-Nuts for stomach troubles. Sha writes:

"About eight years ago I had a severe attack of congestion of stomach and bowels. From that time on, I had to ba careful about eating, as nearly every kind of food then known to me, seemed to cause pain.

"Four years ago I commenced to use Grape-Nuts. I grew stronger and better, and from that time I seldom have been without it; have gained in health and strength and am now heavier than I ever was.

"My husband was also in a bad condition—his stomach became so weak that he could eat hardly anything with comfort. I got him to try Grape-nuts, and he soon found his stomach trouble had disappeared.

"My girl and boy, 3 and 9 years old, do not want anything else for breakfast but Grape-Nuts, and more healthy children cannot be found." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little booklet, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

SHAMROCK OF SKETCHES

Three Bits of Pathos in St. Patrick's Day Reflections

He needed not the sprig of green that greeted the world with blithe defiance nor the blackthorn stick that he brandished so bravely to proclaim him as one of the race of "Kelly and Burke and Shea." There was about him the manner of the nation where every man is a rebelstain if he isn't a king.

The Italian with the band-organ stopped at the corner across from the one where the old man waited for the car in deference to the air he knew his performance with the thrilling rendition of "My Irish Molly, O." The old man did not recognize the popular song, but he knew the lilt of the tune was one that never came out of Germany. He began to follow it with as vigorous a whistle as his unfamiliarity with it would allow him. Before the end of the trills he crossed the street and stood by the organ.

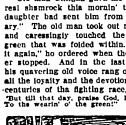
"Don't you know a rale, true Irish chune?" he demanded; "ono that will warm the cockles of me heart?"



The organ-grinder nodded. "Sure," he smiled. And, first with a wheeze and then with an operatic run, he started the tune that brought the hat from the head of the old man.

"Tiny it again," he commanded when the air was done. And again and still again did the Italian play it while the old man stood uncovered.

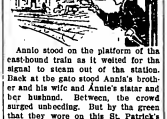
"I nivays take off me hat to 'The Wearin' o' the Green,'" he said.

"Old man Gilligan gave me a bit o' resi shamrock this morain' thet his daughter Ann sent him from Tipperary." The old man took out a wallet and caressingly touched the bit of green that was folded within. "Play it again," he ordered when the grinder stopped. And in the last chorus his quavering old voice rang out with all the loyalty and the devotion of the centuries of the fighting race.

"But till that day breaks cool, I'll stick To the wearin' o' the green!"

Little Mollia McShane sat alona in the corner of the hall. There was many a lad by the door who cast sheepish glances at Mollie. It was for no lack of invitation that she was not tripping the floor at the St. Pat rick's night dance.

For the orchestra was playing an old, old tune and the dancers were humming the refrain.



"Oh, for the days of the Kerry dancing," and the little girl in the corner saw again the green of a Kerry village and the glow of the light of love, and down her cheeks ran the tears of homesickness and longing and memory of the days that have gone.

There under the Irish stars the big Irishman told the little Irish girl of the love that his heart held for her. And when long afterward, after a thousand years of joy that an hour may hold, he had said a last goodnight, she had drawn down his head to her for the kiss of her lips and blessed it with her softly spoken "Ceen dhuv dheelish." Then as she stood watching him go down to the village, she heard somewhere afar off a piper playing the tune of the Kerry dancing.

But there was no music in the pipes and none in the heart on the night when John went away, away with the English soldiery whern ha had enlisted. There were sad promisee of return and dark forebodings, but there was hope. The war would soon be over; tha Boers would not fight long; "although it's meself that's prayin' they'll win from ye," said Mollie to John.

"When I come back, I'll punish ye for that same," said John.

But ha never came back to Kerry. Tha little girl in the corner of the hall saw tho villago gay again on this Patrick's night as it had been on tha old home a spot that she knew only in fancy—a lonely grave on a Transvaal kopje, where sleeps an Irish lad who died fighting for England.

Annie stood on the platform of the eastbound train as it waited for the signal to steam out of the station. Back at the gate stood Annie's brother and his wife and Annie's sister and her husband. Between, the crowd surged unbeeding. But by tha green that they wore on this St. Patrick's day the girl on the platform knew them for her own people. Katie and Hannah were weeping. Annie had hoped that they would not weep, for, sure, wasn't it had luck to bava tears when one was going home?

Home! How many a night had she lain awake after the work of day had clamored for rest for her weary body and mind, thinking, thinking ever of the two who were even now counting the hours till their coming should be once again under her old rooftreel

Tho journey to tha sea was hut a step; and after the ocean came the bliss that soma morning would rise to the eastward—her own Erin. And then there would be tha mists and the fogs of tha slow train journey to tha little station; and then tha long walk —perhaps through tha rain—that would bring her to that light of home.

"God be with you," sha called to the little group as the engine wheels began to revolve. And har own eyes were dim with tears. And as the train went out into the open space tha engine bells sounded a song she had heard somawhere of late:

"Then go back to Ireland,
Kiss your friends in Ireland,
But "Tis'll love your heart behind you is the west!"

GENERAL BREAKDOWN

A Condition Which Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, Tha Great Restorative, Have Been Curing for Years.

There is no more perplexing trouble for a physician to treat than debility cases, especially in women, in which there is no acute disease but in which the whole system is run down and lower and lower despite changes of medicine and similar experiments.

That Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will restore health under these conditions is no longer a matter of fact but has been proved in hundreds of cases similar to that of Mrs. Sarah Ramsey, of 1008 St. John St., Litchfield, Ill. Sha says

"I never felt well after my first child was born. I had a gnawing pain in my stomach and could not hold any food down. My head acked a great deal and sometimes the pain went all through my body. I had dizzy spells so that I could not step across the street to be half blinded with pain. Thesa spells would often last for over an hour. My blood seemed to be in a very poor condition and my face felt were like ice. I seemed to be growing weaker and weaker and could not get around to do my work in the house. I was extremely nervous and the least excitement would bring on a dizzy spell.

"For a number of years I was under a doctor's care but seemed to get no better. I had heard about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I began to take them. I soon felt better and gained in weight and strength. My nerves are strong now and I do my own work in every way."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box or six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y. Write for valuable information, entitled "Plain Talks to Women," sent free on request.

USE A HOPPERDOZER.

Catching Grasshoppers to Feed to the Poultry.

That grasshoppers are good food for poultry is recognized, but in most cases the poultry have to catch their own grasshoppers. We do not commonly hear of anyone taking the trouble to catch grasshoppers for the poultry. The Colorado station this summer tried the experiment successfully. The fields were visited by innumerable multitudes of grasshoppers, and the station men determined to catch a few bushels of them for the fowls. A hopperdozer was used and run behind a mowing machine at the time the hay was being made. The hopperdozer was mounted on wheels, so that it would not catch in the hay. Usually kerosene is used in the hopperdozer, thus killing the insects as as they fall into it. But this would make the insects unfit for food. A little experimenting showed that water would hold the insects for some time or until they could be dipped out for the use of the fowls. A hopperdozer was used on a six-acre field of alfalfa and it succeeded in catching from nine to ten bushels of grasshoppers, estimated at 3,000 to the bushel.

WHAT GREEN BONE WILL DO.

It Will Double the Egg Yield, it is Said.

Green bone doubles the egg yield because it contains more than four times the eggproducing value of grain. It makes eggs more fertile for it tones up the entire system and fills the head of the flock with vim and vitality. That's why green bone makes stronger, livelier chicks at hatching, for bone-fed hens lay eggs with life and vitality in them. That's why green bone develops earlier broilers and earlier layers; it promotes growth and the development of bone and muscle by promoting abundant nourishment.

It gives a good frame work to start with and helps lay on lean meat, thus making heavier market fowls, says Farm and Home. Green bone makes red combs, bright eyes and glossy plumage, for it gives a tone to the entire system of the fowl that nothing else will. It will double your profits; it has done it for thousands of others.

CHICKEN NOTES.

With poultry, the farmer gets interest on both preferred and common stock.

A little salt and peppar mixed with the mash is good for the hens.—Farmers' Review.

About the surest way to fail is to crowd too many hens into one pen. It never paid; it never will.

Keep the doors closed at night. This is the time of the year when enemies of the biddies prowl around.

The man that takes pride in his chicken establishment is likely to have a profitable flock of poultry.

Kind of hard work to wash eggs, but they look so much better when you offer them for sale, that I always like to do it.

Have the feed boxes high enough from the floor so that you can sweep under them. Sure to be a lot of litter there.—Farm Journal.

Roosts.

When roosts are not over dropping boards they should be made low. For this there are a number of reasons. The heavier fowls cannot fly high, and even those of the lighter breeds injure the soles of their feet in jumping from high perches. The larger hens show their dislike of the high perch when getting off in the morning, if at no other time. It is not unusual for a heavy fowl to spend several minutes in making up her mind to take the jump, making several false attempts to jump before finally doing so. This shows that the fowl regards it as a serious matter. The number of heavy fowls that get their feet bruised in this way is large. The high roost is unnecessary.

VALUABLE FORMULA

WELL-KNOWN AUTHORITY CLAIMS IT IS MOST EFFECTIVE.

Says It Will Break Up a Cold in 24 Hours and Any Cough That is Curable—Inexpensive.

A noted authority on diseases of the throat and lungs, who established a camp for consumptives in the Pine Woods of Maine, and whose remarkable cures there have attracted great attention from the medical world, says that his entire treatment consisted of fresh air, nourishing food and the Pure Virgin Oil of the White Pine Trees mixed with Whisky and Glycerine, in the following proportions:

Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure)..½ oz.
Glycerine.....2 "
Good Whisky.....8 "

Used in teaspoonful doses every four hours.

It is claimed that the above mixture will heal and strengthen the lungs, break up a cold in twenty-four hours, and cure any cough that is curable.

The ingredients can be secured from any good prescription druggist at small cost and can be easily mixed in your own home.

Inquiry at the prescription department of a leading local pharmacy elicited the information that Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure) is put up only in half-ounce vials for dispensing. Each viel is securely sealed in a round wooden case with engraved wrapper with the name—Virgin Oil of Pine (Pure); guaranteed under the Food and Drug Act, June 30, 1906. Prepared only by Leach Chemical Co., Cincinnati, O.—plainly printed thereon. Only the cheaper Oils are sold in bulk, but these produce nausea, and never effect the desired results.

Never Overlooked a Chance.

When Bishop Talbot, now of the central Pennsylvania diocese, was "the cowboy bishop" of Idaho and Wyoming he never overlooked an opportunity of securing contributions for the missionary work in which he took such delight. On one occasion, while attending a meeting of church dignitaries in St. Paul, he was chatting with some other clergymen on the steps of his hotel when several hoboes came along. One of them approached and asked for aid. Bishop Talbot took him aside and after a short but earnest conversation the other tramps saw something pass from hand to hand. "What did he give you?" asked the other hoboes when they all started away. "Didn't give me nothing," was the disgusted reply. "I gave him a dollar for his blamed new cathedral in Laramie."

A well-known specialist is authority that Kidney and Bladder Troubles of all kinds are in nearly every instance readily relieved by taking a few doses of the following simple home-made mixture:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces.

The dose is a teaspoonful ofter meels and at bedtime. These ingredients can be obtained at any good pharmacy, and are mixed by shaking well in a bottle. Victims of Kidney, Bladder and Urinary diseases of any kind should not hesitate to make this prescription up and try it. It comes highly recommended and doesn't cost much to prepare.

Burro Drivers Carry Candles.

In Mexico all vehicles, be they handcart, automobile, or anything between, must carry a light at night. This rule or law is rigidly enforced. Even the drivers of the poor little burro or mule carts, on their two wheels, must carry a light.

So, rather than buy lanterns, which cost money, they take a dip candle, and wrapping it in a bit of newspaper to shield it from the wind, carry it in their left hand as they drive along homeward from work after evening has fallen. The effect is striking, as the light, falling strongly on the Indian driver, throws the face of the man into strong relief against the darkness.

ON SECRET SERVICE

True Stories of Experiences in the State, War, Treasury and Postoffice Departments.

By COL. JASPER EWING BRADY
(Late Censor of Telegraphs and Chief Signal Officer, U. S. A., Santiago de Cuba.)

THE MEXICAN ONES

James Cronin, special agent United States treasury department, was about as keen an operative as there was in the secret service. His headquarters were in Chicago, and many a counterfeiter was sent over the road by "Jimmie" Cronin, as he was affectionately called by his friends.

Cronin and Cheney were much the same as regards ability, but Cheney had ambitions (and was constantly them) beyond the mere detection of crime. Cronin hadn't any ambitions beyond the running down of a counterfeit gentlemen or smashing a gang of counterfeiters. He was a great big, whole-souled Irishman, full of wit, and as brave as a lion. He was always poor; every cent he received went through his fingers like water, but, as he said to Cheney, with a slight Irish brogue: "That the divil good is money save to have fun with! Ye see, Jack, I haven't any one dependent on me, and when I get too old to work I'll kiss the world good-by." Cronin could have been a rich man had he any desire to be a grafter. A great deal of money had been offered him at different times, but each time refused. He was as honest as a sturdy oak, and Cheney counted Cronin as one of his staunchest and best friends. The head of the treasury department secret service on more than one occasion had been informed by Col. Cheney of some exceptionally good work that had been done by Cronin.

Cronin came in Cheney's office one day, and after his salutation of "Top of the mornin' to ye, Jack," threw six bright silver dollars on the desk and said:

"What do you think of that bunch of silver?"

Cheney knew immediately the "queer" money was being passed, and Cronin had discovered it, and wanted his advice and cooperation on the case. He picked up the silver dollars one by one, fingered them carefully, took a microscope and minutely examined the milling and stamping. Then he passed each one between the thumb and forefinger of his right hand. After that a pair of feather-weight scales came into play, and the coins were carefully weighed. Cheney stacked five in one pile and the sixth coin he tossed over to Cronin.

"That coin's all right, Jimmie, but those five are queer."

"Right ye are, Cheney, but that's the 'queerest queer' I've ever laid my eyes on."

"Yes, I notice it. The silver in these five 'queer' coins is of a higher alloy than the American coin. Intrinsically, the spurious coins are of more value than the real coin. That's a paradox, but it's a true one."

"Well, whatever 'paradox' is, it sounds all right to me."

"Where'd you pick up these coins, Jimmie?"

"Over in the First National three weeks ago. Later I found them in several other banks, and reports from the west indicate that part of the country is flooded with them."

"Any suspicions, Cronin?"

"Nary a one, Cheney. They come from everywhere, country banks, big stores, railroads, coal companies, and what not. Why, bless me, any man would take one of those coins and never notice it. An expert expert would be fooled. You would have to take a number of them without a murmur. So would I. Ain't it so?"

"Sure thing," murmured Cheney. At the same time he was studying the coins with the microscope. "Cronin," he continued, "these coins all bear the mill mark of the San Francisco mint. Made any investigations along that line?"

"No, not yet. I've just been feeling around. I reported it to the chief, and he directed me to run it down. I blamed easy thing for the chief to sit in Washington and say 'run 'em down,' but it's not so easy to do it."

Cheney was busy, but heard every word Cronin had spoken. He had a dual intellect. He could look and understand intelligently what a person was talking about and at the same time his mind could be working out some sort of a problem.

"Excuse me a minute, Cronin," he said, and was gone.

The colonel came back in about 15 minutes and laid down one of the coins with a section cut out.

"I thought so, Jimmie," he remarked.

"Thought what?" snapped Cronin.

"These coins are Mexican pesos. Their value in United States money is 37½ cents. The man, or gang, can now all these Mexicans they want, float them into our dollars, and net 62½ cents profit. Queer, don't it. Cronin, the counterfeits are better silver than the good dollars?"

"Well, all that's news, Cheney, and interesting, but what we want to do is find the man that's making the boom money."

"You're a good ways off from the plant at this minute, Cronin."

Cronin looked quickly at Cheney. All raillery and joshing had disappeared from his face; he was working out the problem.

"You don't mean to tell me that you have a clew already, Jack?"

"Not one clew, Cronie, but two of them—two good live lends. Now listen. The coins are all identical, made by the same die. That's where the gang were not cute; they should have changed the mill mark. These are all supposedly 'Frisco minting. Clew one: The die from which these coins were cast was made by a die cutter of the San Francisco mint, or one who has at one time or other worked there. Mexican silver is used in the coinage. Now, clew two: Mexican silver can, of course, be bought up here, but on the coast and on the frontier pesos are dealt in, almost like potatoes, therefore the plant of this gang is at some convenient point to the Mexican frontier, where money is plentiful. The 'queer' money is made, shipped seven ways for Sunday, and put in circulation."

"Very nice one and clew two are very interesting, but we're a long ways from the right party."

"Yes," interrupted Cheney, smiling, "2,900 miles more or less. But, Cronin, we're going to get those birds sooner or later. I'd rather rundown a gang like that than eat. They're clever, but, as I told you, they've made one mistake, and that mistake will be their doom."

"By George, old man, the chief'll be glad you're on this."

"Don't say anything to the chief about it. I'm going to Frisco tonight. Later I may wire you to come. I'll keep in touch with you, and in the meantime you find the person or persons who are floating this money up here. Don't arrest them; just keep them under surveillance. We want the king pin of this crowd, then the gang will fade away."

"All right, Cheney, I'll do as you say, but keep me posted."

"I'll sure do that, Cronin." The two men parted, and after clearing up the odds and ends of current work, Cheney made ready to leave for Frisco. The Overland carried him west that night, and three days later he landed in the "American Paris." He had been there before on numerous occasions, had a number of good friends, and spent the first evening just looking around. 'Frisco always had a large floating population of light-fingered gentry, and Cheney went to the hall of justice, looked over the gallery, joshed with the city force without revealing his mission, and after a trip through Chinatown, went to the Palace and had a good night's sleep.

He was cordially received at the mint the next morning. Fitzgerald, the superintendent, had not as yet been informed regarding the "Mexican ones." Of course he surmised Cheney was out there on business.

"Fitzgerald," said Cheney, after the usual salutations had been exchanged, "I want to see a list of your employes."

"Not much of a list, colonel. Let's see, there's only four of them—Gangler, Stearns, Ritchie and Evans."

"Who cuts the die for silver dollars?"

"Ritchie."

"Is he all right?"

"Yes, as straight as a die. Been here about two years. Makes $1,800 per year, married, lives over in Berkeley, and is a good, useful citizen."

"The other three; how about them?"

"All good men, and old-timers. The youngest of them, Ritchie, has been here seven years, and Gangley and Stearns both have been here over ten years."

Cheney handed Fitzgerald one of the Mexican coins. "What do you think of that coin, Fitz?" Fitzgerald examined it closely and said:

"Looks good to me, Cheney."

Cheney then told him how it was discovered, and what he suspected.

Fitzgerald took down a record book and studied it carefully for a moment, and then said:

"I am positive none of my die cutters did that work. About three years ago there was a die cutter worked in the mint, by name of Kuhn—Emil Kuhn. He was a high class workman, but rather uncertain in his habits. If I remember rightly, he drank more or less, and two years back he was discharged."

"Has he cut dies for silver ones?"

"Oh, yes, Kuhn was an artist. He could cut a die for any coin. He also painted quite well."

"Know what became of him after he left here?"

"No, I don't. I heard he went back to his old home in Manheim, Germany. It was said he came from a very good family."

After a little further conversation Cheney left, promising to let Fitzgerald know in case anything came up. As soon as Cheney got down town he cabled to his correspondent in Berlin, Germany, asking for definite information of Emil Kuhn, of Manheim. Cheney's organization was perfect he had correspondents in all the European capitals. In his own mind he was confident Kuhn had a hand in floating the Mexican ones. To make sure, he determined to run him down, if he were on earth. He wrote Cronin in Chicago what had been done and what his suspicions were. Then he waited. Manheim was some distance from Berlin, and it was three days later when he received a cable saying:

"Emil Kuhn well known in Manheim. Came back there two years ago, and was married to daughter of the burgher. Health broke shortly afterwards and returned to United States. Letters received from him showed he was living in Los Angeles and painting pictures for a living. His wife still in Manheim. Kuhn expects to return to Germany next spring. Health has been restored."

"Pretty definite information that," muttered Cheney. He wired Cronin to meet him at the Hallenbeck hotel, Los Angeles, as soon as possible, and the "owl train" on the Southern pacific that night carried Cheney on his way south. The population of Los Angeles at this time was a heterogeneous crowd of consumptives and tourists. There always was a large number of artists, good, bad and indifferent, located in this city of Los Angeles, and the day following his arrival Cheney began to investigate them. Not on Emil Kuhn could he find. There was a German artist named Buehlow, but he was married, and as Kuhn had a wife in Manheim Cheney acrdly thought Buehlow and Kuhn could be one.

Two days later Cronin came in from Chicago, and Cheney told him all that had transpired since they parted company.

"Very interesting, Cheney, very interesting," commented Cronin, "but nothing very definite. Your telegram from Germany may or may not have been authentic."

"All right, Cronin, cavil and doubt if you want to, but I know Kuhn is the man we want, and I know Kuhn is right here in Los Angeles. Since I wired you to come I have ascertained that several large shipments of Mexican silver have been made to Trujillo, just below here. The coin was delivered to a Dutchman and two other men. They disappeared from Trujillo, and I am willing they brought the stuff up here and recolned it."

"Cheney, I hope you're right. Now, what's the ley?"

"You make yourself known at the banks and find out how much of the rotten silver is around here. I'm going on another still hunt for Kuhn. Will meet you here every evening."

"All right, Jack."

Something told Cheney to take another look at Buehlow. He found the German artist lived in a very pretty little cottage on the bank of the Los Angeles river. His wife was a fine looking Mexican, and did the housework. The Buehlows kept to themselves, and were not neighborly at all.

Cheney was disguised. About three o'clock in the afternoon Buehlow left his house and went down town. Cheney followed, and saw him go to the post office general delivery window. There was no mail for him at the time, and Cheney could not hear the name Buehlow gave. In a jiffy he was behind the door, his credentials easily admitting him.

"That man," he said to the astonished clerk, pointing at Buehlow's retreating form, "who is he?"

"Why, sir, his name is Kuhn."

"Kuhn, eh?" said Cheney. "What's his first name?"

"Emil."

"By Jove, I thought so. How often does he get his mail here? and where does it come from?"

The clerk was bewildered but managed to stammer out: "He gets his mail about once a month, and all his letters come from Germany."

"Menheim?"

"Yes, that's the place."

"All right, my boy. Say nothing about this conversation," and he was gone.

Cronin and Cheney met after supper, and Cheney said, "Jimmie, I've run him down. I've got Emil Kuhn."

"The duece you have! How—when—where?"

Cheney told him and continued; "Now—we go for him. Tonight we begin a spot on him." Off they went and were soon outside the Buehlow cottage. A light was burning in the front room and through the window Buehlow and his wife could be plainly seen, he smoking and reading and she sewing.

"Domestic, ain't it, Jack?" mumbled Cronin.

"Damnably so; yes, but that may be a blind."

At ten o'clock the light in the front room was extinguished; one appeared upstairs for a moment, then the curtain was drawn down and the house was dark. For three nights this followed. Cheney was mad; Cronin disgusted.

"I tell you, Cronin, it may look straight but it isn't. There's a way to get at that man and I'm going to do it. He's got a wife in Germany; this woman here may think she's his wife but she's not. She's a Mexican and once let her get wind that Buehlow is playing fast and loose with her and she'll give him away quick enough. There's always 'a woman in the case.' Senora Buehlow is the one here."

A day or so after this a nutty looking stranger appeared at Buehlow's home. He was a connoisseur and had heard of Mr. Buehlow's painting, etc., etc.

The Dutchman really was a good artist, his dower painting was beautiful. Cheney (for he it was) dickered, praised and finally said he would come back next day. He did—and the day following. Buehlow took to him and they became quite friendly, Cheney buying one or two small pieces. One day while they were having a friendly smoke Cheney said:

"Mr. Buehlow, I'm from Germany, from Buehlow?"

The question was so quickly put, the German was taken quite unawares and answered:

"Manheim." Then he colored red and white by turns.

"Menheim, eh. Pretty place that. I've been there several times. Know several families there."

But Buehlow didn't want to pursue the subject further. Cheney saw it and changed the topic.

The next day when Cheney called Buehlow was out, presumably gone for the mail. Senora Buehlow received him. After a few commonplace remarks Cheney said:

"You have known Senor Buehlow long, Senora?"

"No, not long, Senor; only two years. I met him just after he came to Los Angeles."

"A case of love at first sight, eh?"

"The Senora's eyes drooped and she softly said, "Si, Senor," using the soft language of Old Mexico. Cheney led the conversation along and gradually approached the subject of bad faith.

"Suppose, Senora, you found Senor Buehlow was false to you, had another wife living in Germany; what would you do?"

The Senora's face hardened, her black eyes glittered, and true to her Spanish blood she said, "I'd kill him!" Her voice was quiet but very tense.

"But killing would be a crime, Senora."

"It is never a crime to avenge a woman's honor."

"That's the unwritten law, Senora, but not God's law; that says 'Thou shelt not kill.' But why talk about such things? I was only fooling, that's all."

"Senor Cheney, you were not fooling."

The Mexican woman was very calm, but very much in earnest. She continued: "You had a purpose in asking me those questions. Now what was it? If you are lying to me I'll kill you. If you are not lying—well, then, I'll kill Buehlow."

Cheney leaned towards her, his manner, too, was very tense and very earnest. "Senora Buehlow, I am not lying. Come with me and I'll give you the proof; then you can do as you please."

Quietly and without a word the woman picked up her mantilla and down town they went. Cheney took her to the treasury department secret service office and sent for Cronin. Then he told her what he knew of Kuhn's marriage and life in Germany. Cronin came and Cheney gave him sent him at his request). She saw and was convinced and rose to go.

"Senora Buehlow, you have been wronged, grievously so, and you want revenge. You can have it without doubt." Woodenly the woman looked at him, a faint suspicion creeping into her eyes over her. He continued: "Buehlow—or Kuhn—has been violating the law for years. Senora, you are the subject of citizenship by his brush he has been coining Mexicon pesos into United States dollars. You know the penalty for that; you've helped him; you are an accessory before and after the fact; you have violated the laws of your land." The woman quailed. Cheney knew he had struck home. "Now if you will help us I will help you. You want revenge for your personel wrongs and you will escape punishment for the counterfeiting crime. Will you do as I want? Will you?"

"Si, Senor, si—what you want?"

"Where is the cave reached?"

"Two ways, Senor. One through a tunnel leading from our cellar, the other by a door from the river bank. This door is covered with dirt and green plants so it cannot be seen. There is pulling a rope and it will open." Minutely she described the cave and its approaches. Then Cheney said:

"Now, Senora, you go back home and act as if nothing had happened. Tonight Buehlow will leave. He will be raided, but you will be allowed your freedom. If you fail us it will go hard with you. Do you see?"

"Have an fear, Senor; I won't fail you." Her eyes glittered, her breath came in little gasps, but she did carry out her part. She wanted revenge, and then she could be free, go to Mexico—and—Cheney knew. She left and Cheney turned to Cronin. "Well, Jimmie, how about it, eh?"

"You're a wonder, Jack. But we've got a fight ahead of us, maybe."

"I'll bet you a hundred to one."

"Sure, I won't turn it down."

At 12 that night the cave was raided. Kuhn and two accomplices were turning out some fine work. The arrest was complete. The prisoners were marched to the jail and then Cheney gave Senora Buehlow a purse with a few things to her supposed husband. The conversation was animated and bitter to a degree. Finally the pair were separated and the next day the woman disappeared. The evidence was complete without her testimony and the gang got 15 years in Folsom prison. Cronin was promoted and Cheney—well, Cheney was satisfied.

The methode of the mail-order houses are their worst advertisement. Sooner or later there will come a time in the experience of every purchaser of their goods when he will wish "he hadn't done it," when he will wish he had spent his money with his home merchants. This is not only because he will see the ruin wrought in his own community by the nefarious practice of sending the money of the community to the city, but also because of the practices of the mail order concerns.

This story in the catalogue sounds well. It sounds like you would get the identical thing you wanted and at a much lower price than you had imagined it could be bought for, and you order it. The purchase arrives and when opened you feel that some mistake has been made, thet the concern has sent you the wrong goods; it is not what you ordered.

Ah, but it is! The difference is between the way it actually looks and the way it sounds in the catalogue.

You explain that the goods you received is not what you ordered and ask for an accounting, and are told thet it is you that is in error, that you got just what you ordered, and then if you are wise you buy of the

The own aurn method of curbing tha mail-order giant is to bind him with tha thonga of hams patronage. Are you helping in this work? Are you spending your money at home and helping your town to grow, or am you sending it to tha city to awell the fortunes of tha mail-order men?

home merchent next time, and know what you get when you pass over the money for it. He may not be able to sell you what you thought you were buying from the mail-order house at the catalogue prices, but he can sell you, if he has it, the same goods you get from the mail-order houses at an even more price than they ask for it, and what is more, he can sell you what you really want at as reasonable a price as you can get it for elsewhere.

The following letter, written by a Michigan farmer, explains in a clear and unmistakable way the danger of buying of mail-order concerns. It was published in one of the largest of this class of institution in this country:

Baldwin, Mich., Jan. 12, 1907.

Gentlemen:

I have your favor of recent date, and also your catalogues and accompanying circulars offering premiums for distribution of the same among my friends. I have no doubt that, as you state, you thereby expect to realize a favor upon you, but I am compelled to take issue with you on the statement that I will also confer a favor upon my friends.

In my dealings with you, extending over some time past, I have received no favors from you—I paid for all I got, and the length of time I traded with you, instead of establishing friendly relations and gaining me additional favor as it would in a home town, has given me the opinion that, mlike a new customer, to whom you give your very best, so they will come again, I was a mail order comer and any old thing would do for me.

Our last deal opened my eyes and convinced me that your prices in your catalogues offer some apparently great bargains. But let us draw up our balance and see if there are not some things very essential to the rural citizen that are not mentioned within its voluminous bulk.

For instance, there is no reference to paying cash or exchanging goods for wool, oats, corn, beans, butter, eggs and hay.

How much will you pay for cattle, sheep and hogs, f. o. b., at Baldwin? How much will you pay to support tha Lake county schools and educate our children? How much for improving our roads and bridges? For supporting the poor? For the general public expenses?

To what page do you offer to contribute money to the support of our churches?

What line of credit will you extend to us when my money is low because of sickness, or poor crops? What do you provide in the way of entertainment for the public and in the way of providing those things that make a town desirable and thus keep up the value of my property?

As a matter of fact, do you do anything to help locally, or do you merely take the money out of a community, returning nothing whatever, beyond the value of the goods bought? Thinking it over carefully, I believe it is better to call upon our local dealer and look over his stock where we can see the goods before buying. There are then an errors in change or refusal to be haggled over across a 300-mile stretch.

Yes, it is better to trade at home. Our home merchant's guarantee upon his articles means something, as he wants our good will. Keeping the money at home benefits home industries and thus, indirectly, us. We cannot expect to sell our products to the local merchant and do our trading in Chicago. It is all one-sided and some time we would have no local merchant to do our buying.

Catalogue houses, I have found from bitter experiences, are tricky. If those who are dealing with them will watch their purchases, they will find it so sooner or later. Our last deal, had it occurred here at home, would have been straightened out in five minutes and without feeling, but with you it takes me all winter to get my money back when the goods are not satisfactory, and even then I get only a credit check which I can use through untold carelessness upon the part of someone in your concern so that I have nothing to do show for a loss.

Every man should trade at home if conditions admit of purchasing a good article at reasonable prices. If not, then he had better trade at the next town or city that his money may go to build up the country around him. He sends it to Chicago that it may go into profits of some big mail-order house until there is enough sucker money to build and endow some great charitable institution as a monument to the greatness of the mail-order man and the gullibleness of the easy public.

I have already asked that you adjust the matter of our last deal. I want my money returned without further

A Turkish Health Report.

The French government, wishing to obtain definite statistics as points relating to certain Turkish provinces recently sent blanks with questions relating to cases of infectious disease to be answered to the Provincial governors. The replies received from the Pasha of Damascus are worth quoting:

Question. What is the death rate in your province?

Answer. In Damascus it is the will of Allah that all should die. Some die young and some die old.

Q. What is the annual number of births?

A. God alone can say—I do not know, and hesitate to inquire.

Q. Are the supplies of water sufficient and of good quality?

A. From the rengtest period no one has died in Damascus of thirst.

Several remarks as to vaccination: Man should not bother himself or his brother with questions that concern only God.

A Squelcher.

"I gave that odious Mrs. Dougpurse something to think of this afternoon," says Mrs. Bankfull to her husband, who was amusing himself tossing $20 gold pieces into the artificial lake in the drawing room for the pleasure of hearing the gold pieces plunk as they sank.

"Whatja say to her?" asked Mr. Bankfull, as he himself a cigarette in a hundred-dollar bill.

"She was boasting about the solid gold radiators they are having put into their new house, and I told her we thought steam heat was so old-fashioned that we were going to heat our house with radium hereafter."—Judge.

Minister Discovers Comet.

Ministerial duties do not prevent the Rev. Joel H. Metcalf, of Taunton, Mass., from pursuing astronomical investigations. His study of the stars has resulted in the discovery of a new comet, which is now being closely observed by astronomers throughout the world. It has been named Metcalf's comet.

THE SUNBEAM.

VOL. VI. SUNBEAM, RED LAKE COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY, MARCH 22, 1907. NO. 51.

MINNESOTA HISTORICAL SOCIETY.

Washington Day by Day

News Gathered Here and There at the National Capital

WASHINGTON.—More money was appropriated during the short session of the fifty-ninth congress, which recently passed into history, than during any previous session. The amount approximates about $1,000,000,000. Two big battleships were authorized for the navy. The artillery corps of the army was reorganized and enlarged. A general service pension was granted to veterans of the Mexican and civil wars, and like provisions were made for army nurses. For river and harbor improvements the appropriation aggregated $57,000,000.

Increased salaries were given cabinet ministers, the vice president, senators, the speaker of the house of representatives and its members, ambassadors, ministers, and consuls, postoffice clerks and letter carriers.

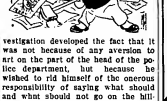
The public made more inquiries for information from the document rooms of congress regarding the ship subsidy bill, the currency measure, and the bill regulating the hours of service of railroad employes than any other pending legislation. Ship subsidy died hard in the last hours. The other two measures became laws as the session closed.

The immigration bill, one of the measures brought over from the long session, was completed under the spur of President Roosevelt that he might meet the California-Japanese situation by giving the administration control of coolie importation through passports. The bill further restricts the admission of aliens to the country.

A bill was passed for the establishment of an agricultural bank in the Philippine islands. The free alcohol law of last session was modified that farmers may distill the waste products of the farm to be denatured and used in the arts and sciences.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYES SHUN "HOODOO DESKS"

A SERIES of misfortunes involving dismissals, resignations and deaths in the great executive departments in Washington often develops what is known as the "hoodoo desk." A desk comes under suspicion after a dismissal or two from the service or after several transfers or resignations, and if there should occur several deaths among the occupants of the desk in the course of a year or two it is designated as the hoodooed desk and no one in that room cares to do official work at it. In a room filled with clerks the hoodoo desk is easily recognized, for it is most generally occupied with the surplus books and general litter of the daily routine work.



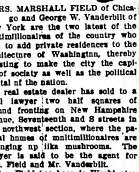
The desk may remain unoccupied sometimes for months, until some new clerk comes into the room and is assigned to it, provided there is no other vacant desk in the room. But room officials generally avoid assigning a new clerk to the hoodoo desk, if it can be done. In fact the desk is sent to remain without an occupant until radical changes in the personnel of the office cause its reputation to be forgotten.

Perhaps the most conspicuous case of a hoodoo desk in any one of the Washington executive departments was that in which a succession of misfortunes came to private secretaries of one of the assistant secretaries. Several deaths and other misfortunes made the place dreaded.

But there are other hoodoos in Washington. Some years ago a doorkeeper's post in the war department building came under the ban and was a source of considerable annoyance to officials.

At this particular door the first misfortune was death, the second dismissal; the third holder of the post lost his wife by death and finally fell and broke a limb, and the fourth appointee in succession lost a child and then resigned. This resignation kept the place vacant for a time, as no one could be induced to take it. The place had to be filled by calling on the civil service commission for some one from the outside.

ART STRICTLY BARRED IN GOVERNMENT PRINTSHOP



IF there are those in the government printing office who are vain, or those who have been leaning toward the artistic, they must confine their admiration of what their mirrors portray to the sacred confines of their homes—or the corner bar. Also no more will they be permitted to cover up patches of sombreness on the walls of the government printing office with decorative pictures or calendars.

Even the pictures of President Roosevelt are not exempt from the attacks of the art censor, although a likeness of the executive stayed lonesomely on the walls of the bindery for three days while the censor considered the propriety of including it within the category of "pictures" or "decorations."

Maj. Sylvester recently asked a police regulation permitting him to prohibit the display of all pictures on the billboards in the district. Close investigation developed the fact that it was not because of any aversion to art on the part of the head of the police department, but because he wished to rid himself of the onerous responsibility of saying what should and what should not go on the billboards.

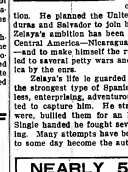
Under the present regulations he is the court of last appeal for those who object and those who do not to the pictures that get on display. Maj. Sylvester found it so hard to steer clear of trouble between the multiplicity of opinions that he would lose the whole responsibility.

What motive may have actuated the move in the government printing office is unknown, but the fact remains that recently an order was promulgated, and a man was thrown through the department removing pictures, mirrors and all other attempts at decorations from the walls.

NEW PALACES OF RICH IN FASHIONABLE CIRCLE

MRS. MARSHALL FIELD of Chicago and George W. Vanderbilt of New York are the two latest of the multimillionaires of the country who plan to add private residences to the architecture of Washington, thereby assisting to make the city the capital of society as well as the political capital of the nation.

A real estate dealer has sold to a local lawyer two half squares of ground fronting on New Hampshire avenue, Seventeenth and S streets in the northwest section, where the palatial homes of multimillionaires are springing up like mushrooms. The lawyer is said to be the agent for Mrs. Field and Mr. Vanderbilt.



Mrs. Field has been in Washington a great part of the present season, and it has been known she was desirous of obtaining property upon which to build a home here. Several brokers have offered her various pieces of property, and the announcement that she had about decided on the New Hampshire avenue site occasioned no surprise in this city. Both she and Mr. Vanderbilt are reported to have consulted architects on their prospective residences.

It is expected Mrs. Field will build a mansion that will rival, if not eclipse, the Leiter, Walsh, Townsend, Lars Anderson and other fine homes that have been erected in recent years, the Leiter house on Dupont circle being the first of the big residential show places to go up.

Mr. Vanderbilt is spending his first winter in Washington, but is residing in a rented house. It has been known for some time that he intended building a fine residence in this city.

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

HIS AMBITION CAUSES WAR

Jose Santos Zelaya, one of the most picturesque and fearless fighters Spanish America has ever known, in pursuit of his ambition to be the ruler of a united Central America, has stirred up another war, this time between Nicaragua and Honduras.

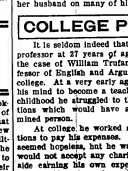
Some eight years ago he quelled a revolution in his native country of Nicaragua and then calmly told the president that he (Zelaya) was president, giving the latter and his cabinet 24 hours to leave the country under pain of death. They left.

Since then Zelaya has been "reelected" regularly by large majorities.

Zelaya has large ideas. He negotiated the building of the Nicaraguan canal with New York capitalists. He conducts a great coffee plantation. He planned the United States of Central America. He induced Honduras and Salvador to join him. They afterward withdrew. Ever since then Zelaya's ambition has been to weld into one federation the five republics of Central America—Nicaragua, Honduras, Salvador, Costa Rica and Guatemala —and to make himself the ruler of that federation. This ambition of his has led to several petty wars and revolutions, and set the whole of Central America by the ears.

Zelaya's life is guarded by Satan, say his superstitious subjects. He is the strongest type of Spanish-American revolutionist. He is absolutely fearless, enterprising, adventurous, shrewd and politic. Eight of his officers plotted to capture him. He strode alone into the room where the conspirators were, bullied them for an hour, had them arrested and then let them go. Single handed he fought seven assassins. He shot four dead, the others fleeing. Many attempts have been made on his life, but he thinks he is destined to some day become the autocrat of the United States of Central America.

NEARLY 50 YEARS IN NAVY



Rear Admiral Joseph E. Craig, U. S. N., was placed on the retired list of the navy the other day after nearly 40 years of faithful and efficient service. He was retired owing to the law which compels officers who have reached the age of 62 years to leave the active list.

Rear Admiral Craig was born in New York, February 24, 1845, and entered the navy in 1861. He was graduated four years later with honors. His first sea duty was on the old frigate Monongahela, where he was stationed from 1865 to 1868. In 1866 he was advanced to ensign, and to master in 1868. From 1869 to 1871 he was attached to the sloop Portsmouth of the South Atlantic squadron. He was advanced to lieutenant in 1869. In 1871 he was assigned to the naval academy and remained there until 1874. In the latter year he was assigned to the Narragansett on special duty as astronomer of the north Pacific survey. For the next three years he was engaged on this duty. From 1878 to 1881 he was stationed on the Alaska of the Pacific station.

In 1885 he was advanced to lieutenant commander. From 1887 to 1890 he commanded the Palos on the Asiatic station. In the latter year he was promoted to commander. For the next four years he was attached to the naval academy. In 1897 he was hydrographer of the navy. He was promoted to the grade of captain in 1899. In 1900 he was assigned to the command of the cruiser Albany and was on her through the most of the Filipino rebellion. In 1904 and 1905 he was captain of the Norfolk navy yard. He was advanced to the grade of rear admiral in the latter year.

PREDICTS FALL OF EMPIRE

Alfred Stead, son of the noted editor, W. T. Stead, predicts the downfall of the British empire. Stead, Jr., is himself a writer, traveler and world politician of distinction. He was the first Englishman to cross Manchuria on the new Russian railroad. He is one of the best informed among the British on conditions in the colonies. In referring to the forthcoming conference of the premiers of British colonies in London he said:

"I see no way of preventing the empire from going asunder. We have taught the colonies independence too well. Canada is entirely without need of our support. South Africa is abundantly able to take care of itself. Australia and New Zealand, being more exposed than the other self-governing colonies, will be last to break away, but even they will go when they can do so with impunity."

Eastern politics—the bugbear of the diplomatist—is meat and drink to young Stead. He has been for years a personal friend of the emperor, Marquis Ito and all the Japanese potentates.

A distinguished Australian statesman, speaking at the time of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, said:

"Alfred Stead has had more to do with the conclusion of the treaty than any one else in England."

In a word, what Alfred Stead does not know about far eastern politics is scarcely worth mentioning.

Mr. Stead married a Boston girl, Miss Hussy. Mrs. Stead accompanies her husband on many of his eastern journeys.

COLLEGE PROFESSOR—AGED 27

It is seldom indeed that a man is made a full professor at 27 years of age. Such, however, is the case of William Trufant Foster, who is professor of English and Argumentation at Bowdoin college. At a very early age Mr. Foster made up his mind to become a teacher of English. From childhood he struggled to this end against conditions which would have appalled a less determined person.

At college he worked at 20 different occupations to pay his expenses. Many times his future seemed hopeless, but he was undismayed and he would not accept any charity. All the time, besides earning his own expenses he was supporting a widowed mother. He read gas meters, shingled barns, tutored, wrote for the papers and magazines, coached debating teams, worked as gardener, acted as an agent for an engraving firm, edited a weekly paper during the summer, and worked on the college catalogue. In spite of all this, he found plenty of time to study, and throughout his college course he was a prominent member of the Harvard debating society.

In June, 1901, he was graduated near the head of his class of 600 with high honors.

Soon afterward he was elected instructor of English at Bates college; he was beginning to realize his ambition. But he was not satisfied to rest here. In 1904, having saved some money, he returned to Harvard and took the degree of master of arts. Then above 50 other candidates, he was chosen English instructor at Bowdoin college.

Round About New York

Gossip of People and Things in the Great Metropolis

NEW YORK.—Since the mendicancy squad was abandoned by Police Commissioner Bingham less than a year ago, practically throwing New York wide open to beggars, the streets swarm with impostors of every type and nationality, who ply their profession almost uninterruptedly. The mendicants impede traffic on the busy thoroughfares night and day and simply laugh at the unspecialized police efforts against them.

One rather surprising feature of the mendicancy problem in Gotham is that the largest number of beggars arrested are native-born Americans. According to James Forbes, executive officer of the committee of mendicancy, more than 1,000 beggars were arrested in Manhattan during the past year. Of this number almost 500 were native-born Americans. The statistics for the year before show the same large percentage of American-born "panhandlers." No reason has been exactly ascribed for this large number of American-born mendicants, but the condition is probably due in a large measure to the "wanderinst" in the blood of the young American.

There are many classes of "panhandlers" or "plingers," as they prefer to be called, in this town and the graft is easy for all of them. A good "flopper," which in the vernacular of the mendicant is a beggar who sits on the sidewalk and is either a cripple or a pseudo-cripple, can take in easily a dollar an hour on one of the good streets in the up-town section. A clever beggar who works Broadway, which in the vernacular of the mendicant is "plinging the main stem," makes a swell living out of his hard luck stories, while some of the big panhandlers on Fifth avenue and Broadway sometimes get as much as five dollars at a touch. In the Bowery and at the Battery the "plingers" usually let the pedestrians down easily with a dime "touch." They are the small fry of the business and ask only for the price of a drink or a bed or a few pennies to get a bite to eat.

FORTUNE OF STANDARD OIL KING NOT DWINDLING

BANKERS and business men who appear to be familiar with the affairs of the Standard Oil company are not inclined to believe that John D. Rockefeller's fortune has dwindled to a paltry $250,000,000 or $300,000,000. Ten years ago Mr. Rockefeller's wealth was estimated at several hundred million dollars by conservative interests in close touch with the Standard Oil company.

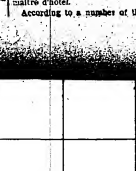
The statement recently issued to the effect that Mr. Rockefeller's income was never more than $20,000,000 a year does not harmonize with the announcement that he is worth less than $300,000,000.

Assuming that his income in the last ten years has been at the rate of $20,000,000 a year, and in this connection it can be said that Standard Oil dividends from 1900 to 1902 were much larger than they have been in the last few years, Mr. Rockefeller's income in the period in question was close to $200,000,000. This does not include accrued interest.

In brief, Mr. Rockefeller's income from 1897 to 1906 inclusive was almost equal to his present fortune based on the estimate of Frederick Gates. It would seem from Mr. Rockefeller's statement that John D. Rockefeller has about two-fifths of his fortune tied up in Standard Oil and the remaining three-fifths in other enterprises.

It is certain that Mr. Rockefeller has not reduced his fortune to any large extent through his many benefactions. As a matter of fact, his many disbursements in this connection have been small compared with his income.

The consensus of opinion is that Mr. Rockefeller has transferred a large percentage of his securities to his son and other members of his family. If such is the case, the statement that Mr. Rockefeller owns only 20 per cent of the capital stock of the Standard Oil company as compared with the popular estimate of 30 per cent cannot be disputed.



According to a friend of Mr. Rockefeller the latter is not a speculator, but an investor. For years he has been placing his income in gilt edge securities. The spare dollars remaining with safety deposit companies is said to be larger than that of any other individual in the world.

TO ORGANIZE CLUB FOR NEW YORK WOMEN ONLY

NEARLY everybody in New York is from somewhere else, and everybody brags of alien attachments. There are sons and daughters of every state in the union, and a few others, who in the office, on the street and at annual banquets sing the altogether desirableness of the elsewhere so loudly and insistently that the natives feel sorely tried and forgotten Gothamite wonders what can be the matter with elsewhere as a place of permanent residence. But there is a limit even to patience, and at last New York is to have a club for New Yorkers exclusively.

Credit for the scheme, like that for many another brilliant idea, belongs to a group of brave women who contend that it is just as creditable to be a native of New York as to be a native of any other old place. It is to be a woman's club in the strictest sense of the word, and the entertainment of man guests will be limited strictly to the second Sunday evening of each month. Whenever a member develops a case of masculine friendship she is required to register greater attention than that, she will be expected to take it elsewhere. The business meetings for the purpose of comparing notes on these and other affairs will be held on the third Friday of every month at the Hotel Ina in Longacre square. All the feminine host of the city is expected to join the club, which already has a membership past the half-hundred mark.

BELLAMY FINDS FAULT WITH OUR RESTAURANTS

BELLAMY, poulterer to King Edward VII., visited New York recently and paid special attention to the metropolitan restaurants. He visited every famous refectory in the city. Every one was subjected to his keen and critical observation. Now he has returned to England and stated that, in the main, the restaurants on his side of the Atlantic are better than ours.

The quality of our game and poultry is not good.

Our waiters are quick, but not so efficient in other ways as those abroad.

The restaurants here have not what Bellamy calls the ideal combination—an English manager and a French maitre d'hotel.

According to a number of the leading restaurant men of New York Bellamy's statements are in the main correct. That is the reminder that the poultry is justified is accepted without dispute. Regarding his other observations opinion in general coincides with his. It is pointed out that, while the constant hurry of the New Yorker makes the New York waiter alert, it not only impairs his efficiency in other ways, but plays ducks and drakes with the chef's department. If a theater-goer in Europe notes as New Yorkers do at a restaurant he would not be served. Here the bulk of the theater-going people calmly walk in for dinner at about 7:15 o'clock. They order elaborate dinners and expect to get them. Sometimes the diner puts his watch on the table to keep attendants on the jump. In Europe this would not be tolerated.

WORST OF FLOOD IS OVER AT PITTSBURG

CITY NOW IS COMPUTING AND REPAIRING THE HEAVY DAMAGE DONE.

Estimated at $9,337,000—Cincinnati Region Due for Further Rise of Waters—Great Distress at Marietta and Parkersburg.

Pittsburg, Pa., March 16.—With the rapid receding of the waters in the Monongahela, Allegheny and Ohio rivers which is taking place here, conditions are fast assuming normal proportions and the greatest and most destructive flood in the history of the city is at an end.

At nightfall Friday the approaches to the bridges were clear of water and several hours later street car service in the flood district was resumed. Thousands of suburbanites who had been stranded in the city since early Thursday were able to reach their homes.

At nine o'clock the rivers had fallen almost eight feet. At that hour the stage was 29 feet and dropping o half foot an hour.

Loss Nearly $10,000,000.

Immediately following the subsiding of the water the task of computing and repairing the damage was begun. A majority of the employes of the large manufacturing establishments here were temporarily thrown out of employment are endeavoring to put the plants in working order, and it is said that by Sunday all these establishments will resume operations.

Ten square miles were inundated. The loss in actual dollars will probably never be known, but an estimate thus far in Allegheny county may be summarized in the following table:

Loss in output of steel mills.....	$1,000,000
Loss in output of other industries.....	2,000,000
Loss in wages of employes.....	1,337,000
Estimated damage to industrial plants.....	2,500,000
Total.....	$9,337,000

Reports from all parts of western Pennsylvania are to the effect that the flood has subsided and efforts are now being made to clear up the wreckage. Railroad service which was demoralized by the high water is rapidly resuming.

Excitement was caused Friday by several fires. One which swept the Mount Washington district had to be dynamited on account of a shortage of water in the mains. The loss from both fires will not exceed $225,000.

Still Bad at Cincinnati.

Cincinnati, March 16.—Despite the fact that the weather throughout the Ohio valley was clear and cold Friday, and that the waters at the headwaters of the Ohio river were receding, Weather Forecaster Bassler predicted that the flood of last January would be exceeded at many points in the Cincinnati district. The waters at Point Pleasant, Portsmouth, Marietta, Parkersburg and other points are now above the flood stage and will continue to rise.

In Cincinnati the local rise has about disappeared, but the rise from above will soon begin to be felt here. According to Mr. Bassler, this water from above will bring about a ten-foot rise here by Saturday night. Sixty feet is assured, and the chances are that the limit will exceed the January flood, when the stage was 65.1.

Marietta in Darkness.

Marietta, O., March 16.—The city light plant has been flooded and the city was in darkness Friday night. There is a scarcity of food, as nearly all the groceries have been flooded. Only a few scattered provisions in the hill districts are able to supply the demand.

Parkersburg in Distress.

Parkersburg, W. Va., March 16.—Parkersburg is suffering as it never suffered before from the ravages of a flood. With a stage of 50 feet, the Ohio river continues to rise slowly and at least another foot is expected. For the first time since the waters came up the city was in darkness Friday night. Street car traffic is discontinued and trains are not either running into or from the city. Thousands of people are homeless and without food. A number of the residences in Beechwood and Riverside have been washed from their foundations and have floated down with the fast currents of the Ohio.

Two Families Drowned.

Steubenville, O., March 16.—Six to ten members of two foreign families are reported to the officials at Mingo Junction to have been drowned Friday in the flood. The houses floated away with their occupants. Every house on the east side of Mingo Junction is submerged and 1,000 people there are homeless. At Empire every house but three is submerged and 500 people are homeless.

WON'T FIGHT CREIGHTON WILL.

Disinherited Relatives Quieted by a Gift of $240,000.

Omaha, Neb., March 16.—The threatened contest in the will of Count John A. Creighton, the philanthropist, was settled Thursday by the contesting relatives of Count Creighton being given $240,000 by those to whom bequests were made. Of this amount, the five lawyers who were engaged to make the contest will receive $60,000. The contest was placed in the hands of these lawyers last Monday. The remainder of the $6,000,000 estate goes to other relatives and to charitable institutions.

CONSTITUTION UP TO DATE

NEW STATE OF OKLAHOMA WILL TRY OUT MANY REFORMS.

Document Full of Modern Ideas of Government Will Be Submitted to the People August 6.

Guthrie, Okla., March 16.—The only state constitution to be produced under modern conditions, that intended for the proposed new state of Oklahoma, has finally been drafted here. The constitutional convention finished its work Friday and adjourned after having been in session 115 days.

The constitution will be submitted to the people of the two territories at a special election on August 6. One of the last acts of the convention was to appoint a committee to solicit funds to pay the expenses of the election, the convention having exhausted practically all the money appropriated by congress.

The sentiment of the age is indelibly stamped upon the constitution, and if it is ratified some very modern applications of present-day reforms will be found in the new state.

The convention was overwhelmingly Democratic, being composed of 100 Democrats and 12 Republicans.

Probably the most important measure killed by the convention was the provision relative to separate coaches for whites and negroes, although the Democrats had been pledged to insert it. Woman suffrage was defeated by a few votes.

The initiative and referendum, patterned after the Oregon law, was adopted, as was a provision providing for the nomination of all state officers and United States senators by primaries.

Succession to state offices is prohibited and it is provided that the senate committee shall not be named by the lieutenant governor, but by the senate itself. A fellow-servant law is embodied in the constitution.

Corporations are prohibited from owning more land than is absolutely necessary in the operation of their business.

The issuance of watered stock is prohibited and the books of all corporations are made subject to inspection at all times.

A commission is appointed to negotiate the purchase of the segregated mineral lands in the Indian territory, valued at many millions of dollars, and state ownership and operation of the coal mines thereon is contemplated.

DEAD ON IENA NUMBER 103.

Remaining Magazines on French Battleship Will Be Exploded.

Toulon, March 16.—The thorough search of the interior of the battleship Iena completed Thursday afternoon, when the men engaged in this work penetrated to the engine room, where the number of bodies were found. Their faces were burned beyond recognition. It is now believed that all the bodies have been recovered. The number as given is 103.

The authorities have decided that it will be necessary again to flood the dry dock and to explode under water the contents of the central and forward magazines. The explosives then still constitute a grave danger, for, having been subjected to great heat, they are liable to be discharged if touched.

Brest, March 15.—There was another accident to a French warship off this port Thursday. During torpedo exercises the coast defense ship Fulmidable was struck and seriously damaged on the water line by a torpedo. Collision mats were at once applied in the vessel's side and she was towed into port in a sinking condition.

ORIENTAL LABOR EXCLUDED.

President Issues Order As Promised to 'Frisco Authorities.

Washington, March 15.—President Roosevelt Thursday issued an executive order directing that the Japanese or Korean laborers, skilled and unskilled, who have received passports to go to Mexico, Canada or Hawaii, and to come therefrom, be refused permission to enter the continental territory of the United States.

This is practically the final chapter, except so far as the question may be taken up in treaty negotiations with Japan, in the issues growing out of the differences with that country over the action of the San Francisco authorities in prohibiting Japanese school children attending the schools set aside for the Mongolians.

San Francisco, March 15.—Late Thursday one little Japanese girl, who had applied for admission to the Redding primary school, were admitted, after an examination as to their knowledge of the English language.

Kills Bride and Self.

BROAD TIRES NEEDED HERE.

RAIL CHIEFS WON'T CALL ON PRESIDENT

DECIDE THEY HAVE NOT PROPER AUTHORITY TO SPEAK FOR ALL RAILROADS.

Managers Not in Accord—Thomas, F. Ryan Praises Roosevelt's Attitude —New York Stock Brokers Cheer Because Panic Is Safely Over.

New York, March 16.—Messrs. McCrea, Mellen, Hughitt and Newman, the railroad presidents for whose visit to the White House J. Pierpont Morgan arranged before his departure for Europe, held a conference at the Grand Central station in this city Friday. The whole situation was canvassed with great care, and it was finally decided not to go to Washington.

It is understood that the reason for this conclusion was that the four gentlemen involved did not feel that they had any proper mandate from the railroad corporations to represent them. They felt that they could not assume the position of a self constituted commission to formulate or present the views of the hundreds of railroad companies, which in the main owned by millions of shareholders. They recognized that the railroad managers of the United States are not themselves in perfect accord, and that until some united course is adopted for securing a consensus of opinion, a visit to the president would be idle. At the conclusion of the conference the various presidents left for their homes.

Ryan Stands by President.

Thomas F. Ryan, when asked his opinion about the meeting arranged by Mr. Morgan, said:

"I believe that if Mr. Morgan's visit to the president is followed up as it should be by all of our great business interests, it will do much good. I also believe that the president's attitude towards corporations is much misunderstood by the general public. It is unfair to assume that it is his desire to hamper the business interests of the country. I am thoroughly convinced that he purposes to enforce the laws as he finds them upon the statute books, and I think the sooner the business interests of the country conclude to go to work with the president in solving the difficult problems that confront him every day, the sooner confidence will be restored and the business of the country move on without interruption. So far as general business is concerned, I believe it can be found with it is that it is too active."

Stock Brokers Happy.

An unusual scene was enacted on the floor of the stock exchange Friday just after the market had closed strong and buoyant, in sharp contrast to the demoralization of Thursday. Brokers gathered around the trading posts and cheered loudly in demonstration of their relief and satisfaction at the day's change in speculative sentiment from the panicky feeling of Thursday. Congratulations were exchanged all around the room on the fact that the crisis was over for the present. Without exception, had successfully passed through the severe declines in prices of the past two weeks, and hopes were generally expressed that the worst was over.

Friday's stock market opened very strong at much higher prices than Thursday's closing figures.

Gov. Deneen at Washington.

Washington, March 16.—Gov. Deneen and Attorney General Stead of Illinois, who were invited by President Roosevelt to come to Washington to confer with him, arrived in Washington Friday night. They will call at the White House Saturday.

Gov. Deneen stated that the president in his invitation did not mention what subjects were to be taken up at the conference, but it can be authoritatively stated that the railroad situation, especially the Harriman-Chicago & Alton deal, will be discussed.

LOUISVILLE STRIKE ENDS

STREET CAR MEN WILL RETURN TO WORK AT ONCE.

Agreement Is Reached While Wildest Riot of the Week Is at Its Height.

Louisville, Ky., March 15.—By a unanimous vote Thursday night the 800 striking union employes of the Louisville Railway company decided to accept the terms agreed upon by their executive committee and the officers of the company. All the strikers will go back to work and full service in the city and suburban lines operated by the company will be resumed by Friday noon.

The strike began at five o'clock last Sunday morning and caused a practically complete tie-up of all the company's lines while it lasted.

The negotiations for peace were resumed Thursday morning at the offices of the railway company at Twelfth and Jefferson streets, while the wildest riot that has occurred since the strike began was at its height only five blocks away. The roar of the mob and the occasional crack of a pistol could be plainly heard at the offices and doubtless hastened the negotiations.

The conference was participated in by President Misery of the railway company, the executive committee representing the strikers and committees from the commercial bodies, and the Greater Louisville exposition. After a lengthy discussion the company and the men come to terms conditional on their ratification by vote of the union.

The terms provide for an increase from 18 to 20 cents an hour for new men and 22 cents for all employes after the first year; 25 cents overtime; at least 30 minutes for lunch; all orders to be entered to their old positions and an open shop for the company in reference to the hiring of new men.

GOLDFIELD IS SHUT DOWN.

Business Men's Fight on Industrial Workers Is Started.

Goldfield, Nev., March 16.—Goldfield is in a state of excitement following the publication of the decision of the Business Men's and Miss Owners' association to shut the Industrial Workers of the World by closing down all mines and business until such time as the miners shall have seceded from the Industrial Workers. Guards are everywhere in the city, hundreds of deputy sheriffs are installed having been appointed ex officio.

It is learned on good authority that a Denver United States deputy marshals arrived in town last night and are watching developments. Governor Sparks is reported on the ground. The citizens have the assurance of every business house that they will have nothing further to do with the Industrial Workers of the World. All the stores were closed Friday afternoon, but it is probable that the saloons will be modified so as to permit the butchers to remain open for a time.

Three Men Implicated in Paving Scandal Fined at Columbus, O.

Columbus, O., March 15.—Three of the men indicted by the grand jury for accepting and giving bribes in connection with the Broad street paving, pleaded guilty Thursday when arraigned before Nelson Cannon, former manager of the Trinidad Paving company of Cleveland; Henry Fowler, former assistant city engineer, and Alfred Shoemaker, former city inspector.

Cannon, Beck and Shoemaker were fined as follows: Cannon, $650; Beck, $1,175, and Shoemaker, $200. No jail sentences were imposed.

The other indicted men pleaded not guilty.

Goldfield Mines Resume Work.

Goldfield, Nev., March 15.—Barring two or three street brawls, the last 24 hours have been quiet in Goldfield. The situation opened at midnight and most of the mines have resumed work, few, however, with a full complement of men.

HUMMEL'S STORY IS GIVEN THAW JURY

LAWYER TELLS OF AFFIDAVIT MADE BY MISS NESBIT AGAINST THAW.

Delmas Objects in Vain—Makes Witness Admit Facts About His Conviction for Conspiracy—Jerome's Expert Testimony All In.

New York, March 16.—With Attorney Delmas fighting him every inch of the way, District Attorney Jerome Friday secured from Abraham Hummel his complete story as to the affidavit which it is alleged Evelyn Nesbit Thaw made in the lawyer's office in 1903, charging Harry K. Thaw with beating her when she had told him that the statement that Stanford White had drugged and ruined her was not true.

The Hummel testimony came during the afternoon session of the trial and Mr. Delmas, first objecting broadly to Mr. Jerome's testimony, offered specific objection to each question put by the prosecutor. Justice Fitzgerald overruled every objection and Mr. Delmas had exceptions to the rulings noted on the records.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw was called to the stand in the effort of the defense to keep Hummel silent. She declared she had called upon Hummel in his professional capacity and to seek his advice as a lawyer. Stanford White had taken her to the lawyer's office with that end in view.

Justice Fitzgerald declared that, admitting the proposition of counsel and client, Mrs. Thaw had herself waived the professional privilege by taking the witness stand in the case and giving her version of what transpired at Hummel's office. The bond of secrecy, once removed, could not be reestablished.

Hummel Admits Conviction.

Unsuccessful in blocking Hummel's testimony, Attorney Delmas in cross-examining the witness brought from him the fact that he had been convicted in December, 1905, on a charge of conspiracy in the same courtroom in which Thaw is being tried. Hummel further admitted that two indictments of perjury are pending against him and that one of these indictments charges him with having caused a false affidavit to be made.

Mr. Jerome protested against the witness "being dragged through the humiliating details" of his trial, but Justice Fitzgerald declined to interfere.

Then Mr. Delmas asked Hummel if he had not heard the speech made by District Attorney Jerome when sentence was about to be imposed, where Mr. Jerome urged the court to pass the longest and heaviest sentence within its power upon Hummel as he "had been a menace to the community for 20 years." Justice Fitzgerald promptly sustained an objection to this and Hummel was not compelled to answer.

Mr. Delmas wanted to know if Hummel had any more recent business transactions with the district attorney, and asked if Mr. Jerome was pressing the charges against him.

"He certainly is," cold the witness with spirit.

Hummel Tells of Affidavit.

Hummel's testimony in brief was to the effect that Evelyn Nesbit told him, among other things, that Thaw had beaten her when she refused his pictures he had prepared charging Stanford White with her betrayal; that he had dictated a statement to her in the stenographer in the presence of Miss Nesbit and Stanford White; that he gave the affidavit to two of Miss Nesbit's friends to Miss Nesbit in the Madison Square Garden tower, and that the next day the man was returned to him with Evelyn Nesbit's signature attached. He kept the affidavit until Miss Nesbit called one day and demanded it. He refused to give it to her and turned it over to Stanford White, advising him to have a photographic copy made.

Hummel first said he had himself arranged for photographing the affidavit and that the photographer came to his office. A few moments later, however, he corrected himself, declaring that in this point, eeying he did not make the arrangements; that the photographer did not come to his office; and that he had not so testified. After Stanford White had the copy, he returned the original of the affidavit, the photographic negatives and the prints made from the negatives to Hummel, who swore that he subsequently delivered the original affidavit to Miss Nesbit and has not seen it since.

Was Signed by Evelyn.

Abraham Snydacker, one of Hummel's clients, was called, and said he took the affidavit to Mr. White's rooms in the tower and handed it to Miss Nesbit, pointed out to him as Miss Nesbit. She kept the affidavit for five minutes and signed it, saying she had read it before.
